It's a poor stick of a man who hasn't a few ideas and opinions of his own, and a still poorer one who hasn't the back bone to express them. Any man endeavoring to run a newspaper must necessarily have more or less ideas which he will express, as to the welfare of his community, the actions therein, improvements, needs, and the hundred and one other things which call for discussion. If he is to apologise for them, beg pardon for expressing them, and crawl on his knees in abject submission whenever an exception is taken to his views, he'd better get into something else; he hasn't the nerve to be in the public eye. And we're not slamming the Humboldt Republican either, and won't apologise should they take exception to these remarks.

When a newspaper makes a wrong statement, which may do harm or injury to any person, a "beg your pardon" should be given. And newspapers make mistakes—lots of them—We've made 'em too. A correction in such cases is right and ought to be made. But as for letting someone else dictate your opinions and expressions—if you aren't running your own business, say so and let someone else take the grief.

ANOTHER ORDINANCE

If Belmond, this summer, is to be what some folks appear to want it to be, we suggest that the new city administration pass another ordinance extending the city limits to take in the cemetery, and have the name of the town changed to Franklin Grove. Instead of the bus, have a hearse meet the trains. Let the undertakers extend the hand of welcome to strangers; and rather than sound the fire siren every noon, toll a bell. We believe in having things appropriate, and if the town exists as some would have it, these things will certainly be most appropriate.

Remove the electroliers, and in their place put tombstones. Run a long black ribbon to the top of the flag pole, that the world may have open evidence of our mourning. A row of cold, gray marble will be more appropriate than a White Way, and the American flag should never wave over a dead community. Let the Chamber of Commerce appoint a committee to place wreaths every Saturday night on the stones, and have the Good Fellowhhip meetings changed to funeral services. Fire the street commissioner and marshall, and hire another sexton. Get rid of the night watch—ghosts need no watching, fires will come later. Look at the money to be saved in lights and officials and improvements.

If the patrons of the bootleggers were given the same medicine by the courts as the bootleggers themselves get, prohibition would prohibit still more strongly.

The school board seems to have got in dutch with some Irish teachers—and some who aren't Irish.

Perhaps the lawmakers and enforcers think that the patron gets his in the stuff he buys. Some of them do, at any rate.

Another good thing about these radiophones, if you happen to cut in on a speech that proves to be dry, you can be cut out again. It has advantages.

A lot of folks who are weilding their hammers would make more noise by blowing their horns.

A scientific expedition is going to South America in search of a prehistoric monster reputed to be existing in the wilds there. It wasn't ho very long ago that worse looking specimens than this were seen in many small villages in America—B. P. A mighty hunter by the name of Volstead, however, seems to have killed most of them here.

BEAR BABIES TO GRAVES

When this photograph was taken in the province of Samara in the famine-stricken Volga valley of Russia, an effort was made to bury the dead. Children and their parents now are dying at such a rate, and the ground is frozen so hard, that burials are unknown. Bodies are stacked up like cordwood, after first being stripped of their clothes. The American Committee for Russian Famine Relief, 405 Steinway building, Chicago, and various other relief organizations are appealing for funds to relieve the catastrophe in Russia, which threatens to take a toll of life as great as the black death did in the Fourteenth century.

IOWA FARMERS DONATION TO NEAR EAST RELIEF MOVING TO SEABOARD THIS WEEK

The following letter received at Near East Relief Headquarters in Des Moines throws light on the enormous amount of foodstuff required to supply the needs of the orphans under the care of this organization in Armenia, Syria and Southern Russia.

Dear Mr. Montanus:

Simply as in indication of what is going on in many parts of the United States you will be interested to know that last week our Committees on the Pacfic Coast shipped contributed food stuffs to Armenia as follows:

332	Tons from Seattle
620	Tons from San Francisco
225	Tons from Los Angeles
1,177	Total

In addition to the above we have approximately 6,000 tons of supplies stored free of charge in government warehouses in Houston, New Orleans, Charleston and Brooklyn, and have under charter a steamer that will pick up 4,000 tons of these supplies, landing them at Batoum at $12.50 per ton for ocean freight, or total cost of probably less than 1c per pound for food supplies delivered in Batoum. We also have 24 carloads of free government hospital and medical supplies valued at about $200,000 from Fort Sill and Camp Jackson now enroute to the seaboard. We have this week, assurance of one shipload of 6,000 tons of corn from the government Russian appropriation, to be delivered at Batoum making a total of over 13,000 tons of food supplies now on the high seas or at seaboard ready for shipment.

Sincerely yours,
C. V. Vickrey,
General Secretary

The above, according to a statement given out by C. A. Montanus State Director, will be supplement by at least 50 tons of hominy grit, corn meal and other corn foods now being ground in Iowa mills. This corn was donated by Iowa farmers during the last two of three months and will be carried free of charge by the railroads to the seaboard before April 15th. While this all seems to be an enormous amount of food stuff it will not even be sufficient for one month for the feeding of the thousands of orphans in the orphanages and the thousands of refugees cared for by the soup kitchens and bread lines.

CLIPPINGS

About 10 o'clock last Wednesday night the fire whistle aroused the natives, says the Renwick Times. It was a stormy night and on account of the Woodman initiation and a feed a large number of homes had been left unguarded. At the sound of the whistle anxious mothers hurried home while the male population swarmed like bees to the fire station. A number of the fireman were attending the Woodmen doings and almost started a panic when they rushed from the hall. At the plant it was found that Bob Swanson had thoughtlessly pulled the rope to see what would happen. He found out a little later when a warrant was issued for his arrest and he was taken before Mayor Friday who required him to appear in court the following morning at which time he was adjudged debtor to the town in the amount of $42.50. The fine was really $20.00 and costs but Mr. Swanson was also called upon to pay another $20.00 which the town is required to pay the fire team for answering a call.

The needless blowing of the fire whistle is a very serious matter and could result in serious injury or possibly the loss of many lives in more ways than one. A person must be careful in playing jokes on the public; sometimes it turns out all right, and then again it may come high.

Autoists are certainly enjoying the paved roads to the east. The busses between here and Mason City are making the trips every day, but at Nora Springs they have been having trouble. There is a strip of two or three miles at Nora Springs where there is no paving and the busses have been going to the point where the paving stops, and here a big dray team has been hauling the loads across. Sunday one of the busses tried to go through, and before they got far from the paving they were suck so tight that it took four hours to get them out. The busses are a big convenience to many, but it is not wise to leave the paving in one of them at this time.—Garner Signal.

Farm Bureau News

Seed Corn Being Tested

Farmers are beginning to heed the note of warning which was sounded by the Ames Experiment Station regarding the low vitality of the seed corn in certain sections of the state as a result of the dry rot mould which seems to have affected this seed corn in many sections.

The county agent originally planned to test five samples of seed corn from each township, but as it stands at present as high as fifteen to twenty samples have been sent from some of the townships for a report on the germinating qualities of the corn. The test is being made on the samples this week and results of the test will be sent to individual farmers who contributed samples of corn to the county-wide test.

Feeding Little Chicks

Excellent results can be obtained by keeping buttermilk or clabbered skim milk before the little chicks from the time they are first placed around the brooder until they are a least four weeks old—and longer if you can obtain the milk. During this period the chicks will thrive better without any water to drink.

After the chicks are forty-eight to sixty hours old fine scratch feed can be fed. This can either be a good grade of commercial chick feed or a homemade mixture of equal parts by weight of rolled oats, corn cracked fine, and cracked wheat. This scratch feed can be fed five times a day for the first day or two—giving the chicks all they will eat up readily each time.

Then a dry mash can be placed before the chicks, made up in these proportions: 3 lbs wheat bran, 2 lbs. corn meal, 1 lb dried buttermilk, ½ lb. bone meal, ¼ lb. charcoal.

The charcoal may be omitted after the chicks are two weeks old. If the chicks do not eat the hash readily, it can be fed once or twice a day moistened with buttermilk.

Treatment for Seed Potatoes

Treat Seed Before Cutting

Hot solution—add two pints formaldehyde to each thirty gallons of water. Heat to 122 degrees F. and soak seed two minutes. Cover one hour and dry. The treatment can be carried out by using a large tank and steam to heat the solution. For use where large quantities are to be treated.

Cold solution—add one pint formaldehyde to thirty gallons of water. Soak the seed two hours and dry.

Urge Repeal Cummins-Esch Law

Absolute and unqualified repeal of the obnoxious Section 15-A of the Cummins-Esch law was urged by official representatives of eight middle-West Farm Buureau Federations in conference at St. Paul, March 11. The solution reads:

"We, the officers of the State Farm Bureau Federation of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Illinois and Michigan, assembled in St. Paul, March 11, 1922, in accordance with resolutions adopted at our respective annual state meetings, urge the immediate repeal of Section 15-A of the Transportation Act in its entirety, and urge the restoration of the full powers of the State Railway Commissions as they existed prior to federal control of the railroads. We, therefore, instruct Mr. Cunningham to read this resolution into the records of the committee."

The resolution was signed by C. W. Hunt, President of the Iowa Federation; S. H. Thompson, vice president of the Illinois Agricultural association; J. F. Reed, President of the Minnesota Federation; H. Georgeson, president of the North Dakota Federation; J. H. Norton, president Nebraska Federation; A. H. Stafford, president Montana Federation; Geo. Starring, president South Dakota Federation; J. I. Nichol, president Michigan Federation.

Will Open Selling Agency Soon

Arrangements will soon be completed for opening the doors of the Producers' Livestock Commission association in Chicago. In matters of control, operation, etc., this selling agency will be indentical in character with the commission concern opened at St. Louis the first of the year, and which has enjoyed such success.

Early in March a meeting was held in Chicago, and the following men were chosen as directors for the Chicago agency: J. W. Crabb and W. B. Elliot of Illinois; Geo. McKerrow, of Wisconsin; A. Sykes, Martin Sar and Frank Coyne, of Iowa. These men will name still another to act as director number seven, preferably some man from the northwest, in order to represent the stockmen of that section.

The directors named met in Chicago March 24-25 and organized for business. A. Skyes was elected president; Mr. McKerrow vice president and Mr. Crabb chosen to act as secretary-treasurer. Many applications for positions of manager and salesmen for the new firm were received all of which were placed on file for future action. The directors realized that much depends upon the man chosen to manage the undertaking, and expect to give this phrase of the work very careful consideration before announcing a decision, especially since the man they decide on will have to meet the approval of the official board on the National Livestock Producers' association.

President Sykes was instructed to cooperate with Mr. Simpson the temporary manager of the National Livestock Producers' association, and to proceed at once to make the necessary arrangements toward securing office room, yard space, etc., at the stock yards. There is much to be done. It was expected that the new concern would be able to get under way about the first of April, and is now announced; but various matters coming up made it necessary to postpone the opening date to the last of May or the first of June.

Corn Borer Warning and Quarantine

Whereas, it has been found that a dangerous insect pest known as the European corn borer (Pyrausta nubilalis) infests certain area in the eastern part of the United States and in Ontario, Canada, and,

Whereas, this insect, wherever it becomes established, causes great damage to corn and other plants such as are grown extensively in Iowa, and,

Whereas, the spread of this insect is rapid and its eradication is extremely difficult and it easily might be introduced into Iowa by shipments of seed corn or certain plants from infested areas.

Now, therefore, I. F. A. Fenton, acting state entomologist,

(By virture of the power and authority in me vested by the provision of the Iowa crop pest law, as amended by the Thirty-eighth General Assembly;

Hereby give notice to all persons within the state of Iowa that the above mentioned European corn borer does exist and constitutes a dangerous crop pest and it easily may be carried into the State of Iowa on seed corn or certain plants, and to protect the corn crop of Iowa and other crops grown on the farms and in the gardens of Iowa;

It is hereby ordered that no person, firm, or corporation shall receive, ship or accept for shipment, transport, sell or offer for sale, give away, deliver, plant, or permit to exist on his or its premises: (1) Corn and broom corn (including all parts of the stock) all sorghums, sudan grass, celery, green beans in pod, beets with tops, spinach, rhubarb, oat and rye straw as such or when using as packing, cut flowers or entire plants of chrysanthemums,, aster, cosmos, zennia, hollyhocks, and cut flowers or entire plants of gladiolas, and dahlia, except the bulbs thereof, without stem, from infested areas in Massachusetts and New Hampshire;

(2) Corn and broom corn (including parts of the stalk,) all sorghums, and sudan grass from infested areas in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan,

Provided, that plants or plant products covered by this quarantine may be admitted to the state of Iowa when they shall have been manufactured or processed in such a manner as to eliminate risk of carriage of the European corn borer; or have (b) a permit from the United States Department of Agriculture and certified to be free from the European corn borer, and are contained in a car, box, bale or other container to which is attached (a) a certificate showing that the contents, or the premises or districts from which they came, have been inspected by the United States Department of Agriculture and found to be free from European corn borer infestation; or (b)permit from the United States Department of Agriculture showing that they are originated outside the infested area.

Provided, further that whenever future amendments are made by the United States Department of Agriculture to regulation three of federal horlcultural quarantine, number 43, defining the area infested with the European corn borer, this quarantine shall govern and apply to shipments from the area so defined.

Done in the City of Des Moines, Iowa, this 21st day of March, 1922
--F. A. Fenton, Acting State Entomologist

RUSSIAN HORRORS INCREASING WITH SPRING

Chicago—Reports from the famine region in Russia, reaching the American Committee for Russian Famine Relief, 405 Steinway building, Chicago, state that the horror in the Volga valley has been increasing with the spring thaws.

As the snow melts, countless bodies are being uncovered. Decomposition has set in and the dangers of a sweeping epidemic are increased, due to the inability of the survivors to bury the bodies fast enough.

The crisis in the famine will be reached in a few weeks, reports indicate. Cannibalism is becoming more common in the province of Samara, the district served by the American Friends Service committee, better known as the Quakers.

News dispatches from Deretoice, Poland, quote Anna Nikiforoff, a school teacher from Samara, who recently escaped from Russia.

"I come from the village of Dosnaya-Neutchica, what is known as the 'dark village,' because of the intense ignorance of the people," she said. "Cannibalism is no secret there nor in the surrounding district.

"Grass roots, old skins and ground bones have gone,, and it is a question of cannibalism or death. It you were there you would understand.

"In the neighboring village of Slavnitza, through which I passed in leaving Russia, a peasant woman told me three of her eight children had died and to save the survivors she fed them with the dead.

"The government is doing its best to check cannibalism and tries to bury the dead, but in the country, where every other edible thing is gone, it is impossible to prevent it."

Officers of the American Committee for Russian Famine Relief denounced politicians responsible for the circulation of false reports that there is no longer need of feeding the starving in Russia.

THE HOME MAN

"Tied to his wife's apron strings," is what the gang said of a certain citizen, who was seen walking down the street pushing the baby cab the other evening.

There has ever been a spirit of contempt in the manner in which the "home man" is regarded by some of his acquaintances, and there is an underlying vein of sarcasm in the comments of some as they refer in withering scorn to those of their fellow men who are perhaps in every way their moral and intellectual superiors.

The "home man" is the good man, and the more time he spends at home with his family after his day's work is done, the more it is to his credit and eternal happiness. The gay fellow who spends his time away from home as much as possible with a coterie of equally gay associates, lives the foolish life of the butterfly, which is devoid of benefit to himself or anybody else, and which, when it has been lived, has made no one any better.

The "home man" who spends his leisure at home with his wife and little ones, or, if he is unmarried with his mother and sisters, is the sensible man, the man for whom life holds something broader and better than the shams and so-called pleasures of a butterfly existence.—Exchange.

The embarrased youth to the maid replied,

You might show us all of your nice,

Hogs are bristling up again.

The price on Deering Standard twine is much lower now than it has been in over five years. Right now the difference in price between the best and the poorest twine is a mighty small item. Yet the difference in quality is just as great as ever. Do not experiment with poor or low-grade twine. Order your twine now—from us.

STANDARD
DEERING

Be firm in the belief that every one's goodness outshines his faults.

You would think that work was an automobile by the way some people try to dodge it.

We still have a good supply of garden seeds and onion sets.

DO THE JOB RIGHT

The most important machine used in raising corn is the corn planter. No other machine should be brought with greater care or used with greater confidence. On it depends the possibility of growing maximum yields. Good planting means an even stand, and an even stand is essential to a bumper crop. Avoid missing hills, scant hills, and cracked seed by using a Hayes or International corn planter. Let us show you these planters—you'll like them.

A great, great deal has been said about the weather, but very little has ever been done.

The watch word of the day is SPEED in getting the crops planted on time. This has been a late spring and a number of our friends have been buying new equipment to help speed up their work. The latest is Mr. W. D. Schlieffarth, one of Belmond township's progressive farmers who has just purchased an E-B 12-20 tractor. This is the second one of these tractors he has purchased. The next time you are in Walt's neighborhood stop in and look over his complete line of power farm equipment.

Be a promoter of smiles and cheerfulness, and declare dividends of brotherly love and good will.

Don't forget that we sell the Minnesota paints—Murphy's varnishes and Johnson's wax for that job of Clean Up and Paint Up.

Are you boosting the Sugar Factory?

Don't forget to test that seed corn. Your county agent will help you.

ACT QUICKLY

Only a few weeks more—until May 1st—and then the free plow offer with each Titan 10-20 and International 8-16 tractor will be a thing of the past. We have no assurance that this offer will be extended by the Harvester Company, consequently you should act quickly and take advantage of this opportunity. See us the next time you are in town. If you have a suitable plow we will give you instead—free an International leverless tractor disk harrow. Both tractors are complete with platform, fenders, lugs, brakes, belt pulley and governor.

A BLESSING

The following card of thanks recently appeared in a Kansas paper:

"I wish to thank the city authorities for quarantining my family and me for three weeks recently because one of them had small-pox. During that time my wife caught up with her sewing; we had three square meals a day, as no one came in and she was not premitted to leave; we enjoyed three weeks of good night's sleep; and best of all, a cousin with four children had arranged to visit us, saw the smallpox sign on the door, and left town so scared she will never come back again. So for these and other blessings we are very thankful for the quarantine."

ON THE SQUARE

Charles Van Housen

When the hard gruelling contest is ended,
And the ozone is full of the cries
Of the guys in the stand who beat the glad hand
As the judges award you the prize,
While you push out your chest proud and peppy
In the glow of the spotlight's bright glare—
If they knew every play that you made, would they say
"He won—and he won on the square?"

And what hap if it be your ill fortune
To stand with the guys who have lost
And to struggle like sin to stage a brave grin
As you figure just all that it cost?
Won't it lighten the pain of your losing
And make it far easier to bear
If you truly can say, as you check every play;
"I lost—but I lost on the square?"

There are plays the best referee misses,
In spite of the best he can do.
If the dust of the flight keeps you out of his sight
And he can't keep his peepers on you!
Ah, its then comes the test of your honor!
It's the test that no other can share!
God grant you may say at the end of the play
"I played—and I played on the square!"

Old sport!—in this battle called "living,"
What matter the praise or the blame?
Keep your eyes on the prize that's awarded the guys
Who are true to the rules of the game!
It's a prize of a conscience unsullied
And a record that's spotless and fair!
So here's to the toast: "Be it ever our boast—
Win or lose—but we play on the square!"

THE HUMBOLDT CREAMFRY IN ADV. CAMPAIGN

Republican: In this issue on page seven, is an adv. for the Humboldt Creamery Co. which has adopted new methods that allows it to pay three cents more for butter fat than it has been able to pay in the past. It explains this new method on page seven, and will follow this adv. with a campaign that will tell the public some of the things they ought to know.

This company is working into a vaulable and permanent trade, and believes in publicity to get its side of every question before the people. Such things work for a better understanding between the buyers and the sellers, and make better business in the long run.

Walter C. Ramsey, secretary of state, ought not have any opposition for re-nomination to that office, but two inferior applicants are said to be out after the job. It is said that the public would always receive better public service if it appreciated the work done by those who render real service. Here is a good chance for the public to make good with themselves. Walt Ramsey, who has held the office of secretary of state one term should have been accorded a re-nomination by acclamation. He has more than earned the good will of the public by his superior administration of the affairs of that office. His home is at Belmond, and Franklin county folks feel a very kindly interest in their Wright county neighbors anyway.—Chronicle.

A base ball league of amateur teams is proposed, and it is declared that Humboldt is in it. The West Bend Journal states that the league is composed of teams from Fort Dodge, Humboldt, West Bend, that Palmer, Gilmore, Traer and Thor, with the three other teams.

Base ball will be played on Sundays as league games, and the teams will play for themselves on week days. It will be allowable for the teams to hire a battery but the balance of the team must be composed of home players. It is stated that the season will start April 30. It is hoped that the towns can get together on teams that will not prove a disgrace to the communities they represent. The home boys are all right, but some of the professionals that are imported are not fit to represent any town.—Humboldt Republican.

The city fathers were out looking for gravel one day last week. Their auto became stalled in the mud, so all lent a helping hand in putting sticks, posts, broken tile etc under the wheels, some of which were not entirely buried. One of the Wisner twp. fathers was quite angry about it, but nothing was done except that a lot of hot air was wasted. The city fathers are still looking for gravel but have decided to wait until the roads get better before they take their next trip.

DRUM
by William MacHarg and Edwin Balmer
Illustrations by Irwin Myers

NEAR the northern end of Lake Michigan, where ore-carriers and wheat-laden steel freighters from Lake Superior push out from the Straits of Mackinac and dispute the island divided channel with white and gold, electric lighted, wireless equipped passenger steamers bound for Detroit and other cities, there is a copse of pine and hemlock back from the shingly beach. From this copse—dark, blue, primeval, silent at most times as when the Great Manitou ruled his inland waters—there comes during storms a sound like the booming of an Indian drum. This drum beats, so tradition has long maintained, whenever the lake takes a life.

Men say they have heard and counted the beatings to the exact number of crew and passengers lost in various sinkings of ships. Once only, it is said, has the drum counted wrong.

This belief in the drum and a case in which the beatings failed to tally with the records of men, forms the basis for an absolutely fascinating story of mystery, to be printed as a serial in these columns.

SCHOOL NOTES

The three lower rooms gave an Easter program in the Methodist church last Friday afternoon. The several numbers were well rendered.

Miss Thomas has been absent the past week, owing to a bad case of quinsy. The case was taken to the Park Hospital last Friday. She is improving rapidly and is expected home sometime this week.

The class sermon and service will be given at the Evangelical church Sunday evening May 21.

It will be a union service, Rev. Schlesselman and his choir having charge of the services and Rev. Pankuk will give the sermon.

Commencement for the Seniors will be Tuesday evening May, 23. Rev. Robert L. Stewart of Spencer will deliver the address.

Mrs. Muller and Mr. Ruigh will have charge of most of the music.

The Seniors class play will be given Friday evening May 19. The Junior class play will be given Fridey evening May 5.

The eighth grade will have a class night for their commencement, Wednesday evening May 24 or possibly Thursday May 25.

The Seniors will hold a class night, and give a program to suit.

Our next tests will be final and pupils who lose a day every now and then cannot expect to pass grades as the regulars. Promotions are not made on examination alone. They must have good attendance, good class records, and good deportment.

County Supt. Newcomb has arranged for our base ball team to meet the Plymouth team on field day at Mason City for a championship game.

Friday April 28 will be observed as Arbor Day. All who are in sympathy with beautifying the city and school grounds are cordially invited to come and help plant a tree on the new school grounds. Trees will be planted in honor of classes, leading citizens, the Legion boys and great men. Let us make this an Arbor Day in earnest. If we all get the true idea it will be of good. Why not make one hundred trees.

The trees will be planted so as not to interfere with a new building and under the direction of the Board and with a view of landscape.

An appropriate program will be given at 1 p. m. and the afternoon to planting trees.

Bring a tree, plant a tree or dig a hole, or boost.

HIS NAME WAS IRISH BUT HE WAS DUTCH

Oh Paddy dear, and did you hear
The latest news what am?
They say that Micheal Fleming
Was born in Amsterdam!

We thought he was an Irishman,
He always posed as such;
But now this "Son of Erin's Isle"
Confesses he is dutch!

It's the toughest proposition
The world has ever seen,
To think that we should see the Dutch
A wearing of the green!

We'll have to grin and bear it,
But is was an awful blow;
They'll soon be raising sauerkraut
Where shamrocks used to grow!

Town Clerk.

To Buy Fair Grounds

A movement was started last week with the view of organizing a stock company for the purpose of owning the fair grounds, not for fair purposes necessarily, but as a park and athletic grounds. If Clarion is ever to have such a tract of grund something must be done about it at once. Afer being out an hour or so the committee found twenty men and firms willing to back the project to the extent of $100 and only a portion of the town was canvassed. Those who favored the project were: H. H. Fritze, Mike Mariga, O. P. Morton, John Lynch, W. F. Smith, Chas. McDonald, James Russel, J. H. Sams, G. E. Linebarger, W. K. Roosevelt, F. S. Thornley, F. P. Wilson, H. M. Stanbery, Chas. Shupe, T. R. Hood., Stark Bros., Burt Harwood, Crowe & Sons, Jesse Smith & Son, A. H. Ziegler. Many others are known to favor the proposition.

(Held over from last week.)

Obituary of William F. Nolte

William F. Nolte second son of the late Charles and Hannah Nolte was born at Lyons, Wayne county N. Y., on January 12, 1865 being 57 years and three months old at the time of his death, which occured at Cherokee.

Mr. Nolte was married on July 31, 1890 to Nora Clark who died in 1917. To their union were born two sons; Clark W. and Charles F., the former living at Clear Lake and the latter at Mason City.

Mr. Nolte leaves to mourn his death his two sons and nine brothers; Charles F. of Algona, George H. of Minneapolis, Edward H. of Kenosha, Wisc., Frank, Fred, John, Albert, Julius and Earnest who reside in and around Goodell.

George and Edward were not present at the funeral.

The funeral was conducted from the U. B. church by Rev. Miller on Friday at 3:30.

Progressive Club

The April meeting of the North Avery Progressive club met Friday evening at the home of Thomas Nelson Jr. The meeting was called to order by the President, J. J. Cook. Minutes of the last meeting were read by Mrs. Arnold, secy. After the general business meeting, Mrs. Sherwood, chairman of the entertainment committee had charge of the program which was opened by Scripture reading and song in memory of the Crucifixion.

J. J. Cook gave an interesting talk on selection of the seed potatoes. C. E Arnold spoke on the importance of spraying the fruit trees.

Mrs. J. J. Cook gave a piano solo for the closing number.

Refreshments were served. The next meeting will be held at the home of C. E. Arnold, May 26th.

LAND VALUES

We often hear the question asked "what is land worth?" and the question is answered by giving the selling price. Many believe this governs or answers the question. This, however, is not correct; the value of land can only be figured by taking into consideration what the land will produce and what such products will total when turned into dollars. To this should be added the value of what it is worth to have a home of your own, which you can improve according to your own ideas.

In the year 1881 a 236 acre farm adjoining town was sold for $1183.00, but the land was allowed to go back to the former owner. The new owner believed that it was not worth the price paid.

About 25 years ago a certain 120 acre tract was purchased for $35.00 per acre, by a man who held it for a few years and allowed it to go back to the former owner—taking the stand that he was not going to work for interest all his life. Two years ago this same man purchased the same tract for $200.00 per acre. Now he says it is not worth it. How does he know? He failed to know what the value was 25 years ago. 40 years ago the first man did not know the value of the 236 acre farm. How does it come that people know more now about land values than they did 25 and 40 years ago? They don't.

Some of those with bolshevik tendancies claim land is not worth $50.00 per acre. How do they know? They don't. It is true that land sells for much less in Russia, but who wants to go to Russia?

No one is able to predict what the value of our land will be in the future; the price that the farmer receives for his products and more bushels per acre, are the factors that will govern.

The prophets of 2000 years ago were more accurate than they are now so lets forget about being so positive about things that are to happen. Two years ago Liberty bonds sold as low as $87.00; today all issues are near par or above. The fact is we don't know.

C. G. W. Men Discharged

Last week the section gangs and bridge and carpenter crews of the Great Western were notified that Hecker Construction Co. would hereafer employ all men in their departments. Effective April 1st the wages of section men were reduced from 37½ cents per hour or $18.00 for an eight hour per day week to 27½ cents or $16.50 per week of ten hour days. We understand practically all of the men have quit their jobs and that men from all creation are being shipped in to take their place. Such wages may be all right for Mexican labor, but it is hard to figure out how an American citizen can support his family in the ordinary necessities of life life and have anything left for the provebial rainy day. Why pick on the man already at the bottom? Why not begin higher up? Maybe this is the first step.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL

Next Sunday April 23rd we will hold our services in the English language, beginning at 2:00 o'clock Examination, Confirmation and Lord's supper will take place at this time. Everybody welcome.

C. J. Barth, Pastor.

M. E. CHURCH NOTES

Next Sunday we have Sunday school at 2 o'clock. Preaching at 3 o'clock. We had a fine time Easter and a large crowd out. After the program Rev. Wilkinson gave a fine illustration, with his sermon on the Resurrection of our Lord.

SCHOOL NOTES

Mr. Olani Peterson, a senior student from St. Olaf's College, visited our school last Tuesday. Mr. Peterson was the guest of his friend, Mr. Merle Hansen, during his brief stay here.

Those in charge of the school plays to be given in the near future, report excellent progress is being made. The high school play is 'Deacon Dubb.' The eighth graders put on "A Treasure from Egypt."

Miss Henrietta Pals of the seventh grade, while out walking last Sunday afternoon, received a badly sprained ankle. The injury was quite painful but fortunately not serious enough to interfere with her school work.

Last week's rainy weather and resultant bottomless roads, surely tried the patience of the drivers and the endurance of their teams. Fortunately they pulled through and school was permitted to continue. We hope the worst is past.

Just four weeks of school remains. What are you going to do for the youngsters during vacation? They would do well to join a Poultry club in order to consume their surplus energy in a useful and constructive manner. We have the enrollment cards and a list of pure bred poultry breeders from whom you may obtain eggs of your choice. Better hurry remember young chicks should have a good start before the first of June.

Examinations were given last Thursday and Friday. The reports as a whole were very satisfactory. Several pupils whose marks were bordering along the danger line, raised their grades to a position of apparent safety.

Several of the teachers spent the week end out of town. Miss Eickmeyer visited at her home in Sheffield. Misses Ruth and Alma Johnson were Mason City callers.

The seventh grade Home Economics girls treated their brethren in the wood working department to samples of their skill in the culinary art. This occured last Thursday afternoon. The boys wish to thank the girls hrough the medium of this column and also to announce that further advances along this line are welcome.

The movies for next Tuesday night, April 25th are "Through Life's Window" illustrating animated drawings, workings of the human eye, cause correction of eye defects, "In the Glory of the Past," a scenic taken in Mexico, and a comedy. We shall endeavor to put on at least two extra films at each of the remaining shows. Our first trial for the extra reels, will be on Tuesday April 18th. An extra admittance charge will be necessary in order to defray the extra expense. Your patronage is necessary to insure a continuance of the extras.

The Health Day program will be given on the evening of May 8th. This will consist of a program put on by the school, several movie films and a lecture. Admission free.

WATCH BIDDY'S RATIONS

That the breeding flock requires a ration which will furnish a full supply of egg producing materials but which will not force production or lay on excess of fat.

Unless the litter is deep and exercise stimulated, whole corn should not be fed too freely. "Cracked corn makes the hens work more and wheat and barley are less fattening in their nature. When hens take on excess fat it is manifest in the hard mass which may be felt in the abdominal region. Breeders require green for best results. When shut out from the range they should have grass and clover substitutes such as sprouted oats, cabbage leaves, roots, soaked alfalfa chaff, etc.

In cold weather water should be warmed and if the birds appear constipated epsom salts may be added to it. If a physic is needed a better method would be to dissolve the salts in warm water and mix up a mash with it. It is always advisable to supply gravel or grit of some sort for grinding material, as well as oyster shell and charcoal. These may be mixed together and fed in a hopper or in an open box.

War Declared on Rats

Citizens of Wright county have declared war on one of the most dangerous pests that we have—rats. The county farm bureau in cooperation with the various commerical clubs of the county is conducting a campaign against this pest which causes a loss of thousands of dollars in the state every year in various ways.

Boys! Get your guns, your rat traps and other instruments of death because the fight is on. Wright county has declared war against the rats of the county and the boy who can bring the highest number of rat tails to the county agent by May 20th, will be entitled to a liberal prize which is being arranged.

Boys, here's your chance to earn some easy money so get your ammunition and go after the rats. Remember anything is fair in war and you are allowed to use any means you see fit to kill the rats. All that is required is that you take the rat tails to the county agent's office at the end of each week. Now is the time to start. The contest is on and the date for the close of the contest has been set for May 20th.

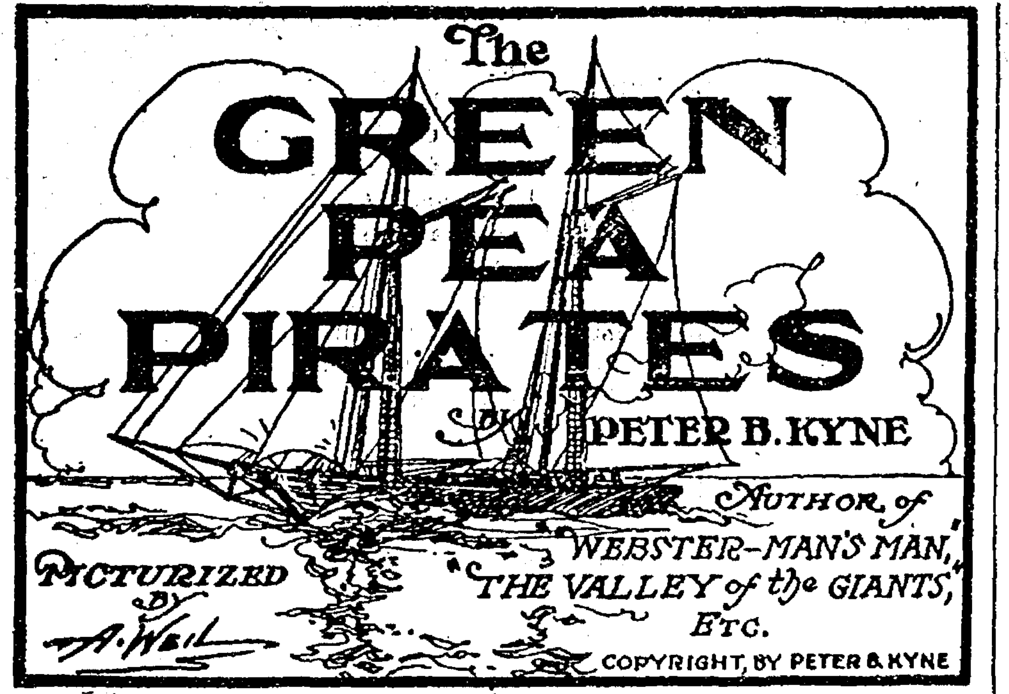
'They Satisfy'



SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I. — Captain Phineas P. Scraggs has grown up around the docks of San Francisco, and from mess boy on a river steamer, risen to the ownership of the steamer Maggie. Since each annual inspection promised to be the last of the old weatherbeaten vessel, Scraggs naturally has some difficulty in securing a crew. When the story opens, Adelbert P. Gibney, likable but erratic, a man whom nobody but Scraggs would hire, is skipper, Neils Halvorsen, a solemn Swede, constitutes the fo'castle hands, and Bart McGuffey, a wastrel of the Gibney type, reigns in the engine room.

CHAPTER II.—With this motley crew and his ancient vessel, Captain Scraggs is engaged in freighting garden truck from Halfmoon bay to San Francisco. The inevitable happens, the Maggie going ashore in a fog.

CHAPTER III.—A passing vessel hailing the wreck, Mr. Gibney gets word to a towing company in San Francisco that the ship ashore is the Yankee Prince, with promise of a rich salvage. Two tugs succeed in pulling the Maggie into deep water, and she slips her tow lines and gets away in the fog.

CHAPTER IV.—Furious at the deception practised on them, Captains Hicks and Flaherty, commanding the two tugboats, ascertain the identity of the "Yankee Prince" and, fearing ridicule should the facts become known along the water front, determine on personal vengeance. Their hostile visit to the Maggie results in Captain Scraggs promising to get a new boiler and make needed repairs to the steamer.

CHAPTER V.—Scraggs refuses to fulfill his promises and Gibney and McGuffey "strike." With marvelous luck, Scraggs ships a fresh crew. At the end of a few days of wild conviviality Gibney and McGuffey are stranded and seek their old positions on the Maggie. They are hostilely received, but remain. On their way to San Francisco they sight a derelict and Gibney and McGuffey swim to it.

CHAPTER VI.—The derelict proves to be the Chesapeake, richly laden, its entire crew stricken with scurvy. Scraggs attempts to tow her in, but the Maggie is unequal to the task and Gibney and McGuffey, alone, sail the ship to San Francisco, their salvage money amounting to $1,000 apiece.

CHAPTER VII.—Independently rich, our two adventurers still have a kindly feeling for the Maggie, and, his crew having deserted him, Captain Scraggs induces them to return. At an "old horse" sale the three purchase two mysterious boxes which they believe to contain smuggled "Oriental goods." They find, instead, two dead Chinamen.

CHAPTER VIII.—Scraggs seeks to "double cross" his two associates, but Mr. Gibney outwits him and makes a satisfactory financial settlement with the Chinese company to whom the bodies have been consigned, leaving Scraggs out in the cold.

CHAPTER IX.—Gibney resents McGuffey's action in lending money to Scraggs without consulting him, and after a terrific wordy combat the three separate, McGuffey becoming assistant engineer on an oil tanker, Gibney disappearing, and Scraggs, forced to lay up the Maggie, takes a subordinate position on a ferry steamer. Senor Lopez, Mexican revolutionist, makes Scraggs a generous offer for transportation of munitions to Lower California. Scraggs accepts, and the old Maggie is once more put into commission. Arriving at his destination, Scraggs finds his old companion, Mr. Gibney, is the consignee. Time having softened animosities, the reunion is joyful. Gibney plans to steal the ammunition and convey it to revolutionists in Colombia. On their way they are attacked by a Mexican gunboat, which they capture, though the Maggie is damaged so that it has to be destroyed. On the gunboat, to which they transfer, they find their old friend McGuffey acting as engineer.

CHAPTER X.—Our three adventurers form a "syndicate," with the gunboat, which they have renamed the Maggie II, as their base of operations. They sail for the South Sea islands, where they plan to obtain valuable black coral.

CHAPTER XI.—Going ashore with supposedly friendly natives, Gibney and Scraggs are taken prisoners, to be held for a cannibal feast.

CHAPTER XII.—McGuffey, believing his friends to have been killed, shells the island. Gibney and Scraggs escape, and reach the ship with two prisoners, the king of the island and his "prime minister." Utilizing the blacks as divers, the "syndicate" collects a valuable cargo of black coral and sails for home. With the double idea of punishing the cannibals for their treachery and having some fun with Scraggs, who is not fond of a fight, Gibney and McGuffey arrange a fistic combat with the prisoners, Gibney to fight one and Scraggs the other. The five land on a desert island, and while they are engaged in the fistic fun the steamer sails, leaving the five marooned.

CHAPTER XIII.—When the ship arrives in Honolulu, Neils Halvorsen, former member of the Maggie's crew, suspects foul play and, seizing the vessel while the white crew is ashore, obtains a crew of natives and sets out to find the owners, guided only by information he obtains from the ship's log. He reaches the island just in time to save the lives of his old friends.

CHAPTER XIV.—In reward for his services, Neils Halvorsen is made a member of the "syndicate." At Honolulu the cargo is sold for a large sum and the owners of the Maggie II, fearing the Mexican government might cause trouble over the captured gunboat, present the vessel to the treacherous mate who had left them marooned on the island. In San Francisco the corporation plans the management of its wealth. Gibney purchases a derelict which turns out to be loaded with codfish, seemingly worthless, and resenting the bitter criticism of his associates for wasting their money, that gentleman resigns from the "syndicate." He and Halvorsen join hands and McGuffey and Scraggs, in partnership, purchase a small schooner, the Victor, planning to engage in coastwise trade. Gibney makes a contract with Scraggs to ship five hundred tons of "agricultural stuff" on the Victor. The "agricultural stuff" turns out to be the codfish, which by this time is an advanced stage of decay, and the shipment naturally would make the Victor worthless for passenger service, which the owners had planned. After natural acrimonious exchange of personalities, Mr. Gibney relents and releases the owners of the Victor from their contract. Scraggs, however, refuses to be pacified and withdraws from the "syndicate," announcing his intention of engaging in "chicken farming." With McGuffey and Halvorsen, Gibney purchases a power schooner and the three sail for the South seas, presumably to engage in occupations dear to their adventurous souls.

"Turnin' farmer, Gib?"

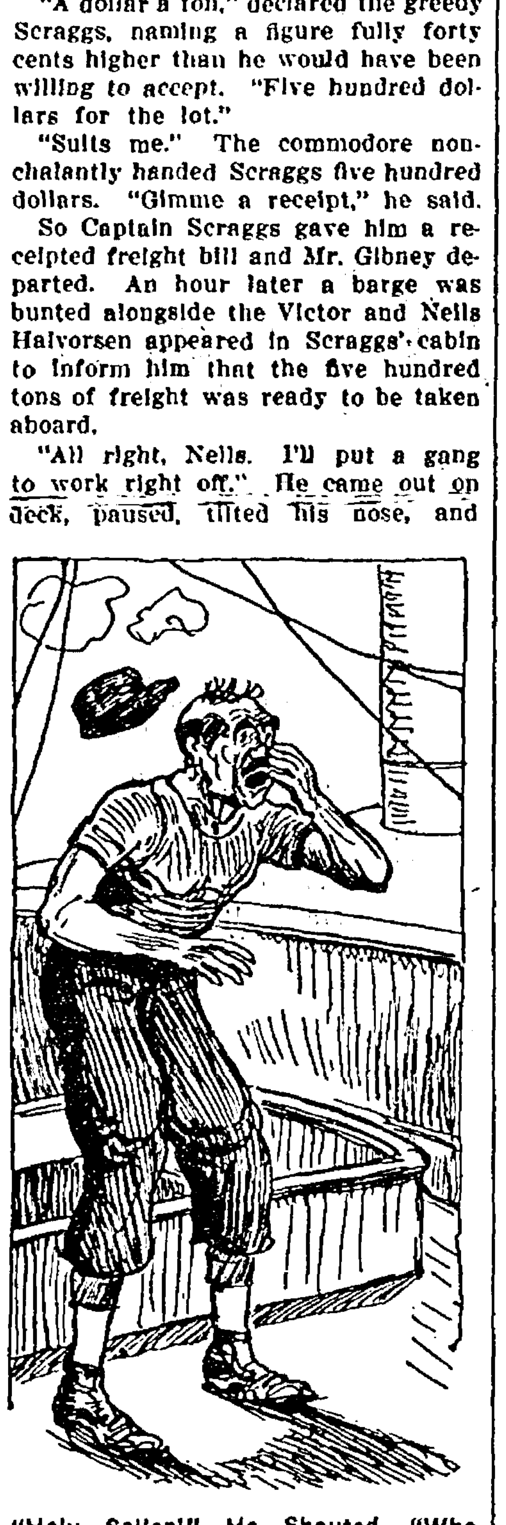
"Thinkin' about it a little," the commodore admitted. "What's your rate on this freight? It ain't perishable, so get down to brass tacks."

"A dollar a ton," declared the greedy Scraggs, naming a figure fully forty cents higher than he would have been willing to accept. "Five hundred dollars for the lot."

"Suits me." The commodore nonchalantly handed Scraggs five hundred dollars. "Gimme a receipt," he said.

So Captain Scraggs gave him a receipted freight bill and Mr. Gibney departed. An hour later a barge was bunted alongside the Victor and Neils Halvorsen appeared in Scraggs' cabin to inform him that the five hundred tons of freight was ready to be taken aboard.

"All right, Neils. I'll put a gang to work right off." He came out on deck, paused, tilted his nose, and sniffed. He was still sniffing when McGuffey bounced up out of the engine room.



"Holy Sailor!" He Shouted. "Who Uncorked That Atter o' Violets?"

"Holy Sailor!" he shouted. "Who uncorked that atter o' violets?"

"You dog-gone squarehead," shrieked Captain Scraggs. "You been monkeyin' around that codfish again."

"What smells?" demanded the mate, poking his nose out of his room.

"That tainted wealth I picked up at sea," shouted a voice from the dock, and turning, Scraggs and McGuffey observed Mr. Gibney standing on a stringer smiling at them.

"Gib, my dear boy," quavered Captain Scraggs, "you can't mean to say you've unloaded them gosh-awful codfish—"

"No, not yet—but soon, Scraggsy, old tarpot."

Captain Scraggs was on the verge of tears. "But, Gib! My dear boy! This freight'll foul the Victor up for a month o' Fridays—an' I just took out a passenger license!"

"I'm sorry, Scraggsy, but business is business. You've took my money an' you got to perform."

"You lied to me. You said it was agricultural stuff an' I thought it was plows an' harrers an' sich—"

"It's fertilizer—an' if that ain't agricultural stuff I hope my teeth may drop out an' roll in the ocean. An' it ain't perishable. It perished long ago. I ain't deceived you. An' if you don't like the scent o' dead codfish on your decks, you can swab 'em down with Florida water for a month."

Captain Scraggs' mate came around the corner of the house and addressed himself to Captain Scraggs.

"You can give me my time, sir. I'm a steamboat mate, not a grave digger or a coroner's assistant, or an undertaker, an' I can't stand to handle this here freight."

Mr. McGuffey tossed his silken engineer's cap over to Scraggs.

"Hop on that, Scraggsy. Your own hat is ground to powder. Ain't it strange, Gib, what little imagination Scraggsy's got? He'll stand there a-screamin' an' a-cussin' an' a-prancin'—Scraggsy! Ain't you got no pride, makin' such a spectacle o' yourself? We don't have to handle this freight o' Gib's at all. We'll just hook onto that barge an' tow it up river."

"You won't do nothin' o' the sort, Mac, because that's my barge an' I ain't a-goin' to let it out o' my sight. I've delivered my freight alongside your steamer and prepaid the freight an' it's up to you to handle it."

"Gib!"

"That's the programme!"

"Adelbert," crooned Mr. McGuffy, "ain't you got no heart? You know I got a half interest in the Victor—"

"O-oo-oh!" Captain Scraggs groaned, and his groan was that of a seasick passenger. When he could look up again his face was ghastly with misery.

"Gib," he pleaded sadly, "you got us where the hair is short. Don't invoke the law an' make us handle that codfish, Gib! It ain't right. Gimme leave to tow that barge—anything to keep your freight off the Victor, an' we'll pull it up river for you—"

"Be a good feller, Gib. You usen'ter be hard an' spiteful like that," urged McGuffey.

"I'll tow the barge free," wailed Scraggs.

Mr. Gibney sat calmly down on the stringer and lit a cigar. Nature had blessed him with a strong constitution amidships and the contiguity of his tainted fortune bothered him but little. He squinted over the tip of the cigar at Captain Scraggs.

"You're just the same old Scraggsy you was in the green-pea trade. All you need is a ring in yer nose, Scraggsy, to make you a human hog. Here you goes to work an' soaks me a dollar a ton when you'd be tickled to death to do the job for half o' that, an' then you got the gall to stand there appealin' to my friendship! So you'll tow the barge up free, eh? Well, just to make the transaction legal, I'll give you a dollar for the job an' let you have the barge. Skip to it, Scraggsy, an' draw up a new bill, guaranteein' to tow the barge for one dollar. Then gimme back $499.00 an' I'll hand you back this receipted freight bill."

Captain Scraggs darted into his cabin, dashed off the necessary document, and returning to the deck, presented it, together with the requisite refund, to Mr. Gibney, who, in the meantime, had come aboard.

"Whatever are you a-goin' to do with this awful codfish, Gib?" he demanded.

Mr. Gibney cocked his hat over one ear and blew a cloud of smoke in the skipper's face.

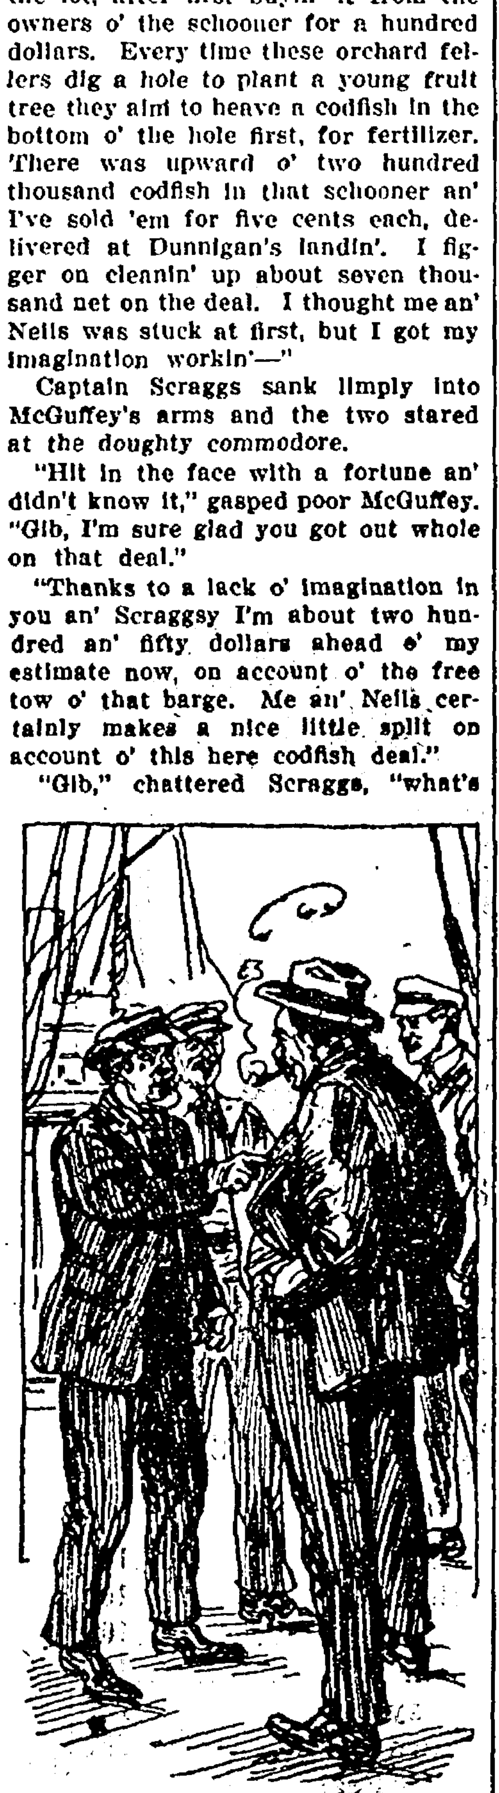
"Well, boys, I'll tell you. Salted codfish that's been under water a long time gets most o' the salt took out of it, an' even at sea, if it's left long enough, it'll get so darned ripe that it's what you might call offensive. But it makes good fertilizer. There ain't nothin' in the world to equal codfish, medium ripe, for fertilizer. I've rigged up a deal with a orchard comp'ny that's layin' out a couple o' thousand acres o' young trees up in the delta lands o' the Secramento. I've sold 'em the lot, after first buyin' it from the owners o' the schooner for a hundred dollars. Every time these orchard fellers dig a hole to plant a young fruit tree they aim to heave a codfish in the bottom o' the hole first, for fertilizer. There was upward o' two hundred thousand codfish in that schooner an' I've sold 'em for five cents each, delivered at Dunnigan's landin'. I figger on cleanin' up about seven thousand net on the deal. I thought me an' Neils was stuck at first, but I got my imagination workin'—"

Captain Scraggs sank limply into McGuffey's arms and the two stared at the doughty commodore.

"Hit in the face with a fortune an' didn't know it," gasped poor McGuffey. "Gib, I'm sure glad you got out whole on that deal."

"Thanks to a lack o' imagination in you an' Scraggsy I'm about two hundred an' fifty dollars ahead o' my estimate now, on account o' the free tow o' that barge. Me an' Neils certainly makes a nice little split on account o' this here codfish deal."

"Gib," chattered Scraggs, "what's the matter with reorganizin' the syndicate?"



"Gib," Chattered Scraggs, "What's the Matter With Reorganizin' the Syndicate?"

"Be a good feller, Adelbert," pleaded McGuffey.

Mr. Gibney was never so vulnerable as when one he really loved called him by his Christian name. He drew an arm across the shoulders of McGuffey and Scraggs, while Neils Halvorsen stood by, his yellow fangs flashing with pleasure under his walrus mustache.

"Scraggsy! Mac! Your fins! We'll reorganize the syndicate, an' the minute me an' Neils finds ourselves with a bill o' sale for a one-quarter interest in the Victor, based on the actual cost price, we'll tow this here barge—"

"An' split the profits on the codfish?" Scraggs queried eagerly.

"Certainly not. Me an' Neils splits that fifty-fifty. A quarter o' them profits is too high a price to pay for your friendship, Scraggsy, old deceitful. Remember, I made that profit after you an' Mac had pulled out o' the syndicate."

"That's logic," McGuffey declared.

"It's highway robbery," Scraggs snarled. "I won't sell no quarter interest to you or The Squarehead, Gib Not on them terms."

"Then you'll load them codfish aboard, or pay demurrage on that barge for every day they hang around; an' if the board of health condemns 'em an' chucks 'em overboard I'll sue you an' Mac for my lost profits, git a judgment agin you, an' take over the Victor to satisfy the judgment."

"You're a sea lawyer, Gib," Scraggs retorted sarcastically.

"You do what Gib says," McGuffey ordered threateningly. "Remember, I got a half interest in any judgment he gits agin us—an' what's more, I object to them codfish clutterin' up my half interest."

"You bullied me on the old Maggie," Scraggs screeched, "but I won't be bullied no more. If you want to tow that barge, Mac, you buy me out, lock, stock and barrel. An' the price for my half interest is five thousand dollars."

"You've sold something, Scraggsy," Mr. McGuffey flashed back at him, obeying a wink from Mr. Gibney. "An' here's a hundred dollars to bind the bargain. Balance on delivery of proper bill-o'-sale."

While Scraggs was counting the money Mr. Gibney was writing a receipt in his note book. Scraggs, still furious, signed the receipt.

"Now, then, Scraggsy," said Mr. Gibney affably, "hustle up to the custom house, get a formal bill-o'-sale blank, fill her in, an' hustle back agin for your check. An' see to it you don't change your mind, because it won't do you any good. If you don't come through now I can sue you an' force you to."

"Oh! So you're buyin' my interest, eh?".

"Well, I'm lendin' Mac the money, an' I got a hunch he'll sell the interest to me an' Neils without figgerin' on a profit. You're a jarrin' note in the syndicate, Scraggsy, an' I've come to that time o' life where I want peace. An' there won't be no peace on the Victor unless I skipper her."

Captain Scraggs departed to draw up the formal bill of sale and Mr. Gibney, drawing The Squarehead and McGuffey to him, favored each with a searching glance and said:

"Gentlemen, did it ever occur to you that there's money in the chicken business?"

It had! Both McGuffey and Neils admitted it. There are few men in this world who have not, at some period of their lives, held the same view, albeit the majority of those who have endeavored to demonstrate that fact have subsequently changed their minds.

"I thought as much," the commodore grinned. "If I was to let you two out o' my sight for a day you'd both be flat busted the day after. So we won't buy no farm an' go in for chickens. We'll sell the Victor an' buy a little tradin' schooner. Then we'll go back to the South seas an 'earn a legitimate livin'."

"But why'll we sell the Victor?" McGuffey demanded. "Gib, she's a love of a boat."

"Because I've just had a talk with the owners o' the two opposition lines an' they, knowin' me to be chummy with you an' Scraggsy, give me the tip to tell you two that you could have your choice o' two propositions—a rate war or a sale o' the Victor for ten thousand dollars. That gets you out clean an' saves your original capital, an' it gits Scraggsy out the same way, while nettin' me an' Neils five hundred each."

"A rate war would ruin us," McGuffey agreed. "In addition to sourin' Scraggsy's disposition until he wouldn't be fit to live with. Gib, you're a wonder."

"I know it," Mr. Gibney replied.

Within two hours Captain Scraggs' half interest had passed into the hands of McGuffey, and half an hour later the Victor had passed into the hands of the opposition lines, to be operated for the joint profit of the latter. Later in the day all four members of the syndicate met in the Bowhead saloon, where Mr. Gibney explained the deal to Captain Scraggs. The latter was dumfounded.

"You'll run without me, Gib," Scraggs declared emphatically. "I've had a-plenty o' the dark blue for mine. I got a little stake now, so I'm going to look around an' invest in a—"

"A chicken ranch," McGuffey interrupted.

"Right-O, Bart. How'd you guess it?"

"Imagination," quoth McGuffey, tapping his forehead, "imagination, Scraggsy."

Three weeks later Mr. Gibney had purchased, for account of his now abbreviated syndicate, the kind of power schooner he desired, and the inspectors gave him a ticket as master. With The Squarehead as mate and Mr. McGuffey as engineer and general utility man, the little schooner cleared for Pago Pago on a day when Captain Scraggs was too busy buying incubators to come down to the dock and see them off.

And for aught the chronicler of this tale knows to the contrary, the syndicate may be sailing in that self-same schooner to this very day.

M. E. CHURCH NOTES

There were exceedingly large congregations in the Methodist church last Sunday. At the morning service there was a reception of members, fourteen new members on profession of faith uniting with the church. In the evening the choir gave a fine sacred concert, rendering parts of two sacred cantatas and other musical selections. The church was beautifully decorated, and the spirit of Easter pervaded the atmosphere of the services. It was a day that will not soon be forgotten.

The pastor of the Methodist church, Rev. Harold Tomkinson, will speak next Sunday evening on "Social Bees and Butterflies." This will be the third sermon in the series on the problems of young people. The audiences have been large for the first two sermons, and the interest paricularly gratifying to the pastor and church officials.

The pastor of the M. E. church goes to Forest City next week to help with special services.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY ORGANIZED

Monday evening the American Legion entertained the eligible members of an auxiliary, which was organized at this time with twenty charter members. Mrs. Ida Elliot, of Iowa Falls, who is district chairman met with the ladies and explained the work of the auxiliary. The wives, mothers, sisters and daughters of Legion members are eligible to this organization. The boys served a nice lunch which was enjoyed by all. The following officers were elected; Pres., Miss Florence Box; Vice Pres., Mrs. O. F. Braden; Sect. Mrs. H. G. Box; Treas. Mrs. Will Rietz; Historian Mrs. L. A. McCallum; and Chaplain, Mrs. J. F. Howell. We wish to make this a wide awake organization and will need the cooperation of all the eligible members of the community to get the best results.

OBITUARY

Edna May Harris, daughter of Dale E. and Katie L. Harris, was born in Paw Paw, Illinois, October 25, 1884, and died at her home in Bruce, S. Dak. April 13, 1922. She moved to Iowa with her parents in 1886, living in the vicinity of Sheffield and Rowan, until the time of her marriage to Walter F. Allen in January 1919. To this union were born two sons, Roy Franis, and Robert Dale, three weeks old. At an early age she confessed her faith in Christ as her Saviour and later united with the Congregational church at Rowan. Besides her husband and two sons, she leaves her father, Dale E. Harris, one sister, Mrs. Edith Ross, and six brothers, Dan, Ray, Bert, Roland, Cecil and Harry to mourn her loss.

The funeral service was held in the Congregational church, and was one of the most largely attended funerals ever held in Rowan, there being freinds from all parts of the state. The pastor, Rev. Nye conducted the service, while Rev Harold Tomkinson, pastor of the M. E. church, preached the sermon, and paid a high tribute to the worth of Mrs. Allen's character and service. There were many evidences of sorrow among the friends, and many tangible expressions of appreciation of her personality.

We never could understand those folks over in Norway township. Practically every jack one of them signed the Stephens petition asking that road work be abandoned until things got back to normal, and the same men have signed three different petitions which call for 18 miles of graveled roads in Norway township and they want the gravel THIS YEAR.

Perhaps that would be all right if they could get it but this end of the county has seen its tax money spent in the other end of the county long enough and when we get caught up, we will help Norway out with her gravel.

Those petitions are a matter of record in the auditor's office and almost every signer on those petitions asking for gravel, also SIGNED THE STEPHENS PETITION PRAYING FOR A ROAD WORK HOLIDAY. —Eagle Grove Eagle.

Pig Crop to Be Short

That the spring crop of the corn belt will be below normal is the opinion of C. F. Curtiss, dean of the college of agriculture, Iowa State college, and H. H. Kildee, head of the animal husbandry department.

Reports from practically every section of Iowa indicate that the loss of spring litters has been unusually heavy and altho the number of breeding sows on farms in Iowa April 1, was estimated at 125 per cent, compared with the number on farm a year ago, the poor luck experienced by hog raisers will offset the increase in number of bred sows.

Due to the high price of protein feeds, such as tankage and the over supply of corn, there has been a tendency to feed the corn and cut down the tankage. Experiments have shown that pregnant sows when deprived of protein enough to balance the fattening corn ration have poor litters.

RADIOPHONE CRAZE HITS BELMOND HARD

SCHOOL BOARD UNABLE TO MEET BAND LEADER--NO BAND NOW

Prof. Greutzmacher To move To Another Location At End Of Present Term

GET YOUR MONEY BACK

There will be no band in Belmond this summer. Prof. Greutzmacher, of the local high school, who was to lead the band, and the board of education, have been unable to get together and agree on salary. Mr. Gruetzmacher has an offer of several hundred dollars more at another place, and while he put his figures away down to remain here, the board could only manage $200 less than he was offered last year, and consequently Prof. Gruetzmacher and his wife will leave at the end of the present term.

Things seem to have gone to the demnition bow wows. Belmond seemingly is going to be a live place this summer, one which every citizen can point with pride to and boast of if he's drunk. Nobody but a tank would. We believe, however, it will do a lot of folks a lot of good; they will come to realize that if you are going to be a corpse you've got to be buried.

What money has been turned in to the Independent for the band, will be refunded to the individual subscribers upon presentation of their receipt, given them by the boys who canvassed. All subscriptions signed but not paid in, are cancelled. Present your receipt to the Independent and get your check.

SCHOOL NOTES

The orchestra recital given last Thursday night was well attended and very much enjoyed. The boys and girls in the orchestra under Mr. Gruetzmacher's directions have done a great deal in a short time.

The one-act play, Miss Civilization," given in connection with the recital was well given and very thrilling.

Everill Thompson as "Miss Civilization" was able to cope with the three burglars, Harvey Chapman, Bill Butts and Marshall Nourse.

Mrs. Peterson was able to put on a very clever play in a short time. The school is indebted to the Belmond Furniture Company for the use of stage settings.

On Friday evening the orchestra and band went to Garner to compete in a contest against Clear Lake, Britt, Garner and Dows. Belmond's orchestra got second place in the contest. We are very proud of this considering the short time our orchestra has been organized.

Practice on the Senior Class play, "Clarence," has started. Watch for further announcements.

Work on the Annual is progressing very fast. They will be out in a short time.

A musical program will be given by the third, fourth and fifth grades under the direction of Miss Baumgardner sometime next week. There will be a Japanese sketch, "A Box of Dolls" and an operetta, "Fairy Rose." Watch for the date.

Sunday news came that Mrs. Fyler's father died. Mr. and Mrs. Fyler left Monday morning for Shell Rock. Mr. Fyler is expected back Thursday.

The home track meet was held Tuesday afternoon. This meet will decide who will compete in the dual meet with Goldfield Saturday.

The matinee at the Lyric, "Rip Van Winkle," was attened by practically every child in the grades Monday afternoon. It is needless to say that it was much enjoyed.

The first Dual Track meet to be held in Belmond takes place Saturday with Goldfield. The meet is to be held in the Ball Park. Our tract team has been improving rapidly. Some practice records are equivalent to those made in smaller colleges. If you are interested in seeing Belmond win, come out and boost.

Mrs. George Goelz and Mrs. Ernest Stadtlander were Kindergarten visitors last Friday.

The Sophmores won the Home track meet yesterday with a total of 41 points. The seniors followed with 40 and the Juniors had 21. The Freshmen failed to make a point. The winners of this meet will contest in the dual meet with Goldfield Saturday.

D. E. Harris, of Rowan, announces his candidacy in this issue of the Independent for Road Supervisor from the First district. Mr. Harris has had the office several terms, and has given good satisfaction. The contest this term is between he and J. D. Baker of Belmond.

MUCH WORK DONE ON COUNTY ROADS

News: Wright county's road work for the present year is being gotten under headway this week. The program includes considerable graveling, grading and drainage work. The primary work will be kept going, and township and county roads will likewise be given considerable attention this year.

Grading Cornelia Road Now

The Cornelia road project north and east of Clarion is now under headway. W. A Fox, of Forrest City, has the contract for this job, and has his crew working and when the road is put to an established grade, it will be treated with gravel. Later on, possibly next year, the plan is to straighten out some of the turns on the road near Elm Lake and give a more direct route.

Dows Project Also Started

Contractor Nelson, of Omaha, is also at work on the county road south of Dows. 1 1-2 miles of this road will be graded and improved this year. Then Mr. Nelson will take his crew to Woolstock. Out of Woolstock the county road to Eagle Grove will be graded and improved.

Clarion South Road Gravelling Starts

The graveling crews who are to gravel the Clarion road south to Woolstock are working. Two pits, the Sheffield and O'Connor pits, are furnishing the gravel, and workmen will work from both ends of the job. This should be completed before many weeks.

The road east of Solberg to Rowan, is not yet ready for the gravel. The contractor on the grading job has some more finishing work there. Engineer Hilton estimates about ten days will be required to true this grade up, and then graveling will begin, and before the middle of July it should be gravelled. Franklin county is grading the Hampton-Rowan road connecting up with this project and expects to gravel it next year. Humboldt county expects to grade and possibly to gravel the connecting link from the west, this year, so in two more years at the latest there will be an unbroken stretch of gravelled roads across the three counties, east and west.

The patrolmen who are employed by the county are on the job, and have been doing emergency work where mudholes had formed during the recent rainy weather. Much good work has already been done, and with the exception of ruts which make slow traveling, practically every road in the county is now passable. The townships have got road dragging started, and in Clarion, drags have been used, so the streets in town and leading out of town are in better shape than they have been for the past two weeks or month.

It will require a lot of work to keep the newly graded roads in good shape, but when the gravel has been laid, there will be only patrol work needed to keep the roads in splendid condition. There is still some graveling to do on the road west of Clarion, the required yardage of gravelling not yet having been reached as yet, we understand.

RADIO

Beginning next week, the Independent will run a series of articles each week on Radio, the newest and most far-reaching craze that has struck this country in years. These articles are written by men who know—for folks who don't, and we're among them. The articles will take up the subject from the beginning, and in a very interesting series give the hows and wherefors of this seemingly miraculous discovery. Radio is considered one of the most wonderful and far-reaching discoveries of the past hundred years, and is still in its infancy. Improvements are being made daily; the future of wireless cannot be forseen.

The Independent, in conjunction with the Belmond Battery Station Co. have their radiophone installed now, and cordially invite the public to "listen in" on the many concerts being broadcasted nightly over the country. The Radio articles to be printed will be interesting not only to the intiated, but to the uninitiated as well and they will be well worth reading. Look for them next week in the Independent.

Fred B. Farmer, of Hartley, Iowa it is understood has been elected as Superintendent of the Belmond schools for the coming year, but had not, up to last night, accepted the offer, which carries a salary of $2,400. The salary paid last year was $100 more, which was reduced at a recent meeting of the board, it is reported, to $2,250, and then boosted to the present $2,400.

JUDGE McCALL ADDRESSES CLUB WEDNESDAY

Next Meeting To Have Noted Speaker—C. H. MacNider Address To Members

Hon. E. M. McCall, Judge of the 11th Judicial District of Iowa, will address the members of the Good Fellowship club on next Wednesday evening, May 3rd.

This will undoubtedly be a splendid meeting, for the Judge is an able and forceful speaker and always says something when he talks. The club is fortunate in securing him. A program as usual will be given, and the good eats enjoyed.

The meeting last Wednesday evening, at which Hon. C. H. MacNider was the speaker, was attended by a very large crowd, and is numbered among the best yet. Mr. MacNider's talk was on "Service," the joy of service to your community, your state, your nation, to one another. He illustrated his points forcibly with references to the service rendered by the boys during the war, and claimed Service as one of the greatest duties and privileges the American citizen possesses.

The guest of honor spoke here about three years ago, and his talk then was remembered by many present last Wednesday evening. Knowing what to expect, the "old timers" of the club were there in force, and were not disappointed. Mr. MacNider, promised to do his utmost to have his son, Col. Hanford MacNider, National Commander of the American Legion, come to Belmond some time in the near future to address the club, and all members are earnestly hoping that this great privilege may be granted.

Readings by two high school boys, and solos by Messrs. Nordschow and Varland, were the entertainment of the program, and following the address by Mr. MacNider, some very good eats were enjoyed. The refreshment committee are certainly on the job, and their last feed was good "all the way down." You are missing something worth while if you fail to attend these meetings, they are worth a great deal to any man in a social, entertaining and instructive way. Come out to the next one and join the gang.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

MOTOR INJURES ANOTHER

The Great Western Motor, which has been the principal in several accidents during the past few months, injured another man last Friday morning when it struck a Mr. Reddington, employed on the Great Western section running to Clarion.

The injured man, whose home is in Kansas City, according to reports was on the section car when the motor struck, rolling over and over down a steep embarkment. In the jump and the rolling, he suffered quite severe bruises and injuries about the head, but came thru nicely with treatment at the local hospital, whither he was taken, and left Monday of this week for his home in Kansas City.

The Motor seems to be an illfated affair, in that it runs into more accidents than any other train on the line. It was the motor which injured the two men from Norway township this winter, and this spring killed a man at Meservey.

OBITUARY

Robert Jocelyn Stine, son of F. A. and Sadie Stine, was born at Thornton, Iowa, May 19, 1921 and died at their home in Belmond April 20, 1922. from a complication of diseases. A short funeral service was held at the home on Saturday afternoon, in charge of Rev. Leinbach after which the little body was laid away in the Franklin Grove cemetery. Another of earth's little jewels has been removed from earth to its eternal abode in glory.

Mr. Stine moved here in January and the sympathy of the community goes out to them in their sorrow. Those from away were Mrs. Stine's father, mother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Dryer and Mrs. Northup of Humboldt. Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Coleman of Fort Dodge and Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Sebber of Vincent.

J. M. JENSEN OUT FOR COUNTY ATTORNEY

Belmond Lawyer Announces Himself As Candidate On The Republican Ticket

Attorney J. M. Jensen, of Belmond, in this issue of the Independent announces his candidacy for the office of County Attorney, for Wright county subject to the June primaries.

Mr. Jensen will make an active campaign for the office, running on the Republican ticket. He was admitted to the bar in 1914, and has been practicing since. Six years were spent in Winnebago county, and the past two years have been spent in Belmond. He was county chairman of the Republican party in Winnebago county for six years, and has always been a staunch Republican. For one term he was mayor of Buffalo Center, resigning when he came to Belmond.

Atty. Jensen has had experience in the legal line which should "season him for the game, and if elected, we believe will give Wright county an able and efficient adminstration of its legal affairs. To date, there have been no other announcements of candidates for the attorney's job and Mr. Jensen takes the field as the first and leading candidate. Belmond should rally to his cause, and give him the loyal support due a home man.

COMMUNITY WELFARE CLUB

The Community Welfare club will meet at the library Friday afternoon April 28th.

Mrs. J. E. Blythe of Mason City will give a talk on Birds. She will also devote a part of her time in speaking on citizenship. Mrs. Blythe is a very prominent women in this part of the state, she is a fine speaker and well worth hearing. Everybody is invited to come and hear her.

The Calendar committee have been working hard and a calendar has been mailed to each club member. Serving committee for Friday are: Mrs. Jno. Greenlander, Mrs. M. C. Barry, Mrs. Claire Christie, Mrs. Eaton, Mrs. Hildebrand, Mrs. L. Moe, Mrs. J. M. Jensen, Mrs. Fred Frohling.

SANDS MEMORIAL CHURCH THE SCENE OF BIG CONFERENCE

The following clipping was taken from the Des Moines Sunday Register and will be of interest to many Belmond people.

Humboldt, Ia., April 22—(Special)—Sands Memorial church, built in 1905, as a monument to John D. Sands, for forty years pastor of Belchurch, is where the annual meeting of Webster City Association of Ministers and Churches was held this week. John D. Sands, one of the early circuit riders of Iowa, and a member of the Yale band, came to Iowa fifty-six years ago, riding all over eastern Iowa preaching in school houses, sod shanties, or wherever the people would gather to hear. During the last of his pastorate in Belmond he preached sitting in his wheeled chair. He was present at the laying of the corner stone of the Belmond Congregational church "Sands Memorial" are the words written on the capstone. The sarary of the circuit rider was about $450, part of which was furnished by the Missionary society.

Three sons and one daughter survive Deacon Sands. A grandson Edwin H. Sands, jr., is a member of the housing commission of Des Moines.

At the time of his death he was the oldest living graduate of Yale, being in his ninety-sixth year.

Dr. P. A. Johnston, state superintendent of Congregational churches of Iowa and Pater Familias of Iowa Congregational ministers, Supt. R. J. Montgomery, Rev. Walter Metcalf of Hampton. W. W. Pickett of Fort Dodge and H. W. Hollenbeck of Kamundongo, West Africa, were on the program.

EAGLE GROVE SUPERINTENDENT QUITS JOB

Supt. Fasold, of the Eagle Grove schools, has asked to be relieved from the place, the school board there cutting his salary from $3,600 to $2,700. It was too much of a cut, considering the amount paid in other towns. Clarion pays $3,600 for superintendent's salary here. Eagle Grove citizens are hoping that the board may reconsider its decision and retain Mr. Fasold, who is an excellent school man. Salaries of teachers were also cut, the principal's salary this year being $2,000, and high school teachers' salaries fixed at $1450, $1450 $1400, $1400, $1400, $1350, $1400 athletic director $2025 and eight teachers at $1400, one at $1450, and four at $1350, three at $1170, three at $1125, twelve at $1,080, and one at $1035.

The average for the thirty-four teachers is $1,297 or a total salary list of $44,105.—News.

TWO YOUNG MEN TAKEN FOR ENTERING CARS

Claude Veeder and Merle Galloway, two young men of Belmond, were taken in charge Tuesday morning of this week on a charge of entering box cars at the Great Western yards, and removing some of the contents thereof, which it is alleged they later sold.

The charge is that the two, on one or more occasions, entered box cars at the yards here, and removed eggs, in all it is said about 90 dozen, which they later sold at a store in Rowan, receiving for them a check. It was thru this check, and by the number of the license on Veeder's car, that the two men were traced. According to reports, Fred Mortimer, Great Western agent, saw the car drive up one night, and slipping down got the number, which resulted in the arrest Tuesday.

Sheriff Lang came over Tuesday and took them to Clarion, where they are now awaiting action. It is understood that the final action rests upon the Superintendent of the Line, who was to be in Clarion yesterday afternoon. Considering the small amount of value taken, and the youth of the offenders, it is hoped that they will be given mercy by the Superintendent and the court. Young Galloway is reported as having said that "never again" was his motto, and Veeder undoubtedly feels the same. It is very generally thought by Belmond people that they did not realize the seriousness of their doings, and that they should be shown leniency. A petition to this effect was circulated and taken to Clarion yesterday.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP

Most of the schools close tomorrow for the summer vacation. Some of the teachers and pupils have prepared a program while others are planning on a picnic if the weather permits.

Mr. Charlie Baxter, of Belmond township, who was hurt in an accident last week, is being cared for at the home of his sister, Mrs. Geo. Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. George Baxter, and little daughter, Margaret, spent Sunday at the Geo. Thompson home.

Mr. and Mrs. Hilko Barkema and family were visitors at the Chas, Barkema home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gartz, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Halfpap, were Sunday visitors at the parental home.

Minnie Smidt spent Sunday afternoon with her friend, Fannie Burns.

Several farmers shipped cattle to Chicago last Saturday.

HOMER D. REESE

Homer David Reese was born in Albany County, New York, January 3rd, 1850 and died at his home southwest of Belmond on Wednesday April 19th, 1922. Hhe was married at Sandwich, DeKalb County, Illinois, on January 4th, 1880, to May Suydam who survives him. Five children were born to them, Charles of Fort Dodge, Iowa, Gertrude of St. Cloud, Minnesota, Lydia of Hickory Grove, Iowa, Harry who was with his parents and Mary Frances, deceased. Besides his wife and children Mr. Reese is survived by one sister Sarah A. Reese and one brother J. H. Reese both of Belmond.

Mr. Reese has lived on the home farm near Belmond since the year 1883. He has lived here long enough to see the country develop from a raw unimproved prairie country to its present state of improvement. Mr. Reese was a good neighbor and friend and not alone his family but a host of friends mourn his departure. Modest and unassuming he was always firm in a course of integrity and justice to his fellowmen who will remember him long for the virtures he possessed. Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon in the Belmond M. E. church conducted by the pastor Rev. Wilkinson. Interment was in the Belmond cemetery.

GROTTO WILL TAKE EIGHTEEN CARS OF STONE

Burt, Ia., April 23.—Rev. P. M. Dobberstein left for La Crosse, Wis., Tuesday to be gone about four weeks. Father Schorn, M. S. C., of the Mission society of Sparta, Wis., will attend the parish during his absence. Father Dobberstein says this will not be a pleasure trip that he is taking as during his absence he expects to gather 60,000 pounds of rustic stone for use in his grotto. When finished the grotto will contain eighteen car loads of rock, there being eleven car loads now in it.—Des Moines Register.

TWO RECEIVING OUTFITS ARE INSTALLED HERE ON MONDAY

Battery Co. And Independent Install Radiophone Receiving Outfit Monday

BUG BITES MANY OTHERS

The radio bug has hit Belmond, and with the installation Monday afternoon of the outfit owned by the Belmond Storage Battery Co. and the Independent, and that evening of the one at the Lyric theatre, the "craze" began to work.

Joe Scott and Carol McIntyre, drove to Des Moines last week Thursday to get the outfit for the first named firms. After some most unusual palaver, mix ups and arguing, Joe came away the victor, with a high grade Westinghouse radiophone outfit ready to go. In the demonstration at Des Moines, Newark, N. J., was heard plainly on this outfit, and Sunday evening Carol McIntyre, hooking up to his aerial, heard several concerts splendidly.

At 5:45 p. m. Monday evening the phone was "tuned in" but owing to the exceptionally bad weather for receiving, great difficulty was experienced in catching concerts. Tuesday evening was a little better. During the two nights, snatches were heard from several different places, music, speaking, singing, and the like, but the electricity in the air made it it difficult to get them plainly. Had the firms jointly owning the outfit had time Saturday, the outfit would have been set up that day, and with good weather then doubtless something would have come thru. As it is, up to yesterday afternoon it has been mostly experimental work, and until the thing is properly known and "managed," there will be nothing doing.

Belmond has now three receiving sets, and one sending outfit, of wireless. That of Carol McIntyre was the first, which he practically made himself. He has a sending outfit as well, with a government license. That of the Battery Company and the Independent, and the one at the Lyric, will put Belmond in pretty good shape to catch the news of the country as it is sent out. From the indications, the bug has bitten several others in the town, and the prospect is that before long there will be others.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

S. U Leinbach, Pastor

The attendance upon the meeting of the Webster City Association was not as large as usual but the meetings were full of interest and were well attended by our local people. The sermon on Tuesday evening by Rev. Arthur Metcalf of Hampton was full of inspiration and helpfulness. Rev. Metcalf is a pleasant speaker and we will enjoy having him visit us again. On Wednesday evening the address by Dr. Hollenbeck who has spent about fifteen years in Africa, gave us a vision of the possibilities of that people when given the benefits of the Gospil. Dr. Hollenbeck told us just what we desired to know of the work and experiences of a missionary in Africa.

Spring has come and with it new life as was manifested by the large attendance at the services last Sunday. We would like to have a few more in our Sabbath school for we feel that there are a few more in the community who would be helped if they would attend.

The Ladies Missionary society will meet on Thursday afternoon at 2:30. Bible Study class Thursday eve at 8:00. The regular services next Sunday morning and at night the pastor will have a short address illustrated by the stereopticon.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

YOUR HALF

The Independent wants you, the reader, to take a hand in things, tell us what you think regarding various needs and events of the community. We want you to write your own editorials, about anything you wish, and the Independent will be glad to print them.

It has been the rule of this paper never to publish anything submitted unless the name of the writer is attached thereto. We are, however, going to break this rule to this extent: That anything submitted as an editorial will be printed without the writer's name attached. The name must be given when the copy is submitted, that we may know the article is genuine, but name will not be printed.

Now "hop to it." There are undoubtedly dozens of things in and about Belmond which you have thought more or less about; have wished something was said about. Express your ideas by writing to this paper what you think about them. They will be printed providing they conform with the law and will not lay either the writer of the article or the paper open to libel. This gives you a wide range, and you can "go the limit" so far as we are concerned.

What do you think Belmond needs? What do you think it has, that it ought to do away with? How can the town be improved? What improvements do you consider the most vital? Give us all your ideas on these things, and any others you may have in mind. Your half of the editorial columns of the Independent are open for your use; use them—the more you do the better it will be.. Two heads are always better than one, and many better than two. The publisher extends you a hearty welcome to say your say. Remember, sign your name to your article; we will not print it unless you desire.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Gruetzmacher of Belmond were over Sunday visitors here.—Times.

The Eagle belives that the school board and superintendent can and should get together on the salary question and that Mr. Fasold should remain here for another year at least. It is hardly right that the superintendent at this late date should be looking up another location and the schools would be in the same situation as regards a superintendent for another year. The superintendent has saved the district hundreds of dollars in his work, supervising the construction of the new high school building, a statement which the entire board will substantiate. The salary difficulty is not insuperable. The best interests of both the superintendent and the schools demand an early adjustment. —Eagle Grove Eagle.

It Looked Bad

"Why you call my boy a poor nut?" queried an indignant mother, who confronted the dietitian of a New Jersey charities association the other morning at her office door. And the latter has not yet found a way of convincing Mrs. Caruso that "poor nut" on the face of Angelo's card stands for poor nutrition.—Survey.

THROWN UNDER DISC AND SEVERELY CUT

Humboldt Republican: Nels Hanson, seventeen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. R. N Hanson, of Humboldt, was thrown beneath a disc that he was operating on the Walter Jensen farm northwest of Humboldt, Wednesday afternoon of this week, and suffered severe cuts that may prove fatal. He was brought to Humboldt immediately after the accident, and after a hurried examination by Dr. Arent, was taken to the hospital at Fort Dodge where he was operated for the removel of broken bone in his head. He stood the operation well, and it is hoped that he will recover.

Mr Hanson was driving a team hitched to a disc on the Walter Jensen farm, as stated, and had evidently walked around the disc to the front of the team, something must have frightened them, for they ran away and the disc passed over Hanson who had been knocked down. His body, limbs and head were badly cut, though not necessarily fatally. Several stitches had to be taken in his right hand to close the wounds, and his head was also severaly cut and bruised. After his arrival at the Ft. Dodge Hospital it was found that his skull had been fractured. That is, the surface bones and been broken. One strip of bone more than two inches long was removed.

Seed Corn Test 97 Per Cent

The county wide seed corn germination test just completed by the county agent shows ninety-seven per cent strong, one per cent weak and two per cent dead kernels. This test included from five to ten 100 kernel samples from each township throughout the county making a very representative test for the seed corn of this section of the state.

The results of this county wide germination test would indicate that the seed corn of Wright county has strong vitality which will probably be very necessary in case we have a wet cold planting season as many farmers seem to think that we will have.

Corn Yield Tests

The county agent has spent the greater part of the past week in collecting samples of corn to be used in conducting four experiment plots throughout the county to determine the best yielding strains of corn in the different parts of the county.

The general plan is to collect two 10 ear samples from each township in the county and to grow these samples on four experiment plots which have been located. The farmers who have agreed to cooperate with the county agent in conducting these corn yield tests are: A. E. Martin, Belmond township; H. A. Flett, Vernon township; Al Watkins, Dayton township; Harry Inners, Liberty township.

Specialists Coming

Wright county will be visited this week by two specialists from the extension department at Ames. L. E. Heifner, entension poultry specialist, will be in the county Wednesday and Thursday to assist the county agent in organizing the various poultry clubs which are organized throughout the county at this time. Great interest seems to have developed in the poultry club project and there are to date about sixteen members enrolled in the county wide club contest.

Chas. Roach, of the visual instruction department, of the extension staff will be in Clarion Friday, April 28th, for the purpose of demonstrating to the members of the board of directors of our local farm bureau a portable motion picture projector which is being used quite generally by county agents in their farm bureau work and which seems to be giving very satisfactory results.

To Study Conditions in Mexico

Men who know something about international conditions believe Mexico offers a good field for the sale of purebred stock from this country. To this end President Howard, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, will head a commission to make a special survey of conditions in the land of Aztecs in the hope of bringing satisfactory reciprocal trade relations between the two countries. Mexico is rich in a host of needed in Uncle Sam's land. On the other hand Uncle Sam is all cluttered up with a surplus of various commodities which Mexico sadly needs in her business. Relations between the two nations have been strained to the breaking point on numerous occasions of late years, but now that Bill Hohenzollern's influence in Mexico has been punctured the way is clear for the establishing of cordial relations which will prove of mutual advantage. And Jim Howard is the right sort of man to go down and look the situation over.

About two months ago Thos. Ross, one of the purebred breeders of Blaine township, had correspondence with Director of Agriculture in Mexico regarding the purebred cattle which he had for sale.

Approved Dirt Farmer Board

The bill referred to in daily papers as the "dirt farmer" on Federal Reserve board which has passed the senate was reported out of the house banking and currency committee recently after several hours' session and previous delays the vote favoring the reporting of the bill was 13 to 7. This was on the question of including representatives of agriculture and commerce as well as finance on the board. The bill is to be reported to the house providing that the president shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial commercial interests and geographical divisions of the country."

The bill as passed by the senate provided for six members as against five in the present law. As reported to the house the bill does not carry the increase, but it is expected that it will be amended from the floor. The committee urged that a report be made asking for a special rule providing for a prompt consideration of the bill by the house under a limitation of debate and so framed as to prevent amendment upon the floor.

The provision of the senate bill, which would place a limitation of $250 000 on the cost of construction of buildings for federal reserve banks was eliminated. It was brought out by Secretary Mellon, testifying before the committee, that the action to limit the exceedingly heavy expenditures on the part of the federal reserve banks for bank buildings was too late for practically all of them now have buildings or contracts for them.

Wildcat Mythology

"Ever hear the story of Midas?"

"No," said the busy man.

"Everything he touched turned to gold."

"Sounds interesting. But the authorities are suspicious these days. If he's a friend of yours, tell him to go slow about opening offices and trying to sell stock."

is a good cream separator. Sell the cream or butter fat and feed the skim-milk to your growing stock. You can bring your pigs to market weight quicker with skim-milk and corn than any other way and raises more pigs to the acre. But to get the greatest value out of skim-milk, it must be fed sweet with the animal heat still in it. The only way you can have milk in this condition and save all the butter fat is to use a cream separator. A Primrose cream separator will save all the butter fat and deliver it in the best condition for butter making. Look over the Primrose the next time you are in town.

Cultivate Well and Often

After your corn is planted the safest way to speed its growth and insure a bigger yield is frequent and timely cultivation. Nor is there any farm work more satisfactory or encouraging when done with an afficient, well-built cultivator—one that will do a good soil-stirring, weed-killing job, without leaving that "dog-tired" feeling at sundown. No matter what your cultivator requirements may be, there is a cultivator in the International or P & O line to meet them. Come in and see our array of good cultiviaors—built especially for conditions such as are found in this locality.

The watchword now is Sugar Beets. And when we think of them we can't help but say that the P & O cultivator is the machine to use in this territory. It is especially disigned to meet the soil conditions of this territory. Costs more? Yes, but worth it.

Don't take a chance on that corn crop. First test, then grade and then plant with an International or Hayes planter. Nature will do the rest.

Belmond Local News

Edmund Groh came down from Minneapolis last week to spend a few days with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Groh. Edmund has just completed his studies at the State University of Minnesota, where he was sent by the government, and has passed the final exams with flying colors. He is now a full registered pharmacist. The latter part of this week he enters the hospital at Minneapolis for an operation on his arm, which was considerably shot up in the war. The scar left from his previous operations has been pressing on some nerves in the shoulder, and the operation is to relieve this pressure.

POSTAL IMPROVEMENT WEEK IS OBSERVED

May 1 Sees Inaugurated First General Campaign of Kind in Service.

Without the Postal Service, business would languish in a day, and be at a standstill in a week. Public opinion would die of dry rot. Sectional hatred or prejudice only would flourish, and narrow-mindedness thrive.

It is the biggest distinctive business in the world and it comes nearer to the innermost interests of a greater number of men and women than any other institution on earth. No private business, however widespread, touches so many lives so often or sharply; no church reaches into so many souls, flutters so many pulses, has so many human beings dependent on its ministrations.

"Postal Improvement Week" has been set for May 1, by the Postmaster General. This is the first general campaign of its kind in the Postal Service for several decades. Business men and their organizations, large users of the mail, newspapers, motion pictures, advertisers, and the entire organization of 326,000 postal workers are to be enlisted in this country-wide campaign of interest in postal improvements. Your help is vital. Address your letters plainly with pen or typewriter. Give street address. Spell out name of State, don't abbreviate. Put your return address in the upper left hand corner of envelope (not on the back) and always look at your letter before dropping in the mail to see if it is properly addressed. This care in the use of the mails is for your benefit and speeds up the dispatch and delivery of mail matter.

If you have any complaints of poor service make them to your postmaster. He has instructions to investigate them and report to the department.

SO SAD.

We learned the other day that some time last year one of the dealers who sell denatured alcohol for use in auto radiators, had received a barrel of grain alchol and sold it as denatured. The mistake in shipping the grain alchol was discovered shortly after the shipment was made, but as so many barrels were shipped it was impossible to locate the error, and not until the barrel was nearly empty was it discoverey that it had been shipped to Garner. De natured alcohol sells for 75 cents a gallon, and just what the grain alchol was worth we do not know but we do know that had someone discovered that the loca dealer was dispensing grain alcohol at 75 cents a gallon it would not have lasted long. This story will probably bring sorrow to many of our readers, but it is the truth just the same.—Garner Signal.

GENEVA WOMAN SUFFERS FROM RARE AILMENT

Chronicle: A case of more than passing interest to the medical fraternity and the laity is that of Mrs. John Minard, of Geneva, and who formerly resided at Webster City, Iowa.

The first of last March she began to feel drowsy and in a week this became so marked that she was unable to do her housework and took to bed. Her complaint was that she felt very tired and could not keep awake. Her case was diagnosed as sleeping sickness, and she was brought to the Luthern hospital at Hampton. At first her drowsiness was not very marked. She talked when questioned and at times gave rational answers. When questioned she would answer rationally and then drop off in her usual sleep. She complained of no pain or discomfort. She said, "I am just tired and so sleepy, I can not hold my eyes open." She would eat well, but had to be fed by the nurse.

Since April 12th she has been more or less rational and talked with her friends and relatives. She realized all the events that had transpired since she became ill. On April 15th she gave birth to a healthy nine pound boy, her eighth child. The infant shows no ill effects thus far from the long and serious illness that its mother had suffered Since the birth the mother has shown some aggravation of her former symptoms though she is steadily improving and the physicians in charge hope for her ultimate recovery.

This is an unusual case on account of the fact that only two cases are on record where the expectant mother was suffering from sleeping sickness and physicians all over are watching the progress of the case with great interest. The latest news from the bedside indicates a happy outcome from this tedious malady.

THE FARMER'S WIFE

Apple Sauce Cake— 1c. granulated sugar, 1 c. apple sauce (4 apples), ½ t. cinnamon, allspice, cloves, ½ c. shortening, 1 egg, 1 t. soda, ½ c. rainins, ½ c. nuts, 1¾ c. flour. Cream the butter, add sugar and apple sauce. Mix spices, and soda with flour. Add raisins and nuts floured, to first mixture, then add dry ingredients. This recipe is good for using up apple sauce left overs.

Chocolate Cream Cake—Mix ½ cake unsweetened chocolate with ½ c. milk, add yolk of 1 egg, 2 t. sugar flavor with 1 t. vanilla. Cook over hot water. Mix the following: 1 c. sugar, ½ c. butter, ½ c. milk, 2 eggs, 2 c. flour, 3 t. B. P. Mix loaf add chocolate mixture last.

Cereal left overs may be utilized in several ways depending upon the amount left over. Some of the ways are: bread, cereal jelly, croquettes, hash, meat loaf, muffins, fried cornmeal or oatmeal mush, stuffed pepers puddings, souffle, timbales and pancakes.

One of the best preparations for washing the hair is pure white castile soap dissolved in hot soft water. If the hair is inclined to be oily the juice of a lemon used in the last rinse water will tend to dry it. For this reason lemon should not be used for dry scalps.

CHICK FEEDING SCHEDULE

FIRST DAY—No feed.

SECOND DAY—No feed.

THIRD DAY—(1) Grit in form of sand. (2) Fine oyster shells. (3) Hard cooked egg (with shell) chopped fine; mix with equal parts oatmeal or cornmeal; feed sparingly four times daily. (4) Plenty of fresh water tinged with permanganate of potash. Sour milk or buttermilk, or milk powder in mash. (5) Oatmeal as scratch feed. Note: Eggs candled on the seventh day, if fertile, should be kept for feeding.

FOURTH DAY—(1) Same as third day. Baked cornbread or bread crumbs may be used instead of egg. (2) Start feeding dry mash; 2 parts cornmeal, 2 parts bran, 2 parts middlings, ½ part fine meat scrap. This mash should be fed in hoppers (to save from waste) or in small troughs. (3) Feed lightly of scratch feed: 4 parts finely cracked corn, 2 parts finely cracked wheat. Feed this in litter.

FIFTH DAY—Same as above.

SIXTH DAY—Same as above. Gradually reduce egg feed of first day as chicks grow accustomed to dry mash in hoppers. Begin feeding a small amount of green feed.

Johny Cake Recipe—Cornmeal 5 pounds, infertile eggs 4 dozen, baking soda 2 tablespoonfuls. Mix with milk to a stiff batter and bake well.

PHOTEST PHONE RATE RAISE AT HAMPTON

Chronicle: At a meeting of the city council last Tuesday night it was dicided to call a mass meeting of the citizens of Hampton, and for any others who might be interested on the proposed telephone rate raise, and Mayor J. C. Powers has called the aforesaid meeting for next Tuesday night, April 25th, at the court house.

Remember the date, and every person who is interested should be on hand at the meeting. The mayor will explain what the council has done on the matter up to this time, and may be able to state some other things which can be done, and it will then be up to the people as to whether the city shall ask for an injunction restraining the company from putting the proposed increased rates into effect.

Nearly every town which is effected by these proposed raise in rates are getting ready to fight the phone company to the last ditch. The question is a big one, and now is the time to get busy. One thing is sure, the phone company will be a big fight in the coming session of the legislature to give the people of Iowa reperpetual life in many towns in Iowa a few years ago by the Iowa legislature most of whom, of course, did not know what they were voting for.

Remember the mass meeting at the court house in Hampton next Tuesday night, April 25, at 7:30 o'clock.

The Northwestern Bell Telephone Company, in its attempt to raise rates in Hampton, as well as in a number of neighboring towns, tries to get by with a comparison of "income" during the month of July and August, last year, when every body knows that not only the telephone business, but every other line of business is at a low ebb during those months, and especially was that true last year. The total year's receipts of the phone companies, in all of these towns, however, show more of a net income per month than the phone company is asking in the proposed raise.

THE GAIN A PIG MADE

Edwin Buman started with a Duroc pig weighing fifty-five pounds in one hundred and fifty days. This was an average daily gain of 1.8 pounds. His pig won twenty dollars in prizes at the Shelby County Fair.

The boy gives the following direct advice in pig feeding:

A little Boys' and Girls' Market Barrow. Grown and fed so every boy and girl in Shelby County can feed them.

"Sow a little rape, for that makes one of the best pastures for pigs, big or little, and makes a lot of good reasonable cheap feed. It analyzes high in good quality protein, runs relatively high in mineral matter.

"Feed him all the oats he will eat, that will make him grow, also bone and muscle.

"Feed a balance of corn, for corn is king for fattening.

"Feed a little tankage to make a balance ration for corn.

"Keep yards clean by burning up cobs and rubbish and make charcoal out of cobs which is to keep him in good condition.

"Feed a few hands of air slaked lime, will also do him good.

"That is the way I fed my pig." Edwin Buman, Harlan, Iowa.

SAYS HOOTCH IS POISON

Declaring that the government bond on liquors today often covers nothing less than rank poison and that immediate steps must be taken to educate the general public if wholesale deaths from moonshine are to be avoided, Supt. R. N. Holsaple, of the Iowa Anti-Saloon League, issued an official warning to the people of the state.

The warning gives out the results of more than a year's study of all varieties of "prohibitive whiskey." It states that many moonshiners now resort to the practice af cutting the bottom out of bonded bottles and filling them with the rankest of poison liquor, in order to palm them off as "real goods." The league has an exhibit of such bottles, showing where the bottoms have been welded in again by means of an electric torch.

Three poisons are present in all moonshine and bootleg liquor, Holsaple's survey shows—fusel oil, furferal and formaldehyde. Blindness, lameness, insanity, rheumatism and stomach disorders are but a few of the results of these poisons. Fusel oil can be removed from whiskey only by long storage in wodden casks, the wood slowly absorbing the poison. Moonshiners never do this. They peddle it "raw" and blindness and death stalk in their wake.

The galvanized iron boilers, lead and tin pipes used in making bootleg liquor add to the poisons which are naturally found in them.

Holsaple calls upon the people of the state to help stamp out the bootlegger who not only violates our laws but brings with him a train of death and plague which is one of the scourges of the nation at the present time."

THE FAIRGROUND STRIKES A SNAG

News: The fairgrounds plan as reported in the News Tuesday has struck a snag. And it cannot be budged. There is no authority in law for Clarion voting bonds in a sufficient sum to buy the tract. The legal limit beyond which any city under 25,000 cannot go is a sum which can be carried by a 1 1-4 mill levy for bond interest. Clarion can legally levy 2 1-2 mills for park purposes. But half of this is reserved for interest, and is insufficient at this time to meet interest payments on $14,000.

If there is sufficient interest in the matter, the county can own the grounds. The citizens at a special election, may vote whether or not they shall own and purchase a county fair grounds. A levy of 1 1-3 mills here would pay $14,000 for the grounds.

This plan is now being considered. If sufficient interest can be secured, petitions asking for a county election will be circulated. It is likely the vote could be had at the June 5th primary. This would save expenses and make such an election cost but a very small amount.

If there is a county fair hereafter, is seems likely that the people of the county as a whole would have to share in its responsibilities, financial and managerial.

The News would like very much to hear from its readers over the county as to how a county-owned fair grounds would strike them. Are you for it, or opposed to it? We would like to have letters from our readers, whether for publication or not, and urged every one to state his views.

Do you want a county-owned fair?

The INDIAN DRUM

by William MacHarg and Edwin Balmer

CHAPTER I.

The Man Whom the Storm Haunted.

Near the northern end of Lake Michigan, where the bluff-bowed ore-carriers and the big, low-lying, wheat-laden steel freighters from Lake Superior push out from the Straits of Mackinac and dispute the right of way, in the island-divided channel, with the white-and-gold, electric-lighted, wireless-equipped passenger steamers bound for Detroit and Buffalo, there is a copse of pine and hemlock back from the shingly beach. From this copse—dark, blue, primeval, silent at most times as when the Great Manitou ruled his inland waters—there comes at time of storm a sound like the booming of an old Indian drum. This drum beat, so the tradition says, whenever the lake took a life; and, as a sign perhaps that it is still the Manitou who rules the waters in spite of all the commerce of the cities, the drum still beats its roll for every ship lost on the lake, one beat for every life.

So—men say—they heard and counted the beatings of the drum to thirty-five upon the hour when, as afterward they learned, the great steel steamer Wenota sank with twenty-four of its crew and eleven passengers; so—men say—they heard the requiem of the five who went down with the schooner Grant; and of the seventeen lost with the Susan Hart; and so of a score of ships more. Once only, it is told, has the drum counted wrong.

At the height of the great storm of December, 1895, the drum beat the roll of a sinking ship. One, two, three—the hearers counted the drum beats, time and again, in their intermittent booming, to twenty-four. They waited, therefore, for report of a ship lost with twenty-four lives; no such news came. The new steel freighter Miwaka, on her maiden trip during the storm with twenty-five—not twenty-four—aboard never made her port; no news was ever heard from her; no wreckage ever was found. On this account, throughout the families whose fathers, brothers and sons were the officers and crew of the Miwaka, there stirred for a time a desperate belief that one of the men on the Miwaka was saved; that somewhere, somehow, he was alive and might return. The day of the destruction of the Miwaka was fixed as December 5 by the time at which she passed the government lookout at the straits; the hour was fixed as five o'clock in the morning only by the sounding of the drum.

Storm—the stinging, frozen sleet slash of the February norther whistling down the floe-jammed length of the lake—was assaulting Chicago. So heavy was this frost on the panes of the Fort Dearborn club—one of the staidest of the down-town clubs for men—that the great log fires blazing on the open hearths added appreciable light as well as warmth to the rooms.

The few members present at this hour of the afternoon showed by their lazy attitudes and the desultoriness of their conversation the dulling of vitality which warmth and shelter bring on a day of cold and storm. On one, however, the storm had had a contrary effect. With swift, uneven steps he paced now one room, now another; from time to time he stopped abruptly by a window, scraped from it with finger nail the frost, stared out for an instant through the little opening he had made, then resumed as abruptly his nervous pacing with a manner so uneasy and distraught that, since his arrival at the club an hour before, none even among those who knew him best had ventured to speak to him.

The man who was pacing restlessly and alone the rooms of the Fort Dearborn club on this stormy afternoon was the man who, to most people, bodied forth the life underlying all other commerce thereabouts but the least known, the life of the lakes.

The lakes, which mark unmistakably those who get their living from them, had put their marks on him. Though he was slight in frame with a spare, almost ascetic leanness, he had the wiry strength and endurance of the man whose youth had been passed upon the water. He was very close to sixty now, but his thick, straight hair was still jet black except for a slash of pure white above one temple; his brows were black above his deep blue eyes. His acquaintances, in explaining him to strangers, said he had lived too much by himself of late; he and one man servant shared the great house which had been unchanged—and in which nothing appeared to have needed replacing—since his wife left him, suddenly and unaccountably, about twenty years before. People said he looked more French, referring to his father who was known to have been a skin-hunter north of Lake Superior in the '50s but who later married an English girl at Mackinac and settled down to become a trader in the woods of the North peninsula, where Benjamin Corvet was born.

During his boyhood men came to the peninsula to cut timber; young Corvet worked with them and began building ships. Thirty-five years ago he had been only one of the hundreds with his fortune in the fate of a single bottom; but today in Cleveland, in Duluth, in Chicago, more than a score of great steamers under the names of various interdependent companies were owned or controlled by him and his two partners, Sherrill and young Spearman.

He was a quiet, gentle-mannered man. At times, however, he suffered from fits of intense irritability, and these of late had increased in frequency and violence. It had been noticed that these outbursts occurred generally at times of storm upon the lake, but the mere threat of financial loss through the destruction of one or even more of his ships was not now enough to cause them; it was believed that they were the result of some obscure physical reaction to the storm, and that this had grown upon him as he grew older.

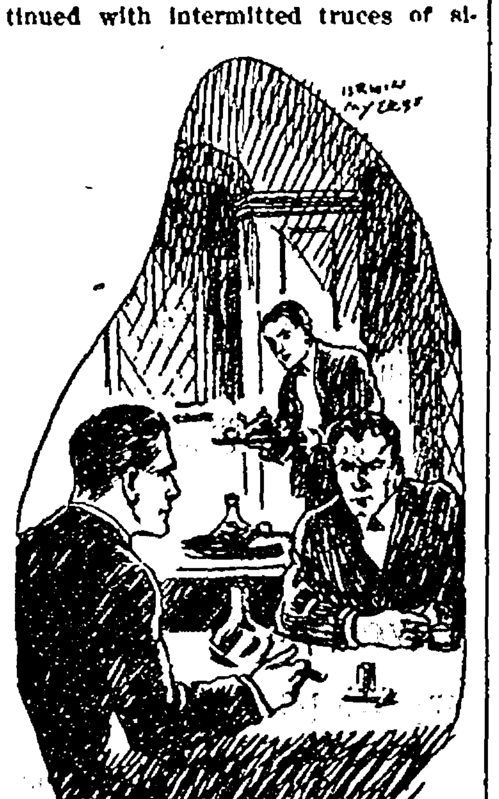
Today his irritability was so marked, his uneasiness so much greater than anyone had seen it before, that the attendant whom Corvet had sent, a half hour earlier, to reserve his usual table for him in the grill—"The table by the second window"—had started away without daring to ask whether the table was to be set for one or more. Corvet himself had corrected the omission: "For two," he had shot after the man.

The tables, at this hour, were all unoccupied. Corvet crossed to the one he had reserved and sat down; he turned immediately to the window at his side and scraped on it a little clear opening through which he could see the storm outside. Ten minutes later he looked up sharply but did not rise, as the man he had been awaiting—Spearman, the younger of his two partners—came in.

Spearman seated himself, his big, powerful hands clasped on the table, his gray eyes studying Corvet closely. The waiter took the order and went away.

When he returned, the two men were obviously in bitter quarrel. Corvet's tone, low pitched but violent, sounded steadily in the room, though his words were inaudible. The waiter, as he set the food upon the table, felt relief that Corvet's outburst had fallen on other shoulders than his.

For nearly an hour the quarrel continued with intermitted truces of silence. The waiter, listening, as waiters always do, caught at times single sentences.



For Nearly an Hour the Quarrel Continued, With Intermitted Truces of Silence.

"You have had that idea for some time?" he heard from Corvet.

"We have had an understanding for more than a month."

"How definite?"

Spearman's answer was not audible, but it more intensely agitated Corvet; he dropped his fork and, after that, made no pretense of eating.

The waiter, following this, caught only single words. "Sherrill"—that, of course, was the other partner. "Constance"—that was Sherrill's daughter. The other names he heard were names of ships. But, as the quarrel went on, the manners of the two men changed; Spearman, who at first had been assailed by Corvet, now was assailing him. Corvet sat back in his seat, while Spearman pulled at his cigar and now and then took it from his lips and gestured with it between his fingers, as he jerked some ejaculation across the table.

Corvet leaned over to the frosted window, as he had done when alone, and looked out. Spearman shot a comment which made Corvet wince and draw back from the window; then Spearman rose. Corvet looked up at him once and asked a question, to which Spearman replied with a snap of the burnt match down on the table; he turned abruptly and strode from the room. Corvet sat motionless.

The revulsion to self-control, sometimes even to apology, which ordinarily followed Corvet's bursts of irritation had not come to him; his agitation plainly had increased. He pushed from him his uneaten luncheon and got up slowly. He went out to the coat room, where the attendant handed him his coat and hat.

He winced as he stepped out into the smarting, blinding swirl of sleet, but his shrinking was not physical; it was mental, the unconscious reaction to some thought the storm called up. The hour was barely four o'clock, but so dark was it with the storm that the shop windows were lit; motorcars, slipping and skidding up the broad boulevard, with headlights burning, kept their signals clattering constantly to warn other drivers blinded by the snow. The sleet-swept sidewalks were almost deserted; here or there, before a hotel or one of the shops, a limousine came to the curb, and the passengers dashed swiftly across the walk to shelter.

Corvet turned northward along Michigan avenue, facing into the gale. The sleet beat upon his face and lodged in the folds of his clothing without his heeding it.

He continued to go north. He had not seemed, in the beginning, to have made conscious choice of this direction; but now he was following it purposely. He stopped once at a shop which sold men's things to make a telephone call. He asked for Miss Sherrill when the number answered; but he did not wish to speak to her, he said; he wanted merely to be sure she would be there if he stopped in to see her in half an hour. Then—north again. He crossed the bridge. Now, fifteen minutes later, he came in sight of the lake once more.

Great houses, the Sherrill house among them, here face the Drive, the bridle path, the strip of park, and the wide stone esplanade which edges the lake. Covert crossed to this esplanade. He did not stop at the Sherrill house or look toward it, but went on fully a quarter of a mile beyond it; then he came back, and with an oddly strained and queer expression and attitude, he stood staring out into the lake.

Suddenly he turned. Constance Sherrill, seeing him from a window of her home, had caught a cape about her and run out to him.

"Uncle Benny!" she hailed him with the affectionate name she had used with her father's partner since she was a baby. "Uncle Benny, aren't you coming in?"

"Yes," he said vaguely. "Yes, of course." He made no move but remained staring at her. "Connie!" he exclaimed suddenly, with strange reproach to himself in his tone. "Connie! Dear little Connie!"

"Why?" she asked him. "Uncle Benny, what's the matter?"

"Has Spearman been here today?" he asked, not looking at her.

"To see father?"

"No; to see you."

"No."

He seized her wrist. "Don't see him, when he comes!" he commanded.

"Uncle Benny!"

"Don't see him!" Corvet repeated. "He's asked you to marry him, hasn't he?"

Connie could not refuse the answer. "Yes."

"And you?"

"Why—why, Uncle Benny, I haven't answered him yet."

"Then don't—don't, do you understand, Connie?"

She hesitated, frightened for him. "I'll—I'll tell you before I see him, if you want me to, Uncle Benny," she granted.

"But if you shouldn't be able to tell me then, Connie; if you shouldn't—want to then?" The humility of his look perplexed her; if he had been any other man—any man except Uncle Benny—she would have thought some shameful and terrifying threat hung over him; but he broke off sharply. "I must go home," he said uncertainly. "I must go home; then I'll come back. Connie, you won't give him an answer till I come back, will you?"

"No." He got her promise, half frightened, half bewildered; then he turned at once and went swiftly away from her.

She ran back to the door of her father's house. From there she saw him reach the corner and turn west to go to Astor street. He was walking rapidly and did not hesitate.

How strangely he had acted! Constance's uneasiness increased when the afternoon and evening passed without his coming back to see her as he had promised, but she reflected he had not set any definite time when she was to expect him. During the night her anxiety grew still greater; and in the morning she called his house up on the telephone, but the call was unanswered. An hour later, she called again; still getting no result, she called her father at his office, and told him of her anxiety about Uncle Benny, but without repeating what Uncle Benny had said to her or the promise she had made to him. Her father made light of her fears; Uncle Benny, he reminded her, often acted queerly in bad weather. Only partly reassured, she called Uncle Benny's house several more times during the morning, but still got no reply; and after luncheon she called her father again, to tell him that she had resolved to get some one to go over to the house with her.

Her father, to her surprise, forbade this rather sharply; his voice, she realized, was agitated and excited, and she asked him the reason; but instead of answering her, he made her repeat to him her conversation of the afternoon before with Uncle Benny, and now he questioned her closely about it. But when she, in her turn, tried to question him, he merely put her off and told her not to worry.

In the late afternoon, as dusk was drawing into dark, she stood at the window, with one of those delusive hopes which come during anxiety that, because it was the time of day at which she had seen Uncle Benny walking by the lake the day before, she might see him there again, when she saw her father's motor approaching. It was coming from the north, not from the south as it would have been if he was coming from his office or his club, and it had turned into the Drive from the west. She knew, therefore, that he was coming from Uncle Benny's house, and, as the car swerved and wheeled in, she ran out into the hall to meet him.

He came in without taking off hat or coat; she could see that he was perturbed, greatly agitated.

"What is it, father?" she demanded. "What has happened?"

"I do not know, my dear."

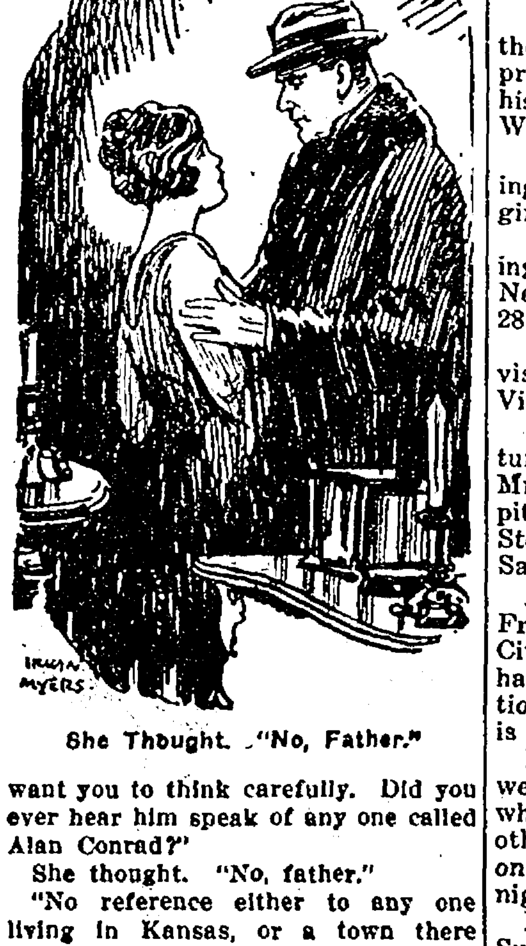
"It is something—something that has happened to Uncle Benny?"

"I am afraid so, dear—yes. But I do not know what it is that has happened, or I would tell you."

He put his arm about her and drew her into a room opening off the hall—his study. He made her repeat again to him the conversation she had had with Uncle Benny and tell him how he had acted; but she saw that what she told him did not help him.

Then he drew her toward him.

"Tell me, little daughter. You have been a great deal with Uncle Benny and have talked with him; I want you to think carefully. Did you ever hear him speak of any one called Alan Conrad?"



She Thought. "No, Father."

She thought. "No, father."

"No reference either to any one living in Kansas, or a town there called Blue Rapids?"

"No, father. Who is Alan Conrad?"

"I do not know, dear. I never heard the name until to-day, and Harry Spearman had never heard it. But it appears to be intimately connected in some way with what was troubling Uncle Benny yesterday. He wrote a letter yesterday to Alan Conrad in Blue Rapids and mailed it himself; and afterward he tried to get it back, but it already had been taken up and was on its way. I have not been able to learn anything more about the letter than that. To-day that name, Alan Conrad, came to me in quite another way, in a way which makes it certain that it is closely connected with whatever has happened to Uncle Benny. You are quite sure you never heard him mention it, dear?"

"Quite sure, father."

He released her and, still in his hat and coat, went swiftly up the stairs. She ran after him and found him standing before a highboy in his dressing room. He unlocked a drawer in the highboy, and from within the drawer he took a key. Then, still disregarding her, he hurried back downstairs.

As she followed him, she caught up a wrap and pulled it around her. He had told the chauffeur, she realized now, to wait; but as he reached the door, he turned and stopped her.

"I would rather you did not come with me, little daughter. I do not know at all what it is that has happened—I will let you know as soon as I find out."

The roads about the country have been getting into very nice shape lately, and automobiling has again become a pleasure. The roads generally are pretty good, with a few spots here and there where the drag has not been used to advantage and a load of gravel is needed to fill the ruts. The Belmond to Garner road is in good shape, and from Garner on to Mason City the pavement gives the limit as the speed of your car. We phrophasy that this road will see some traffic this summer, as it is a very pretty drive and an excellent highway.

HAMPTON FACTORY NOT TO RUN THIS YEAR

The Hampton-Kelly Canning Company will not operate the plant during the coming season, according to a statement made today by H. G. Kelley, manager of the company.

This will not be very good news to the many farmers of this vicinity who have been growing sweet corn the past several years at a handsome profit. However, everybody knows that business conditions during last year and at the close of 1920 put many business concerns in the country on the rocks, and it effected all lines of trade. The canning trade was hit the same as other industries, and with a large part of the 1921 pack of sweet corn still on hand officials of the Hampton-Kelly Company decided not to operate this season.

It looks like conditions would be largely improved by this time next year, so that the factory could operate as usual. Many canning factories over the country did not operate last year, and many of them will not operate this year.—Chronicle.

Belmond Wins Field Meet from Goldfield

Take Dual Meet From Neighboring Town By Large Majority

HOPE TO HOLD OTHERS

Last Saturday afternoon Belmond defeated Goldfield in a Dual Track Meet 79-2 3-34 1-3.

Last year was the first time the present students body have tried Track and this year, for beginners, we have made an excellent showing. Only a small crowd was out last Saturday afternoon to witness the Meet, but those present were not disappointed.

We hope to have two Dual or Invitation Meets this year, but we are handicapped in holding Meets in Belmond because we lack an Athletic Field for the track events. The following is the result of the Belmond-Goldfield meet, Agard of Goldfield being the individual winner.

The Senior class play will be given May 19. If you like to laugh, plan on seeing "Clarence" on that date.

Miss Dodd and Mr. Christie went to Kanawha Tuesday night to judge a declamatory contest.

Belmond High School continued its winning streak by defeating Sheffield last Friday. The score was 7-2. Belmond scored two runs on balls the first inning. Sheffield scored two the same inning on errors.

Klooz, pitching for Sheffield, was touched for ten hits, while Madsen allowed but three scattered hits.

Thursday of this week the team leaves for the State Tournament at Ames. Belmond has won seven games consecutively this year, and should make a good showing.

The musical program offered by the music department of the Grade school will be Monday evening May 8, at 8 o'clock, in the school auditorium. The vocal department offers the Japanese sketch, "A Box of Dolls" by third grade, and the operetta "The Fairy Rose" by fourth and fifth grades. Two instrumental numbers from Miss Ely's class will be given.

Solo—Richard Gowdy.

Trio—Ruth Jones, Lucille Skouge, Ruth Ramsay.

Miss Rourk has assisted in the drill. Accompanyments by Marjorie Williams. Admission 35c and 25c.

Joe Scott, of the Battery Station, accompanied by Clem Cannon, made a business trip via auto to Mason City, Friday. Ye ed went along for the ride, and it was sure some ride on that paved road from Garner to Mason City. Clear Lake is starting to spruce up for the summer border, and many new cottages are being constructed along the lake front. The paved road circles the lake for several miles, and makes a very pleasant drive.

McGUIRE—LESLIE

On Saturday morning, April 29, occurred the wedding of Miss Laurette McGuire, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. McGuire of Belmond and Mr. Humphrey Leslie, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Leslie of Waverly, at St. Francis Church, Belmond.

Rev. Father Eardly officiated at the ceremony, and celebrated the High Mass which followed. The alters and sanctuary were decorated for the occasion with ferns and cut flowers, and the choir sang, besides the Easter Mass, several appropriate hymns.

The bride was very attractive in dress of brown canton crepe with gloves and hat of contrasting shades. She carried a bridal bouquet of Ophelia roses tied with white tulle.

The breakfast at noon was served at the home of the bride's parents to the members of the Leslie and McGuire families.

The groom is a graduate of the law department of Notre Dame University, and at present is practicing law in Waverly, where the young couple will make their home.

Miss McGuire is a graduate of St. Mary's College, Notre Dame, Indiana, and is a vey talented and accomplished young woman.

Belmond friends, with whom the Independent joins, extend their hearty good wishes for a happy and prosperous life to this fine young couple.

SHOWER FOR MISS McGUIRE

A few of the most intimate friends of Miss Laurette McGuire arranged in her honor, a very pretty shower on Friday evening April 21st the event being held at the Delaney home, which was attractively decorated with cupids and other symbols significant of the occasion. The fore part of the evening was spent in card playing. Score cards were in the form of wedding bells.

Very dainty refreshments were served. The tables were tastily decorated in the color scheme yellow and white which was used throughout the evening. The favors were a combination of hearts and tulips with small candles which were burned to determine in honor of whom the next shower should be given. Large yellow candles also adorned each table.

After refreshments a loud knock was heard at the door and it was announced that there had been delivered a huge May Basket for Miss McGuire, who with help placed it in the middle of the floor and at once examined the contents. The many useful and beautiful gifts, which the basket contained, could only partly show the love and esteem with which Miss McGuire is held by her girl friends by whom she will be missed. The shower coming as a total surprise as is did helped toward the success and merriment of the evening. Hostesses were Miss Lorette Delaney, Nellie Delaney, Maude Newgard, May Tracy, Viva Rourk and Mary Wallace.

GOODELL NEWS

Mr. Frank McNulty returned home from Chicago on April 26th.

Mr. Henning Sandberg of Iowa Falls was in town last Wednesday and Thursday looking after the interest of the Iowa Falls Electric Co.

Wm. Allaben was confined to his bed a few days last week with the flu. Albert Nolte carried the mail for him.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Conwell were over to Britt last Wednesday.

Miss Maude Griggs went to Ventura on Monday where she will spend a few days helping her father fix up his cottage.

Mrs. Monroe Graeber called on Mrs. Mark Wilson last Thursday.

Mrs. T. O. Letch was in Garner last Wednesday.

On Saturday Mr. and Mrs. O. Nelson, Miss Selma Sandberg, and Amos Hanson autoed to Albert Lee, Minn. They returned Sunday evening.

An unusual number of farmers are spraying their fruit trees this year. Mr. George Luick who lives west of town has about 700 trees to spray. He has a power spray which will be operated by the county agent and a special man from Ames. This orchard will be supervised by an expert horculturist for the next two years to prove the benefit of spraying.

The play put on by the seniors of the High school, given last Friday was a decided success. Each one acted his part well. Miss Dows is to be congratulated for putting on such a good play. It meant much hard work on the part of the teacher and students.

Mr. Wm. Vescelius of Britt was in town Monday meeting the voters. He is a candidate for sheriff of Hancock County.

Mr. Roach from the Iowa State Agricultural College spoke to the farmers at the Opera house Monday afternoon on the value of the motion picture machine in their township meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Thompson, of Fort Dodge, accompanied by their daughter, Mrs. Spooner, of Storm Lake, and her two children came last Saturday to spend the week end at the home of relatives here.

RAT CRUSADE COMING FINE

By R. M. Edwards

Lively Directors Meeting

The regular monthly board of directors meeting of the county farm bureau was held at the county agent's office Friday afternoon April 28th. Twenty-four officers and directors representing ten townships of the county were in attendance at this meeting.

The main topic of discussion at this meeting was the matter of purchasing a motion picture projector to be used by the county agent in conducting the township farm bureau meetings. Chas. Roach of the visual instruction department at Ames gave an interesting discussion of the use and advantages of the motion picture machine in county agent work and had expected to give a demonstration of this machine but was unable to do so on account of certain parts of the machine being broken in shipment. The directors voted to ask Mr. Roach to return for the next board meeting for the demonstration. Other matters of interest including county wide farm bureau picnic July 4th, boys' and girls' club work and the transaction of regular business.

The directors of the farm bureau voted to make the county wide farm bureau picnic on July 4th, a county wide Fourth of July celebration and invite all towns of the county, in fact every man, woman and child, to take part in this Fourth of July celebration since no town in Wright county has made plans for a celebration this year. A farm bureau committee consisting of the county agent, Cornelius Thompson, Grant township, and E. A. Patton, Blaine township, was appointed by the farm bureau president to meet with various commercial clubs of the county and determine whether or not they wish to take active part in this county wide celebration. In case the various towns of the county wish to cooperate with the farm bureau in celebrating the Fourth this year, committees will be appointed with representatives from both the farm bureau and the towns of the county to plan and organize the big celebration. Arrangements will be made to secure a prominent speaker who will deliver a patriotic address, in keeping with the occasion.

Interesting Program

The regular monthly Wall Lake farm bureau social was held at the Wall Lake Center school Friday evening, April 28th, and an interesting program arranged by Miss Nessa Howieson,, the local school teacher, was given. Short talks were given by the county agent and Rev. W. N. Bump but the most interesting part of the social was the program which was given by the boys and girls of the local school.

Farmers of Wall Lake township and surrounding territory are wideawake to the social life of their community as is shown by the fact that they have raised somewhere in the neighborhood of $700 at an auction a short time ago, to be used in remodeling the Wall Lake church which they expect to use as a community meeting place for farm bureau meetings and all social gatherings of that territory.

How About Spraying?

The apple orchard can be made more productive by putting on two or three good sprays at the proper time. Three sprays are preferable and with late fall and winter apples it is best to put on a fourth spray about the first of August. The first or cluster bud spray should be put on when the buds are turning pink and just before they are open. The next spray should be put on when about 95 per cent of the petals have falen. The third spray should be put on about three weeks after the second spray.

If you have the liquid lime sulphur use eight to ten quarts, but if you have the dry lime sulphur use six to eight pounds and mix one and one-fourth pounds of dry arsenate of lead into fifty gallons of water.

Spray the Bugs

Here are a few spraying formulas that might be valuable to you during the next month or two:

Currants and Gooseberries: For currant worms on both gooseberries and curants, spray just after blooming and again at the first apearance of the worms, using one pound dry led arsenate to twenty gallons of water.

Potatoes: For tip burn (so-called blight) spray when burning first appears and a second application in from five to seven days, using a pressure sprayer if possible and get the solution on the under side of the leaves. Use one pint of "Black Leaf 40" to seventy-five gallons of water. The under side of the leaf must be reached as the insect causing the burn is found there.

Cabbage: For cabbage worms start dusting when leaves are one-half grown and continue until the leaves are well closed in. Use dry lead arsenate with an equal amount of air slacked lime.

Plant Lice: Fof plant lice of all kinds, as soon as they are discovered spray with a solution of nicotine sulphate or tobacco solution, one pint to 100 gallons of water.

Rat Killing Going Strong

The county wide rat killing contest which was started by the farm bureau a few weeks ago has brought out some keen rivalry between the different boys of the county and the rats are beginning to fall for the murderous attack by the youngsters.

Boys! there are still twenty days left before the contest closes. There is still time for you to get into the contest and make a killing and perhaps win one of the five prizes which are being arranged. Remember about $50 to $60 will be given away by the farm bureau and towns of the county to the champion rat killers.

Boys who still wish to enter the contest should do so by starting an attack on the rats, saving the tails of the rats killed and reportiing to the secretary of the commercial club in his nearest town at the end of each week, the number of rats killd. This contest is open to all boys of the county both from towns and the country.

COMMUNITY WELFARE CLUB

The Community Welfare Club meeting last Friday was an inspiration to those who attended. The club voted to join the state federation of women's clubs. It was found that the club must belong in order to get the outside talent without charge. These women speak only to federated clubs except their expenses. When they speak to unfederated clubs they could command a good price, so the club decided it would be cheaper to pay the federation dues. The secretary read a letter from the chairman of the state federation which made the club feel like a lot of naughty children getting scolded for trying to get something for nothing.

The playground committee were asked to investigate and see what the club could do for the new Tyrrell Park.

After the business meeting the club was addressed by Mrs. J. E. Blythe from Mason City. Mrs. Stanbury was given a rising vote of thanks for bringing Mrs. Blythe down in her car.

Mrs. Blythe was a very interesting speaker. First she talked about citizenship, impressing the fact that it was now a woman's duty to vote, and learn to vote inteligently. Everybody was so interested they were sorry to have her stop to talk about birds, though her talk on birds was much enjoyed by all. Mrs. Blythe feeds the birds tallow and crumbs during the winter months.

Mrs. Francis Whitley from Webster City will be the speaker at the next meting. Mrs. Rosecrans asked everybody to be there and bring a friend.

CONGREGATIONAL NOTES

S. U. Leinbach, Pastor

We were within twelve of the mark last Sunday. Let us go over the mark next Sunday at 10 o'clock.

The annual May day supper is now in progress and it is hoped that the Aid Society will do well as they are undertaking large things this year.

Miss Inez Boughton left Monday for Cedar Rapids to attend the State S. S. Convention as the representative of our church. She will have some good things to bring back to us so be sure and hear her report next Sabbath.

The members of the Aid will please note that there will be a business meeting of the society on Thursday afternoon in the church parlors.

Bible study class Thursday eve, at 8:00. Miss Francis Baker will lead the young peoples part of the program after which will be given a short stereopticon service.

Let each one help make Sunday a banner day. A week from Sunday is Mother's Day and there will be special services on that day.

"TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM"

Probably few, if any, printed or acted stories have caused more lumps to arise in throats, or furtive wiping away of tears, than "Ten Nights in a bar room." Our fathers and mothers grandfathers and grandmothers, to the number of probably millions, read it and went to see it. And now that the great story has been filmed, they will go once more and take the children and grandchildren with them to sympathize again with the weakness of poor Joe Morgan, to be stirred to heights of anger by the plotting of Simon Slade and Harvey Green, to weep over the sad death of little Mary, and to laugh over the small-town comedy antics of Sample Surtchell and his romantic Mehitable. The very title, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," stirs up memories of laughter and tears long forgotten.

Arrow presents
"TEN NIGHTS in a BAR-ROOM"
Starring JOHN LOWELL
A BLAZED TRAIL PRODUCTION

Let it not be thought that the film version of this famous story is prohibition proganda. Far from it. The lesson is there—and there more strongly than it ever was in book form or on the spoken stage—but the picturization is a strong, well acted play of family life in a small town and it is teeming with appeal to the sentiments of father love and mother love. There is also a sweet romance through it all—so devoid of the eternal triangle of sex problem as to make this phrase of the picture delightfully refreshing.

The story is filled with action and the scenes are of great beauty and wonderful in detail. John Lowell, who plays the part of Joe Morgan, the village drunkard in the original story, portrays admirably the part of a loving husband and father, strong in anger as in love, but with a weakness for drink which brings sorrow and suffering to an idolized wife and child and finally death to the little one. In his regeneration, after his realization of the depths of despair to which he has brought his oved ones, Mr. Lowell's work is such that we love him as much as we hated him before.

Entirely Different Way of Managing Used

Meeting Called For Sunday Of All Players Who Wish To Try For Team

BOARD TO DIRECT TEAM

Full arrangements have been made for organizing a base ball team for Belmond this year. The details of several things have yet to be worked out, but the main "objectives" have been taken and plans are now under full sway toward having a team.

The base ball team this year is to be managed and controlled under an entirely new and different system than has ever been used here before. At a previous meeting of the public, a board of directors, five in number, were chosen by the public vote of those present. These five directors are:

Howard Moore
Ed. Carlston
Jim Adams
Gus Nissen
Dell Rankins

This board of representative business men are the "supreme court" in all base ball affairs in Belmond. It will be their business to supervise as a whole, arrange for finances, and chose a business manager and team manager. This was done at a meeting Tuesday evening, when they elected M. C. Barry as business manager, and T. L. Finn, as team manager.

Duties of the business manager shall be to schedule games, to attend any business details with visiting teams, and the like. That of team manager will be to manage the team, both in practice and in games, and he will have full authority in such and will be held responsible for same.

The team will start with all home men, including the pitcher. A home game, between two Belmond teams, will be the first game, followed by games with other towns. The first games will probably be within the next two weeks.

Next Sunday afternoon, at 2:00 o'clock all players are asked to be at the ball grounds to try out for the team. They are asked to bring all base ball equipment they have, with them: bats, gloves, suits, and the like, by request of the management. At this time the team will be shaped up from the best material available.

Season tickets will be sold at $5, which price includes war tax. It is hoped to finance the start by this means. No donation or subscriptions are to be asked for; it is to be a straight business proposition from start to finish.

Under this plan of management and conducting, a good team should be formed for some good games, and under it the team will probably draw good public support.

COUNTY WILL VOTE ON FAIR GROUNDS

Wright county citizens will be asked to vote for the fairgrounds purchase as a county proposition and the definate figures show that a levy of 1 1-3 mills will raise funds sufficient for the purchase of the grounds. It is hoped to have the supervisors issue a call for a special election to be held at the same time the primaries are held, June 5th, and thus save the extra expense of judges and clerks of election. If June 5th is set for the election, the costs will not be much more than the cost of giving notice and printing the balots It will be very reasonable.

A levy of 1 1-3 mills will pay the purchase price and then there will be no bonds and no interest of any kind to pay. This will give the county a fairgrounds and judging from sentiment already expressed by leading farmers from every section of the county, it should carry. The farmers want a county fair. Stockmen realize its value. Now if those who favor it will get out and vote for the proposition, there is no reason to doubt its winning. No organized opposition will arise, it is hoped for the for the cost is so small that few men will oppose it.

The average property in Clarion is assessed at around $650. Not all of them, for the smaller residences are mpch lower than that, but it will average around $650. A 1 1-3 mill levy will raise the taxes on such a property for one year exactly 87c. The average quarter section farm is assessed at $3 500. A 1 1-3 mill levy on such a farm will pay $4.56 for one year. Surely it is worth that much to the average land owner to have a county fairgrounds and park for public gatherings like the Farm Bureau held last year.—Wright County News.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

A newspaper often times prints things which, to some people, seem strange, inasmuch as they do not understand where the paper secured the information. Any newspaper gathers information, news, like a magnet gathers steel filings; sometimes more, sometimes less, depending on whether there is anything to gather. Sources of information are many and varied; people talk, for instance, and a scrap here and another there, put together with one from some other place, gives a complete item.

Perhaps there is a slight "leak" on some big thing which it is desired to keep quiet, on the supposition that what the public doesn't know, won't hurt them. Perhaps someone on the "inside" drops a remark unthinkingly. In itself, it matters little, but passed on, and pieced together with other little remarks or public knowledge, it looms large.

A newspapers business first of all is to print the news. This paper goes on the eight rules of Chas. A. Dana, which he formulated for the guidance of newspaper men. They are:

1. Get the news, all the news and nothing but the news.
2. Copy nothing from another publication without giving credit.
3. Never print an interview without the knowledge and consent of the party interviewed.
4. Never print a paid advertisement as news matter; no sailing under false colors.
5. Never attack the weak and defendless, unless there is some absolute public necessity for so doing.
6. Fifht for your opinions, but do not believe that they contain the whole truth or the only truth.
7. Support your party if you have one; but do not think that all the good men are in it or all the bad ones outside.
8. Above all, believe that humanity is advancing, that there is progress in human affairs, and that as sure as God lives the future will be better than the past or the present.

It has been, and will continue to be, the policy of the Independent to print the news, regardless of whom said news is about. Several times it has been severely criticised for printing news not exactly flattering to the person to whom it pertained, but it is not our policy to favor one over another. Many times news has been left out because to publish it would do more harm than good; again, news has been printed which has met with violent condemnation, but which it was considered would do good in the end.

Only the wrong-doer fears publicity. He who has a clear conscience can face the glare of publicity unafraid, knowing that it can only react in his favor. The fear of what may be said "in the papers" has kept many things down which otherwise might have grown to large proportions. No-one need fear that the newspaper will unjustly condemn them, or unjustly praise them; newspapers as a whole are impartial—they have to be—in the matter of news.

There is a source of immense power in any periodical, to do good, or to do harm. There exists no community in the country where its newspaper, if it would, could not destroy its enemies by the "things that never see print."

If you hear a big commotion in town this summer, don't get overly excited about it; it won't be a fire, a burglary, band concert or ball game; just a dog fight.

Passenger going thru on the Klondike the other day said "What a beautiful cemetery." What did he mean?

Wonder when the Chamber of Commerce is going to elect officers, hold a meeting, do something, or stage a box social?

When you consider the progress that has been made in travel and communication, from "Shanks Mare" to the 200-mile-an-hour airplane, and carved sticks to the wireless, you wonder "what's next?" What do you think COULD be next?

RADIO

MARCONI REALLY FATHER OF RADIO

Story of the Gifted Italian's Work In Development of Air Communication.

While experiments along the line of radio really started as far back as 1827 and hundreds of scientists were interested in solving the problems involved for many years, it was not until 1896 when Senatore Guglielmo Marconi took out his first patent that the mastery of air communication got its first great impetus. His life history is to all practical intents the history of radio communication.

Senatore Guglielmo Marconi, G. C. V. O., L. L. D., D-Sc. M. I. E. E., was born in Bologna, Italy, April 25, 1874. His mother was Irish, while his father was of a family whose mechanical ability was marked. After an education at Leghorn and Bologna, the young man interested himself in the problem of wireless telegraphy, starting his research in 1895. He went to England and in 1896 took out the first patent ever granted for a practical system of wireless telegraphy, by the use of electric waves. His early experiments in England were made at Westbourne Park. Shortly afterward Marconi saw W. H. Preece and at his request made some experiments for officials of the postoffice. Some further experiments were made in May, 1897, in the Bristol channel, wireless communication being established between Lavernock and Brean Down, a distance of nine miles.

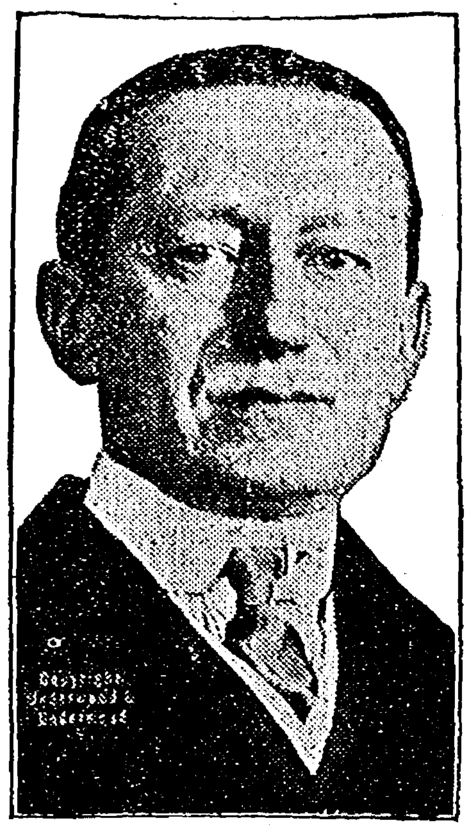
On the invitation of the Italian government Marconi afterward went to Spezia where a land station was erected, which was kept in constant communication with two Italian battleships working from a distance of 12 miles. For this success the Italian government conferred upon Marconi the honor of knighthood. After a return to England further experiments were conducted and on July 20, 1897, the first radio company was formed and two permanent stations erected. In 1898 wireless reports of yacht races in Kingston were made and proved the usefulness and adaptability to which the system lends itself to commercial purposes. In December, 1898, Marconi installed apparatus to provide communication between the South Foreland lighthouse and a lighthouse on the south coast. In 1899 Marconi read a paper on "Wireless Telegraphy" before the Institution of Electrical Engineers in London.

Early in 1901 telegraphic communication was established between two points more than 250 miles distant and at the end of that year Marconi transmitted signals from Poldhu, in Cornwall to St. Johns, Newfoundland. In 1902 he received on board the steamship Philadelphia in the presence of the officers, good messages on the tape when at a distance of over 1,500 miles from the transmitting station and signals at over 2,000 miles. In December, 1902, the station established at Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, under a contract with the Canadian government for transatlantic wireless telegraphy, was put into communication with the Cornwall station at Poldhu and inaugural messages were transmitted to the King of England, the King of Italy and to the London Times. In October, 1903, the steamship Lucania published a daily wireless bulletin from messages received from the Marconi stations. A powerful station at Clifden on the west coast of Ireland was opened early in 1907 for the establishment of commercial relations with the American continent at Glace Bay.

Mr. Marconi's work has been recognized by many governments and seats of learning; he has been decorated by the King of Italy and the late ex-Czar of Russia as an honorary doctor of many universities, including Oxford, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Liverpool and Pennsylvania, besides having received the freedom of the principal Italian cities. In 1914 he was elected a senator in the Italian parliament. He also holds many scientific awards granted by various societies and institutions.

Upon the declaration of war by Italy Senatore Marconi placed his services at the disposal of King Victor and was given the rank of lieutenant in the Italian army. He was employed on important military missions to England by the Italian government and after this service was transferred as temporary commander in the Italian navy. Marconi visited the United States in 1917 as member of the official mission sent by Italy. In 1919 Marconi was appointed plenipotentiary delegate to the peace conference at Paris, and in this capacity signed the peace treaties with Austria and Bulgaria. He was afterward awarded the Italian military cross.

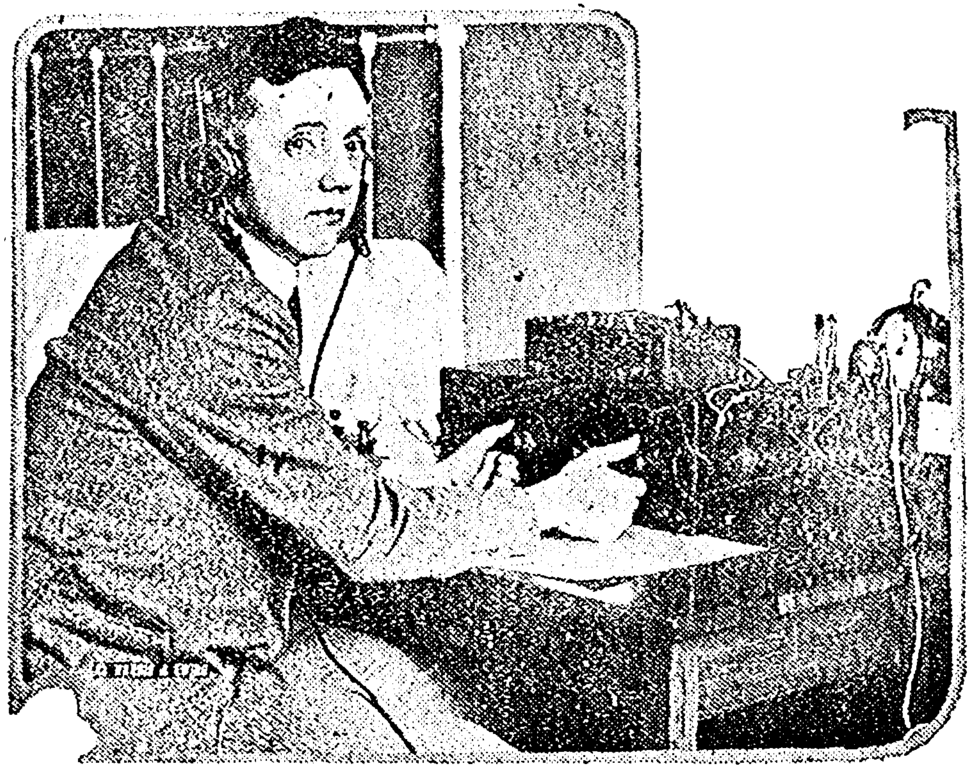
This very important figure in the wireless world, who has received about all the honors possible for the scientific world to bestow upon him, including the Nobel prize, has not given up active work, but is even now engaged in radio telephone experiments.



Guglielmo Marconi.

Radio enthusiasts have increased tenfold within the last few months, it appears from a survey conducted by the Associated Press and covering the central west, Kentucky and Texas. At virtually all points from which reports have been received, there are thousands of radio sets, particularly for purposes of telephony, where at most there were hundreds before.

While the sets are used chiefly for pleasure and experience, they are being put to practical uses in many cases. Numerous farmers are receiving market and weather reports, and police are receiving bulletins. Sermons, concerts, health talks and style talks are transmitted. Universities and professional operators are co-operating.



H. G. Corcoran of Washington, D. C., Needs No Aerial for His Radio Outfit, His Receiving Wire Being Connected to the Wire Springs of His Bed.

Approximate figures are reported from various states and centers indicating the present number of radio sets. According to A. L. Benson of St. Louis, division manager of the American Radio Relay league, about 90,000 radiophones are used in four states as follows: Iowa, 23,000; Missouri, 25,000; Nebraska, 22,000; Kansas, 20,000. In St. Louis alone there are some 2,200. The radiophones chiefly carry concert music, but in many localities farmers have installed them to receive market reports.

Correspondence from Texas reports 263 stations in Dallas, ranging in size from ¼ K. W. to 20 watts, and almost equal numbers in other cities of the state.

Cleveland, Ohio, reports probably 15-000 radio enthusiasts, 1,000 sending stations in greater Cleveland, virtually all amateur, and 10,000 receiving sets used almost nightly. These estimates exclude commercial sets. Cincinnati reports 500 sets.

Indiana has 4,500 amateur radio sets and Indianapolis 1,000 radiophones.

Wisconsin has nearly 1,500 stations, and the number is said by Malcomb P. Hanson, University of Wisconsin operator, to be increasing at the rate of five a day. Nearly 1,000 sets are reported in Milwaukee and vicinity.

North Dakota has a number of receiving stations and a few fairly powerful telegraph and telephone sending stations. The North Dakota Agricultural college is planning to install a 100-watt service for farmers. The vacuum tube is displacing older equipment in the state.

Marked growth is reported at Omaha, Neb., by two radio clubs, which have been in existence only six months. The University of Nebraska and Nebraska Wesleyan, co-operating, send to amateurs in Nebraska, South Dakota, Iowa, Colorado and Kansas.

To Purchase "Movie" Machine

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

The Board of Directors of the Farm Bureau at its last regular meeting discussed the matter of purchasing a motion picture machine to be used by the county agent in conducting the regular township Farm Bureau meetings.

Mr. Chas. Roach of the Visual Instruction Section of the Agri. Extension Department, at Ames, was present at this meeting and gave an interesting lecture on the use of the "Movie" in the farm Bureau work throunghout the State. He had expected to give a demonstration on the operation of the machine but was unable to do so on account of one part of the machine having been damaged in transit. Arrangements were made with Mr. Roach to demonstrate the machine at the next board meeting.

County Agents who have used the moving picture machine in their work all agree that it is well worth what it costs the organization because of the wonderful results it brings in the way of attendance at the meetings. Wright County Farm Bureau will be placed on the movie circuit through the extension department at Ames and will receive new films every two weeks. The films will consist of educational pictures as well as comedies and pictures of general interest.

THAT TWINE OF YOURS

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Have you ordered your twine for 1922 season? If you have not there is still a chance of getting your order in if you will write or call the county agent at once giving the number of pounds you wish to buy and the name of the elevator dealer you prefer to have handle twine for you.

About six carloads of twine have been ordered from the Consumers' Cordage Co., in Minneapolis, the firm through which the order was made last year. Judging from all reports which have come to the county agent regarding the quality of the Farm Bureau twine of the 1920 and 1921 seasons this brand of twine has given entire satisfaction and we therefore have good reason to believe that the 1922 shipment of twine will be equally as good.

If you have not ordered your twine and still wish to do so fill in the blank below indicating the number of pounds you wish to order and mail to the county agent at once.

The following elevators and dealers have agreed to handle the Farm Bureau twine on the basis of 50c per hundred for handling charges making the twine to the farmers at $9.05 for cash settlement:

Clarion Farmers Elevator Co.
Eagle Grove Farmers' Elev. Co.
Belmond Farmers' Elev. Co.
Galt Farmers' Elev. Co.
Holmes Farmers' Elev. Co.
Olaf Framers' Elev. Co.

I, ------------------------------ hereby authorize ------------------ to purchase for me from the Consumers' Cordage Co. of Minneapolis, Minn., ------------------ lbs. of Standard "Bug Proofed" binder twine to be delivered to me at the car at $9.05 per hundred pounds. It is agreed that said ------------- shall notify me of the date of arrival of car of twine and that in the event of my failure to call for twine on such date a penalty of ¼c per pound per month shall be attached until I shall have paid for same. CORN YIELD TESTS

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Plans have just been completed by the county agent for conducting four corn yield test plots to determine the yielding quality of corn from different parts of the county. Two 10 ear samples of seed corn have been collected from each township in the county and will be planted in one of the four experiment plots which have been located in various parts of the county.

The general plan of the corn yield test is to plant eight samples of corn in each of the four experiment plots, planting four rows, forty to eighty rods in length of each man's corn in the test plot. During the corn picking season short sections (perhaps about three or four rods in length) of the experimental rows will be measured off, husked, weighed and tested for moisture when comparison will be made of the different kinds of corn. This part of the experiment will be carried on with the assistance of a farm-crops expert from the experiment station who will lecture to the interested people at that time.

The farmers who have agreed to cooperate with the Farm Bureau in conducting the corn yield tests are A. E. Martin, ½ mile west of Belmond (Belmond Twp.) H. A. Flett, six miles southwest of Dows (Vernon Twp.) Harry Inners, two miles northeast of Goldfield, (Liberty Twp.) Al Watkins, three miles east of Eagle Grove (Dayton Twp.) Men who have contributed samples of corn to this experiment are:

MORE OF CORWITH DESTROYED BY FIRE

Corwith suffered another serious fire Monday morning when four more of her business buildings were destroyed together with stocks of goods. Only two months previous a fire of like size destroyed about one-third of the business district, so that only about one-third of the old business district remains.

The fire started about 2 o'clock in the barber shop and the flames quickly spread to the adjoining buildings, destroying F. L. Applegate's hardware store, Larson's clothing store, Pfeffer's pool hall and the Post Office. Over the pool hall was the legion club rooms and all of their furniture and paraphernalia was destroyed says the Garner Signal.

The loss is estimated at $50,000 to $75,000, but what insurance was carried is not known, as Corwith was cut from the outside world, and Monday and yesterday it was impossible to communicate with them. The loss at the time of the fire in February was estimated at $100,000.

The report is that only the most diligent work on the part of the citizens saved the balance of the town from going Monday morning. Men, women and children worked as hard as they could with their meager fire fighting apparatus to save what buildings still remain.

It was reported last week that a move was on foot to rebuild at least a part of the buildings destroyed in February, and the new buildings as planned will be substantial buildings. It is also likely that some of the buildings destroyed Monday morning will be rebuilt.

Corwith has a good trade territory and even if the entire town was wiped out it would be rebuilt. A fire is always disastrous to the persons who lose, but in time this will be the making of a much better town than Cowith has been, as many of the buildings destroyed were old frames that had stood there for may years.

TO REORGANIZE COMMERCIAL CLUB

Eagle Grove Times: The new directors of the Commercial Club have called a special meeting of the members and everyone interested in Eagle Grove, to be held at the Club rooms, Tuesday evening, May 2nd, at 8 o'clock. A complete plan of reorganization has been formulated and will be discussed and put into effect at this meeting.

The new organization will probably be known as the Chamber of Commerce and will be affilated with the national organization. Every citizen of Eagle Grove should feel it his duty to attend this meeting. A large attendance is necessary.

Phases that will have to be added to the vocabulary in order to keep up to date are "tuning up," "listening in," with "meters," "static," and amplifying" to help out. Have you been bitten yet?

MIXED JURIES A MISTAKE

New York Herald: The country is having its experience with mixed juries and the results are not at all inspiring.

In St. Paul five women were locked over night in a jury room with seven men, the cots on which they slept separated by a curtain. It is no wonder Minnesota men are protesting against the compelling of their wives to serve on juries; no wonder the governor of Minnesota declares that he would not permit his wife to serve on a jury under such conditions; no wonder that Minnesota judges denounce the occurrences as disgraceful.

In Trenton this week a jury of six women and six men was locked up all night because of disagreement. One of the women describes the experience as follows:

"We tried for several hours to reach a verdict but in vain. Then we sent out for cards and newspapers and played cards with the men, and read the papers. After we got tired of this we took the cushions off the seats and took naps about the room. The men were considerate of us. All the women accepted the experience good naturedly, but some expressed anxiety as to how matters were going at home. One women told me her husband put the children to bed and in the morning dressed them, preparer their breakfast and sent them to school."

There's a picture of progress and emancipation for you! The wife passing the night miserably in a jury room while half the jurors are men while the husband at home dresses the children and prepares their breakfast.

It is futile to say that sensible officials would have provided privacy for the women jurors. Fro centuries it has been a custom not to separate a jury. In this and most other states the law provides that the jury shall be "kept together." If the custodians of a jury were to separate the women jurors from the men, the losing side of the case would claim a mistrial.

The mixed jury will not work. If the present laws force women to serve on juries the law should be changed and made optional with the women, and if women are determined to get on juries, let it be so arranged that the juries be all women or all men.

New York state which has not opened the jury gate to women, can learn a lesson from experiences in Minnesota and New Jersey.

CORN BORER IS NOT A DANGER TO IOWA

Mistaking other pests in the cornfields for the European corn borer, many farmers have become unnecessarily alarmed over their crop, says Dr. F. A. Fenton, acting state entomologist at Iowa State College.

The ear worm, a native pest which was prevalent last year and which feeds on the kernels near the top of the ear, has been mistaken for the borer by many. The stalk borer, which cuts into the stalks, but does no serious damage, and the boring smatweed caterpillar also have been found in cornfields, and have been mistaken for the borer, Mr. Fenton says. None of these pests is serious.

So far there have been no outbreaks of the European borer closer than Michigan and the quarantine was merely placed on the state to keep out infested seed.

The places for holding these demonstrations will be worked out later by a committee and will be announced by the township cooperators and through the local papers.

"WILD CAT" STOCK AGAIN

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Information comes from the State Federation office at Des Moines that the "Wild Cat" stock salesmen are operating again in the State of Iowa. A so-called real estate firm has representatives out soliciting the farmers and asking them to list their farms for sale under a one sided contract. The farm owner must pay down $25 when listing the farm, the company agreeing to advertise the farm. This they can do with a little 15 or 20c ad and then declare that there is no demand. They have the $25 to their good. 1 per cent commission is charged and 30 days notice is required before land can be withdrawn from sale.

A second contract provides for appraisal of the land and gives the company the right to sell at the appraised value. If the appraised price is low enough the company may make the purchase and still collect the 1 per cent commision. They may also collect the commission if the farmer sells his farm himself. Many are the schemes to make a little easy money.

WATKINS GROWING HUBAM

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Al Watkins, three miles east of Eagle Grove, has sown twenty acres to "Hubam" annual sweet clover using oats as a nurse crop, and expects to plow this clover under in the fall as a green manure crop.

Hubam has been recommended very highly as a green manure crop and farmers in the vicinity of Eagle Grove are watching with great interest the twenty acre patch of Hubam which Mr. Watkins has put in. A strip of red clover perhaps about two or three rods wide has been sown along side the Hubam in order that the two clovers may be compared in the results they give when used as a green manuure crop.

STANLEY HOWIESON ROUGH ON RATS

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Stanley Howieson, a thirteen year old boy, from Wall Lake Township holds the record so far for the number of rats killed in the rat killing crusade which is being conducted by the Farm Bureau. Stanley reported 128 rats in one week and we presume that with such a record he will continue in his murderous campaign upon rats of his territory.

Boys! here's your chance to get in on the contest for the county wide prize money. The contest does not close until May 20th, so there is still plenty of time to get your name in the ring, and make an effort to win a part of the $60. 00 in cash prizes which have been arranged through the cooperation of the Farm Bureau with the towns of Wright County. Most of the towns of the county have agreed to contribute $10.00 each toward the prize money which will be awarded in about four or five different prizes to the different boys having the highest number of rats to their credit.

Boys who still wish to enter this rat killing contest should write the county agent at once and make a weekly report of the number of rats killed.

FACTS ABOUT THE IOWA WOOL POOL

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)
(By Iowa Fleece Wool Growers' Ass'n)

We have received many letters from county agents and consignors in which many questions are asked about the handling of wool in the pool and the method of marketing same. These are questions which have been asked by their constituents and it is impossible for them to answer them satisfactory. For that reason we believe that all county agents and county pool managers, especially in counties which have consigned wool in the past two years, should have full information in regard to the handling of this wool and the conditions that surround it.

We are preparing a circular which contains much valuable information in regard to shipping marking sacks and general interest to pool managers.

Some questions have arisen regarding the sale of wool before the rise in prices which came a few weeks ago. In answering these questions, we should go over the conditions of the market during the past season and should also study the situation to see if any agencies or individuals other than our own selling agency foresaw this rise. You will remember that during the larger part of the 1921 season wool prices remained on approximately the same level as prices received for the 1920 clip with slight variations among the different grades. This was perfectly natural, for government figures showed that there was a considerable surplus of wool in

Corn Test 97 Per Cent

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

The county wide corn germination test which was completed last week by the county agent gave an average test of 97 per cent strong, 1 per cent weak and 2 per cent dead kernels. This seems unusually high for a county wide germination test but those who have not tested their seed corn should not take it for granted that their seed has strong vitality and fail to make the proper test of their corn.

This test was quite representative of the entire county since from five to ten (100 kernel) samples were collected from each township in the county altho the result obtained from this test is no assurance that all of Wright County's seed corn has such high germinating qualities.

Don't be satisfied until you have made a test of your seed corn because it may be affected by the dry rot mould which judging from outward appearance is very deceiving.

FIND FARM BUREAU TAX IS SMALL ITEM

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Agitation in some counties for the aboltion of county aid to the Farm Bureaus has caused the Fayette county bureau officers to figure out just what the average farmer pay by taxation toward support of the bureau.

The situation as to a township and as to a large and to a small taxpayer are summarized in n article by O. W. Stevenson, seretary of the bureau, in the curent number of the Fayette County Farmers Exchange published by the bureau. He says:

"I have figured that the farmers and farm owners of Smithfield township for the year 1921 contributed $121.36 toward the $3,000 county aid to the Farm Bureau. In Smithfield township for 1921 I pay a tax of $279.84 on a 263 acre farm and part of the personal property thereon. I have carefully figured the matter out and find that $1.12 of this 1921 tax of $279.84 goes to support the bureau. The average renter pays a tax of less than $25.00 and he pays by taxation 10 cents or less per year for the suport of the bureau and the county agent. Nearly half the farmers of Iowa are renters. How much would they decrease their family expenses by obolishing the county agent?

WANT NO FREE SEED

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Commenting on the action of the House of Representatives in Washington in putting back into the agricultural appropriation bill the item of $360,000 for free seeds which was cut out by the committee, J. W. Coverdale, secretary of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said:

"Farmers do not want free seed. They view with disgust and not approval the action of any congressman in sending them, under government frank, a lot of free cucumber seed designed primarily to take the place of campaign cigars. The Farm Bureau stands for economy in government. This little item of $360,000 for government free seed would be a good place to begin governmental economies. The Farm Bureau is unalterably opposed to free seeds and has gone on record time and time again to this effect."

We are quite willing to have all wrong severely punished, provided we are the judge of right and wrong.

School Notes

We observed Arbor day by planting fourteen walnut trees along the west side of the school yard and also by clearing the yard of all rubbish. The high school planted the trees. The cleaning of of school ground was accomplished by the whole school.

Leslie Hopkey received a badly sprained ankle while playing during the last recess last Friday afternoon. Latest reports say that he is getting along nicely.

We shall make use of the school plot this year by planting it ti potatoes the seed of which will be treated for scab. We also expect to experiment with soy beans and Huban clover. The latter is an annual sweet clover discovered by Prof. Hughes of Iowa State College, while he was exploring in Alabama.

The Agriculture class is getting some practical experience along the line of pruning orchards and vineyards. If we can find means of transportation, we expect to visit the Earl Ferris Nursery at Hampton, in the near future.

Last Tuesday evening, May 2nd was the last "Movie" on the circuit sent out by the Visual Instruction Service, Ames, Iowa. We expect to obtain films elsewhere and to continue the "movie" until the close of school, May 19th.

Several of the youngsters spent last Saturday afternoon at Elm Lake. The party put in the time fishing and studying the fauna and flara of that region. Our science instructor acted ac chaperon.

The High school play entitled "Deacon Dubbs" will be given next Friday night May 5th at the school auditorium. The caste of characters is as follows:

Deacon Dubbs—Alfred Ammerman.
Amos Coleman—Walter Smith.
Rawdon Crawley—Bennie Arends.
Mayor McNutt—Theodore Nelson.
Deuteronomy Jones—Ralph Schulte.
Rose Raleigh—Alice Barkema.
Philipena Papover—Ruth Polmateer
Emily Dale—Ruth Beenen.
Trixie Coleman—Gail Thompson.
Yennie Yensen—Marie Blau.

The play consists of three acts requiring about two hours.

Act 1.—A country auction. The Deacon arrives from Sorghum Center, State of West Virginny.

Act 2—A country wedding. Shadows of the past. The Deacon takes a prisoner.

Act 3—A country Husking Bee. Crawley escapes from the Penitentiary. The Deacon takes a wife.

HEAR SCHUMANN-HEINK CONCERT

Solos by Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink were relayed from the Coliseum in Des Moines where the famous contralto was appearing in concert, Monday evening by the radio station on the Register-Tribune building and received at the Hobbie radio station here.

Many Hampton people were at the Hobbie garage to hear snatches of the concert by Schumann-Heink, but on acount of some disconnection in the station at Des Moines were not able to hear her voice clearly during the entire program. However, there were moments when every note she sang was heard clearly and distinctly.—Recorder.

SPECIAL ELECTION TO PURCHASE FAIR GROUNDS

Monitor: A series of meetings have been held the past week or two to determine the proper course to pursue relative to the purchase of the old fair grounds for a public park. At the meeting Monday night it was decided to submit the matter to a vote of the people.

A petition will be circulated and as soon as the required number of signatures are obtained a special election will be called. This is a fair way to dispose of the matter and gives all the people a voice.

A brief review of the whole proposition is due at this time that there may be no misunderstanding. When Dr. Sams purchased the grounds he was approached by a committee who asked him to place a price on the land for a park. He stated that he would sell it to the city for about what he paid for it, $11,000. The matter of raising the funds was canvassed and a week later a committee advised him that they would have to give up the proposition for want of sufficient encouragement. Mr. Sams then set about to carry out some of his own plans of improvement. The first being to contract for about $1000 worth of tiling, which is now being done. He has also purchased machinery, seed, etc., to the amount of several hundred dollars. Again he was approached on the subject of sale, but informed those seeking a price that he did not care to sell as he had already made his plans for several years ahead. He did finally offer to lease the grounds for $1500 for the year and in case of a sale this amount was to apply on the purchase price, which was now to be $15,000. This proposition met with considerable favor at the start, but it too was finally abandoned.

At Monday night's meeting, at which Messrs. Linebarger, King and MacDonald were the most enthusiastic boosters, Mr. Sams made a final proposition and that was for him to go ahead and tile the land as planned and withhold other improvements until a special election could be called. He also reduced the price to $14,000.

Everybody conversant with the facts considers the proposition of Dr. Sams a fair and reasonable one. The whole matter resolves itself into the one problem and that is whether or not the taxpayers want the grounds for a park.

Dentist office robbers who have been visiting many towns throughout the state of late, paid Hampton a call Tuesday night and got away with over $200 worth of gold, consisting of crowns, bridges, and other dental supplies taken from the office of Dr. R. T. Warner.

Entrance through the outer door of the waiting room was obtained by breaking the lock. A skeleton key was evidently used to open the door of the private office. The gold and other supplies were kept in a safe and the yeggs apparently knew the combination for there were no evidences of prying or forcing the door open. Dr. Warner was the first person to discover the robbery when he opened his office Wednesday morning, and immediately notified the sheriff. He was working in his office on several sets of teeth until after 10 o'clock the night of the theft. No clue as to the identity of the thief or thieves had been obtained when this paper went to press.—Recorder.

The finality in his tone stopped her from argument. As the house door and then the door of the limousine closed after him, she went back toward the window, slowly taking off the wrap. For the moment she found it difficult to think. Something had happened to Uncle Benny, something terrible, dreadful for those who loved him; that was plain, though only the fact and not its nature was known to her or to her father; and that something was connected—intimately connected, her father had said—with a name which no one who knew Uncle Benny ever heard before, with the name of Alan Conrad of Blue Rapids, Kansas. Who was this Alan Conrad, and what could his connection be with Uncle Benny so to precipitate disaster upon him?

CHAPTER II

Who Is Alan Conrad?

The recipient of the letter which Benjamin Corvet had written and later so excitedly attempted to recover, was asking himself a question which was almost the same as the question which Constance Sherrill had asked. He was, the second morning later, waiting for the first of the two daily eastbound trains which stopped at the little Kansas town of Blue Rapids which he called home. As long as he could look back into his life, the question, who is this person they call Alan Conrad, and what am I to the man who writes from Chicago, had been the paramount enigma of existence for him. Since he was now twenty-three, as nearly as he had been able to approximate it, and as distinct recollection of isolated, extraordinary events went back to the time when he was five, it was quite eighteen years since he had first noticed the question put to the people who had him in charge: "So this is little Alan Conrad. Who is he?"

Following the arrival of certain letters, which were distinguished from most others arriving at the house by having no ink writing on the envelope but just a sort of purple or black printing like newspapers, Alan invariably received a dollar to spend just as he liked. To be sure, unless "papa" took him to town, there was nothing for him to spend it upon; so, likely enough, it went into the square iron bank, of which the key was lost; but quite often he did spend it according to plans agreed upon among all his friends and, in memory of these occasions and in anticipation of the next, "Alan's dollar" became a community institution among the children.

"Who gives it to you, Alan?" was a question more often asked, as time went on. The only answer Alan could give was, "It comes from Chicago." The post-mark on the envelope, Alan noticed, was always Chicago; that was all he ever could find out about his dollar. He was about ten years old when, for a reason as inexplicable as the dollar's coming, the letters with the typewritten addresses and the enclosed money ceased.

Except for the loss of the dollar at the end of every second month—a loss much discussed by all the children and not accepted as permanent till more than two years had passed—Alan felt no immediate results from the cessation of the letters from Chicago. Papa and mama felt them when the farm had to be given up, and the family moved to the town, and papa went to work in the woolen mill beside the river.

Papa and mama, at first surprised and dismayed by the stopping of the letters, still clung to the hope of the familiar, typewriter-addressed envelope appearing again; but when after two years, no more money came resentment which had been steadily growing against the person who had sent the money began to turn against Alan; and his "parents" told him all they knew about him.

In 1896 they had noticed an advertisement for persons to care for a child; they had answered it to the office of the newspaper which printed it. In response to the letter a man called upon them and, after seeing them and going around to see their friends, had made arrangements with them to take a boy of three, who was in good health and came of good people. He paid in advance board for a year and agreed to send a certain amount every two months after that time. The man brought the boy; whom he called Alan Conrad, and left him. For seven years the money agreed upon came; now it had ceased, and papa had no way of finding the man—the name given by him appeared to be fictitious, and he had left no address except "general delivery, Chicago"—Papa knew nothing more than that. He had advertised in the Chicago papers after the money stopped coming, and he had communicated with every one named Conrad in or near Chicago, but he had learned nothing. Thus, at the age of thirteen, Alan definitely knew that what he already had guessed—the fact that he belonged somewhere else than in the little brown house—was all that any one there could tell him; and the knowledge gave persistence to many internal questionings. Where did he belong? Who was he? Who was the man who had brought him there? Had the money ceased coming because the person who sent it was dead? In that case, connection of Alan with the place where he belonged was permanently broken. Or would some other communication from that source reach him some time—if not money, then something else? Would he be sent for some day?

Externally, Alan's learning the little that was known about himself made no change in his way of living; he went to the town school, which combined grammar and high schools under one roof; and, as he grew older, he clerked in one of the town stores during vacations and in the evenings. Alan always carried his money home as part payment of those arrears which had mounted up against him since the letters ceased coming. At seventeen, having finished high school, he was clerking officially in Merrill's general store, when the next letter came.

It was addressed this time not to papa, but to Alan Conrad. He seized it, tore it open, and a bank draft for fifteen hundred dollars fell out. There was no letter with the enclosure, no word of communication; just the draft to the order of Alan Conrad. Alan wrote the Chicago bank by which the draft had been issued; their reply showed that the draft had been purchased with currency, so there was no record of the identity of the person who had sent it. More than that amount was due for arrears for the seven years during which no money was sent, even when the total which Alan had earned was deducted. So Alan merely endorsed the draft over to "father"; and that fall Jim, Alan's foster brother, went to college. But, when Jim discovered that it not only was possible but planned at the university for a boy to work his way through, Alan went also.

Four wonderful years followed. In companionship with educated people; ideas and manners came to him which he could not have acquired at home; athletics straightened and added bearing to his muscular, well-formed body; his pleasant, strong young face acquired self-reliance and self-control. Life became filled with possibilities for himself which it had never held before.

But on his day of graduation he had put away the enterprises he had planned and the dreams he dreamed and, conscious that his debt to father and mother still remained unpaid, he had returned to care for them; for father's health had failed and Jim, who had opened a law office in Kansas City, could do nothing to help.

No more money had followed the draft from Chicago and there had been no communication of any kind; but the receipt of so considerable a sum had revived and intensified all Alan's speculations about himself. The vague expectation of his childhood that sometime, in some way, he would be "sent for"; had grown during the last six years to a definite belief. And now—on the afternoon before—the summons had come.

This time, as he tore open the envelope, he saw that beside a check, there was writing within—an uneven and nervous-looking but plainly legible communication in longhand. The letter made no explanation. It told him, rather than asked him, to come to Chicago, gave minute instructions for the journey, and advised him to telegraph when he started. The check was for a hundred dollars to pay his expenses. Check and letter were signed by a name completely strange to him.

He was a distinctly attractive looking lad, as he stood now on the station platform of the little town, while the eastbound train rumbled in, and he fingered in his pocket the letter from Chicago.

On the train he took the letter from his pocket and for the dozenth time reread it. Was Covert a relative? Was he the man who had sent the remittances when Alan was a little boy, and the one who later had sent the fifteen hundred dollars? Or was he merely a go-between, perhaps a lawyer? There was no letterhead to give aid in these speculations. The address to which Alan was to come was in Astor street. He had never heard the name of the street before. Was it a business street, Corvet's address in some great office building, perhaps?

At Chicago Alan, following the porter with his suitcase from the car, stepped down among the crowds hurrying to and from the trains. He was not confused, he was only intensely excited. Acting in implicit accord with the instructions of the letter, which he knew by heart, he went to the uniformed attendant and engaged a taxicab—itself no small experience; there would be no one at the station to meet him, the letter had said. He gave the Astor street address and got into the cab.

It had begun to snow heavily. For a few blocks the taxicab drove north past more or less ordinary buildings, then turned east on a broad boulevard where tall tile and brick and stone structures towered till their roofs were hidden in the snowfall. A strange stir and tingle, quite distinct from the excitement of the arrival at the station, pricked in Alan's veins, and hastily he dropped the window to his right and gazed out. The lake, as he had known since his geography days, lay to the east of Chicago; therefore that void out there beyond the park was the lake or, at least, the harbor. A different air seemed to come from it; sounds . . . Suddenly it all was shut off; the taxicab, swerving a little, was dashing between business blocks; a row of buildings had risen again upon the right; they broke abruptly to show him a wooden-walled chasm in which flowed the river full of ice with a tug dropping its smokestack as it cut below the bridge which the cab crossed; buildings on both sides again; then, to the right, a roaring, heaving crashing expanse.

The sound, Alan knew, had been coming to him as an undertone for many minutes; now it overwhelmed, swallowed all other sound. It was great, not loud; all sound which Alan had heard before, except the soughing of the wind over his prairies, came from one point; even the monstrous city murmur was centered in comparison with this. Over the lake, as over the land, the soft snowflakes lazily floated down, scarcely stirred by the slightest breeze; that roar was the voice of the water, that awful power its own.

Alan choked and gasped for breath, his pulses pounding in his throat; he had snatched off his hat and, leaning out of the window sucked the lake air in his lungs. There had been nothing to make him expect this overwhelming crush of feeling. The lake—he had thought of it, of course, as a great body of water, an interesting sight for a prairie boy to see; that was all. No physical experience in all his memory had affected him like this; and it was without warning; the strange thing that had stirred within him as the car brought him to the Drive down-town was strengthened now a thousand-fold; it amazed, half-frightened, half dizzied him. Now, as the motor suddenly swung around a corner and shut the sight of the lake from him, Alan sat back breathless.

The car swerved to the east curb about the middle of the block and came to a stop. The house before which it had halted was a large stone house of quiet, good design; it was some generation older, apparently, than the houses on each side of it, which were brick and terra cotta of recent fashionable architecture; Alan only glanced at them long enough to get that impression before he opened the cab door and got out; but as the cab drove away, he stood beside his suitcase looking up at the old house which bore the number given in Benjamin Corvet's letter, then around at the other houses and back to that again.

The neighborhood obviously precluded the probability of Corvet's being merely a lawyer—a go-between. He must be some relative; the question ever present in Alan's thought since the receipt of the letter, but held in abeyance, as to the possibility and nearness of Corvet's relation to him, took sharper and more exact form now than he had dared to let it take before. Was his relationship to Corvet, perhaps, the closest of all relationships? Was Corvet his . . . father? He checked the question within himself, for the time had passed for mere speculation upon it now. Alan was trembling excitedly; for—whoever Corvet might be—the enigma of Alan's existence was going to be answered when he had entered that house. He was going to know who he was. All the possibilities, the responsibilities, the attachments, the opportunities, perhaps, of that person whom he was—but whom, as yet, he did not know—were before him. He went up the steps and, with fingers excitedly unsteady, he pushed the bell beside the door.

The door opened almost instantly—so quickly after the ring, indeed, that Alan, with leaping throb of his heart, knew that some one must have been awaiting him. But the door opened only half way, and the man who stood within, gazing out at Alan questioningly, was obviously a servant.

"What is it?" he asked, as Alan stood looking at him and past him to the narrow section of darkened hall which was in sight.

Alan put his hand over the letter in his pocket. "I've come to see Mr. Corvet," he said—"Mr. Benjamin Corvet."

"What is your name?"

Alan gave his name; the man repeated it after him, in the manner of a trained servant, quite without inflection. Alan, not familiar with such tones, waited uncertainly. So far as he could tell, the name was entirely strange to the servant, awakening neither welcome nor opposition, but indifference. The man stepped back, but not in such a manner as to invite Alan in; on the contrary, he half closed the door as he stepped back, leaving it open only an inch or two; but it was enough so that Alan heard him say to some one within:

"He says he's him."

"Ask him in; I will speak to him." It was a girl's voice—this second one, a voice such as Alan never had heard before. It was low and soft but quite clear and distinct, with youthful, impulsive modulations and the manner of accent which Alan knew must go with the sort of people who lived in houses like these on this street.

The servant, obeying the voice, returned and opened wide the door.

"Will you come in, sir?"

Alan put down his suitcase on the stone porch; the man made no move to pick it up and bring it in. Then Alan stepped into the hall face to face with the girl who had come from the big room on the right.

She was quite a young girl—not over twenty-one or twenty-two, Alan judged; like girls brought up in wealthy families, she seemed to Alan to have gained young womanhood in far greater degree in some respects than the girls he knew, while, at the same time, in other ways, she retained more than they some characteristics of a child. Her slender figure had a woman's assurance and grace; her soft brown hair was dressed like a woman's; her gray eyes had the open directness of the girl. Her face—smoothly oval, with straight brows and a skin so delicate that at the temples the veins showed dimly blue—was at once womanly and youthful; and there was something altogether likable and simple about her, as she studied Alan now. She was slightly pale, he noticed, and there were lines of strain and trouble about her eyes.

"I am Constance Sherrill," she announced. Her tone implied quite evidently that she expected him to have some knowledge of her, and she seemed surprised to see that her name did not mean more to him.

"Mr. Corvet is not here this morning," she said.

He hesitated, but persisted: "I was to see him here today, Miss Sherrill. He wrote me, and I telegraphed him I would be here to-day."

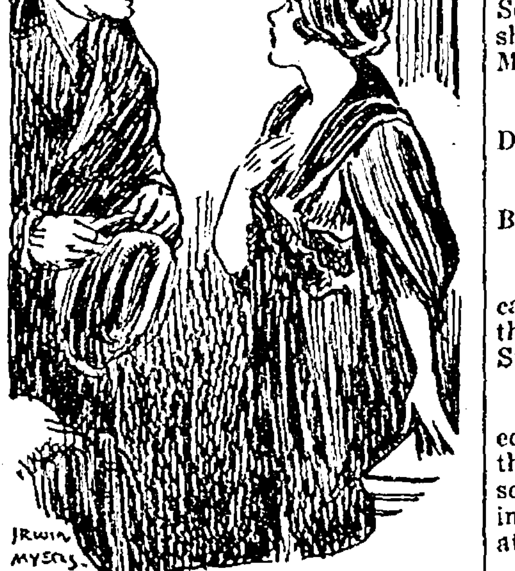
"I know," she answered. "We had your telegram. Mr. Corvet was not here when it came, so my father opened it." Her voice broke oddly, and he studied her in indecision, wondering who that father might be that opened Mr. Corvet's telegrams.

"Mr. Corvet went away very suddenly," she explained. She seemed, he thought, to be trying to make something plain to him which might be a shock to him; yet herself to be uncertain what the nature of that shock might be. Her look was scrutinizing, questioning, anxious, but not unfriendly. "After he had written you and something else had happened—I think—to alarm my father about him, father came here to his house to look after him. He thought something might have . . . happened to Mr. Corvet here in his house. But Mr. Corvet was not here."

"You mean he has—disappeared?"

"Yes; he has disappeared."

Alan gazed at her dizzily. Benjamin Corvet—whoever he might be—had disappeared; he had gone. Did any one else, then, know about Alan Conrad?



Alan Gazed at Her Dizzily—Benjamin Corvet—

"No one has seen Mr. Corvet," she said, "since the day he wrote to you. We knew that—that he became so disturbed after doing that—writing to you—that we thought you must bring with you information of him."

"Information!"

"So we have been waiting for you to come here and tell us what you know about him or—or your connection with him."

CHAPTER III

Discussion of a Shadow

Alan, as he looked confusedly and blankly at her, made no attempt to answer the question she had asked, or to explain. His silence and confusion, he knew, must seem to Constance Sherrill unwillingness to answer her; for she did not suspect that he was unable to answer her.

"You would rather explain to father than to me," she decided.

He hesitated. What he wanted now was time to think, to learn who she was and who her father was, and to adjust himself to this strange reversal of his expectations.

"Yes; I would rather do that," he said.

She caught up her fur collar and muff from a chair and spoke a word to the servant. As she went out on to the porch, he followed her and stooped to pick up his suitcase.

"Simmons will bring that," she said, "unless you'd rather have it with you. It is only a short walk."

MEAT CURE FOR PORK

For 500 pounds of meat take six quarts of salt, one and one-half pounds of brown sugar, one half pound of black pepper, finely ground, one half pound of pulverized saltpeter. Mix all in a pan, and when meat is thoroughly cool, apply mixture by holding over pan, rubbing skin side first then flesh side. Let meat lay two days and rub again. The meat may be smoked after a few days with cobs or wood. It must not be piled up and when smoked should be carefully wrapped in paper to protect against flies and insects and left hanging.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE APPROPRIATION

A farmer remarked recently that he had heard other farmers kick on the money spent at Ames for agricultural education but that he had never heard one object to the money spent at the State University. Apparently they were willing to be taxed to educate doctors, lawyers and business men but not to educate farmers.

Possibly these fellows do not know that the State University receives a larger appropriation than the college at Ames nor do they realize that scarsely one fourth of the funds expended on the State schools goes to instruction along agricultural lines.

Most of the kicking and complaining that we hear based on lack of information or misunderstanding. Things never look so bad when we know the facts.

Kinseth's Store News

News seems to be rather scarse this week, but we have some good news for you in King Charles flour, which we have just received, at $1.95. a sack.

When you see flour this low in price you begin to think that it must be rather poor stuff, or the price would be higher. But King Charles Flour, which is Minnesota flour, of a very high grade, is the result of a bargain we picked up, and as we only have 21 sacks you want to get yours early.

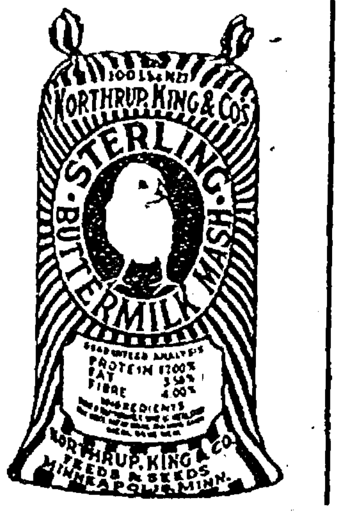
And don't forget that the store on the corner gives you bargains every day in many other things besides flour. Drop in when you need something, or call 19 and we'll deliver to your door.

SAVE EVERY CHICK

When you go out in the morning to feed the chicks and you find them all huddled up and droopy—doesn't it make you feel sick all over?

But isn't it a "GRAND and GLORIOUS FEELING" to find the little rascals scampering around lively, climbing over each other to get at the STERLING BUTTERMILK MASH and GROWING?

FEEDING DIRECTION IN EVERY BAG



STERLING BUTTERMILK MASH HAS SOLVED THE PROBLEM

It is composed of choice grains and ground feeds carefully compounded with PURE DRIED BUTTERMILK in such a manner as to insure rapid growth. Chicks thrive on it. IT STARTS THEM—IT GROWS THEM—IT MATURES THEM.

Ford
THE UNIVERSAL CAR

Weak Links in a Strong Chain

That's just what imitation parts are when they become a part of your Ford car. They look strong enough, but the metal isn't there--the strong, durable Vanadium steel that goes into the Ford Chassis and every Ford part. Ford parts are specially cast and heat treated, each according to its use.

Ford metallurgists have been studying that problem for sixteen years and know just how each unit should be made to endure a maximum of wear and tear. They know that best results can be obtained only by the use of special formulas for different parts.

We carry complete assortments of genuine Ford Parts; and give careful, prompt Ford Service. Drive in, it is better to be safe than sorry. Come to the Authorized Ford Dealers for service.

BELMOND SCHOOL MAKES A FINE RECORD

Sheriff Finds Still In Norway Township

Cunningly Concealed Trap Door Under Stairs Leads To Nice Fat Reserve

OTHER INTERESTING ITEMS

Sheriff Lang and Marshal Leonard raided the John Groh farm house in Norway township one day last week and captured eight gallons of whisky. The officers had suspicioned this man for several months. In fact two or three attempts had been made to capture him before, but he was too foxy for them. They searched the house from top to bottom and were about to give up again when the sheriff's eagle eye dected a small ring in a floor board under the stairway. It was very nicely covered with a piece of linoleum, but the officers soon had the board out. This with a second board made a neat trap door as one would find in a long search. There exposed in full view were three rain barrels set in the ground with just the tops exposed. In these barrels were jugs, jars and bottles containing liquor to the above amount. Marshal Leonard being the smallest was sent below to recover the contraband goods. He handed up the jugs while the sheriff stood guard. They were later brought to Clarion for safe keeping. Groh was given a hearing before Justice Brown, who held him to the grand jury under $500 bonds, which was furnished by a nighbor. For some time young men in that township have been getting drunk at dances and this fact led to Groh's undoing.

The jury found Roy Fortunte guilty of burglarizing the stores at Goldfield and Woolstock. They were out less than two hours. The trial of his pal, Herbert Bige, is set for today.

Perry Fielder, an Eagle Grove railroad man, plead guilty to the charge of adultry Friday and Judge Thompson sentenced him to five months in the county jail. He also allowed defendant credit for the four months he had already served because of his inability to get bond.

Marriage licenses were issued the past week to Emma Olson and Virgil Cdowe, Cruze Gonsales and Felictar Martines, Walter Ervin Braumann and Caroline Hansena Jorgenson, Humphrey Louis Leslie and Loretta Genevieve McGuire; Mack Fairbanks and Gertrude Thalia Fisher; Robert William Brown and Carrie Baker.

Claude Veeder and M. H. Galloway, two Belmond young men, plead guilty to robbing a Great Western freight car of three cases of eggs and some candy. Judge Thompson fined them $100 each and imposed a sentence of five months in the county jail. The eggs were sold at Rowan and a check given in payment. This with the fact that the officers had their auto number led to their detection.

Ray Hendrickson of Eagle Grove brought five cub wolves to the county auditor's office Monday for which he received a bounty of $4.00 each. He dug them from their den south of that city. On Tuesday Theo. Schaeffer brought in the male wolf, which he shot in the same vicinity. He received $20 bounty. Last week Henry Aldrich of Galt dug out a den of wolves in that locality and captured seven cubs for which he received a county warrent for $28.

Dan Loraine of Clarion was found guilty of rape by the jury after deliberating on his case about four hours. The trial was begun Monday and concluded about five o'clock Thursday afternoon. The Kalvig girl told a straight forward story and there was little or no doubt in the minds of the jurymen as to the guilt of the defendant. Loraine did not go on the witness stand in his own defense. Judge Thompson has allowed defendant ten days in which to ask for a new trial. It is probable sentence will be passed on Monday next.—Monitor.

FARM BUREAU PICNIC

A Farm Bureau social will be held next week Wednesday, May 17th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Henn. in Pleasant township. The social will be given in the evening, and all are invited. A program will be given, and refreshments served. Miss Liddle, the County Nurse, will be present and will deliver an address for the ladies. It is requested that all ladies attending bring some home-made candy. This candy it is planned to sell, the funds derived to be used, probably, towards the purchasing of [illegible] proposed moving picture machine, which the Farm Bureau is contemplating.

A demonstrator from Ames was at the city hall on Wednesday of this week, giving the ladies of the community a demonstration on how to construct and use a home-made fireless cooker. A goodly crowd was present, and an interesting session is reported.

MANY CONCERTS BEING RECEIVED BY RADIO

Albany, New York, Concert Comes In Fine—Market Reports Received

The Radiophone receiving set of the Belmond Battery Station Co. and the Independent, has been in fine working order the past week, and some good concerts have been received. Albany, New York, was heard last Thursday evening, and a fine concert enjoyed from that place. It came in clear and distinct, so that nearly every word of the announcement could be heard. The musical selections were especially good. In fact, music comes in much better than anything else, particularly music by horns, altho some string instruments have been heard in nice fashion.

Notably among these was the cello solo given by the Register one evening, when practically every note was distinguishable. Last Tuesday evening, in the middle of the rain, Des Moines was picked up and held thruout the concert. After that, Kansas City was picked up and held until after nine o'clock, a lecture and half a dozen musical selections being heard. Following this, base ball returns and market reports, together with a short address from a Peoria pastor, were picked up from Illinios.

Pittsburg has been heard several times, and market reports have been taken from Omaha. Listening in has become somewhat like taking dope: you itch to get another dose. There is a fascination about it which, once experienced, is difficult to get rid of. The wireless is a peculiar affair at this time, and performs some queer stunts. You may be getting it when it will start to "fade," and no jiggling of the levers will bring it back. Where it fades to, or what makes it fade, is a mystery, and is something that has not yet been explained. "Static," or electricity in the air, is the greatest trouble to be experienced in receiving now, as the noise—a grating, scraping, scratching sound—drownds out the music to such an extent that often it is impossible to get anything.

The set owned by the previously named firms has, however, been working pretty fairly, and the owners have no kick to register regarding its workability and results. The bug has bitten many, and this next fall and winter will doubtless see a number of receiving sets listening in" in Belmond. The craze seems to be spreading eveny day, and manufacturers are thousands behind on orders.

BELMOND TEACHERS WHO GO TO OTHER TOWNS

Among the teachers in the local school who will teach in other towns this next year, are the following:

Prof. Greutzmacher goes to Britt, at a salary of $2,280, an increase of $710 over what he was offered here. Mrs. Greutzmacher is tendered a position in the Britt schools also, at $115 per month, an increase of $5 per month.

Miss Stedman will teach at Forest City, receiving a salary of $160 per month, an increase of $15 per month.

Miss Dodd goes to Sigourney at $155 an increase of $10 per month.

Miss Ramsay will teach in the Des Moines schools next year, at a salary of $1,200, an increase of over $100.

C. C. Christie has been tendered a position in the Sigourney schools at $200 per month, but has not yet accepted.

The Misses Leavy, Baumgardner, and Brooks have not as yet signed contracts elsewhere.

Miss Agness Dillon, a local girl, will teach next year at Corwith, having the second grade, at $100 per month. Miss Ennis Allen, another Belmond high school graduate, will be numbered next year among the teachers at Latimer.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP TEACHERS PLAN PROGRAMS

The teachers of Pleasant township met with Mrs. J. F. Henn, Farm Bureau township lady chairman, last Saturday and perfected the organization to give the programs at the Farm Bureau meetings in Pleasant township this summer. Miss Virgie Jenison was chosen a chairman of the program committee. Meetings will be held once a month, at the homes of farm bureau members in the township.

ENJOY ENTERTAINMENT

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Larson gave a five course dinner at their home in Klemme in honor of Mr. Larson's fathr, J. P. Larson of Klemme. Among the out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Butterfield of Belmond, and Oscar Larson of Garner. When supper was served and the 77 candles lit on the mamouth birthday cake the other lights were turned out and the dining room was as bright as day. The evening was very pleasantly spent in a social way all voting the Larson's capital entertainers. The occasion will be long remembered by all.

TWO AUTO ACCIDENTS WITHIN PAST WEEK

Two auto accidents which luckily did not result seriously, occured here within the past week. Miss Rena Purdy struck and knocked down Sam Johnson, at the hotel corner, badly bruising him but not injuring him to any extent. Sunday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Kemp, of Goodell, were in a collision with the Pech car, from Belmond, at the Berg corner. Mrs. Kemp and baby were thrown out, but escaped any injuries except a few scratches and bruises. Both accidents were exceedingly lucky in that neither were serious.

NEXT YEAR'S TEACHERS WHO HAVE SIGNED

The following is the list to date of the teachers who have signed contracts to teach in the Belmond schools next year:

Miss Newgard, Kindergarten.
Miss Purdy, 2nd.
Miss Rourk, 3rd.
Miss Quigley, 4th.
Miss Sharon, Math.
Miss Hill, Music.
Miss Brown, Domestic Science.
Supt. Farmer.

Miss Hill is from Earlham, and Miss Brown from Hartley. Supt. Farmer is also from Hartley.

Other applications are pending, contracts not yet having been signed.

PROGRESS CLUB ELECTS

At a recent meeting of the Progress Club the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. E. W. Luick; Vive President, Mrs. E. W. Luick; Vice Presiing Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. O. T. Jacobson; Recording Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Goetz.

HAS INTERESTING RELIC

Milton Dawson was here the first of the week visiting at the home of his son-in-law, Max Baker, and family. Mr. Dawson showed the editor part of the second number of the Wright County Monitor, printed in 1869, which is an interesting relic of the old days. This was the second number of the first newspaper in the county, and contains the names of the county officials of that time, some items which would interest the old timers, and a variety of reading which would do credit to a modern paper. The Monitor then was as well gotten up as it is now, and was a real newsy sheet, typographically neat and business like, and a splendid paper for the time.

BELMOND NOW ON TRUCK ROUTE FROM IOWA FALLS

Belmond is reported now on a truck route, running from Iowa Falls via Hampton, Rowan, Galt and Clarion, turning at Belmond for the return The trucks haul ice cream, bread etc., taking a return load of eggs, cream and the like. Joe White informs us that Higley & Co., of Mason City, will start a truck line from Mason City to Clarion, bringing in their products and hauling back produce.

Mr. and Mrs. Jennings visited with Eagle Grove friends and relatives Sunday driving over.

Mr. and Mrs. Kimmel, from Manly, formerly residents of Belmond, were meeting friends here on Sunday of this week.

E. F. Bailey went to Minneapolis on Monday, to look after some business matters.

J. P. Byers returned last week from his western trip, where he has been the past winter. He reports the apple trees all in bloom when he left, and crops generally coming nicely, but that Iowa looks pretty good just the same.

OLAF NEWS ITEMS

Martin Paulson was an over Sunday visitor in Belmond.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kessler of Iowa Falls spent Sunday at the S. O. Windecker home.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo Baxter entertained the following at their home last Thursday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Orpha Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Hanson, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Lerson and Mr. and Mrs. Elsie Evans.

E. O. Munson drove to Story City Saturday to remain over Sunday with his family.

S. O. Windecker spent a couple of days of last week in Iowa Falls, transacting business.

G. Halverson and family drove to Story county Sunday to visit relatives.

Henry Fritz, of Clarion, while here taking care of stock, which he had purchased of farmers, was taken very ill; we understand he is a little better at this writing.

Beet workers have begun to arrive. Most of them are from Moline, Ill., of Polish nationality.

The Ladies' Aid Society will meet with Mrs. Geo. C. Johnson, this week Wednesday.

Little Omar Hanson, who has been quite sick of tonsoliis is now better.

The directors of the Farmers Elevator Co., held their regular business meeting last Thursday. Martin Paulson and Geo. Baxter were both rehired.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

S. U. Leinbach, Pastor.

It is a pleasure to see our members growing so rapidly with the coming of spring weather. We will have to set a new high mark for our Bible school as we have now passed the former mark.

Remember our Bible school opens at 10:00 a. m. and our morning worship at 11:00. Next Sunday is Mother's Day and we hope that you will honor your mother by being present at the services of the sanctuary. Wear her favorite flower if you can secure one if not some other flower which your mother loved. The evening services at 8:00. The young people have charge of the first part of this service and in the second part Mr. Trafford will sing that beautiful old song "The Holy City" which will be illustrated with pictures on the screen. Beginning a week from Sunday night we will take up the study of the life of Saul of Tarsus for six Sunday nights. These sermons will be illustrated with from sixty to seventy-five slides and we hope that all who love the study of the Word and the work of the Kingdom, and whose duties do not call them elsewhere, will join us in the study of this great character. "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord."

RAT KILLING CRUSADE ON FINAL HOT SWING

Hundreds Of Rats Being Killed—Not Too Late Yet To Get In

By R. M. Edwards

Corn Yield Experiments

The corn yield experiment plots which were planned by the county farm bureau are being planted this week in four different parts of the county. The county agent has spent considerable time assisting these cooperators in planting these various samples which were contributed from different parts of the county.

Eight samples of corn are being planted in each plot. Four rows of about forty rods in length will be planted from each sample of corn contributed. Portions of these rows will be husked, weighed, and tested for the moisture at corn husking time when comparisons will be made to determine the high yielding corn.

Rat Killing Continues

The county wide rat killing contest has brought to light some real rat killers also some very interesting stories regarding the methods used in the war against these pests.

The highest record reported for last week was 184. The boy who reported this number for his last week's killing seems quite enthused over the contest and will no doubt mak a close run for the first prize money. There are still two weeks left for the boys to make a killing and many of them are becoming quite anxious to know who the champion rat killer will be and his record.

Federation Conference

Our local county agent, accompanied by E. A. Patton treasurer of the farm bureau, were in attendance at the district conference of the Seventh congressional district of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation at Des Moines Thursday, May 4th.

C. W. Hunt, of the Iowa federation, Murl McDonald, state county agent leader, and J. F. Coupe, assistant secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, were the principal speakers at this conference. Mr. McDonald gave a very interesting address on the relation between the county agent, the U. S. Department of Agriculture, and the State Farm Bureau Federation. Mr. Hunt and Mr. Coupe, spent most of their time in explaining what has been done in the past year through the efforts of our state federation and urged very strongly a closer cooperation between the county farm bureau and the state federation. Optimism seemed to be the keynote to all address given at this conference. All speakers seemed to be very hopeful for the future of our great organization and seemed to feel that the organization is advancing and gave figures to show that the membership thruout the state has actually increased during te past year, although reports would seem to indicate that the membership has decreased.

Home Equipment Specialist Here

Miss Grtrude Lynn, home equipment specialist from the Extension Department at Ames, is in Wright county this week demonstrating to the ladies some of the various kinds of home conveniences, such as the fireless cooker, the pressure cooker, etc.

Miss Lynn, is surely a specialist in her line and the ladies of the county are all agreed that she has given suggestions which are very helpful in the line of equipment for the home.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ELECTS OFFICERS MONDAY

About 16 old members of the Chamber of Commerce met at the city hall Monday evening, and elected officers for the ensuing year. The same officers were chosen as have been heading the organization the past two years: W. R. Ramsay, president; Herman Schultz, vice president C. O. Fitts, secretary and treasurer; The new board of directors is the same as before, with the exception of two vacancies filled by C. I. Williams and R. A. Rankins, the personel of the board now being E. Bock, H. F. Luick, W. C. Tyrrell, M. C. Barry, A. L. Luick, H. D. Moore, R. A. Rankins, W. T. Gfeller, C. I. Williams. H. D. Bohning and C. C. McGuire.

The board meets next week Wednesday evening, in the library basement, at which time probably an attempt will be made to stir things up a little. Various things pertaining to the community's betterment were discussed at the meeting Monday evening, and it is hoped to get the Chamber reorganized and once more on going basis. There are many things which it can do.

GROH PASSES EXAMINATION

Edmund Groh was one of two Wright county men who passed the State examinations held recently in Des Moines for Registered Pharmacists. The other was Chas. Pinkham, of Goldfield. There were 83 in the class.

If you would get a lot out of life, put much into it.

Many Activities Are Planned At Term End

Ball Team Makes Splendid Showing In State High School Tournament

SCHOOL ON LAST MONTH

The Baseball Team is trying to defray Tournament expenses by selling "Belmond" auto plates. They sell for $1.50 and are much neater and more serviceable than a penant. If you are not ashamed of your town, let others know it. See the High School boys for plates.

The High School Team made a very creditable showing at the State Tournament held at Ames May 5-6. The draw was Webster City. After getting away with a poor start in the first inning, coupled with three errors, Madsen twirled a good game. Only one man struck out against Webster City. The final score was 5-3

The second game was with Earlham. This was the closest and the fastest game of the tournament. Belmond led with three runs until the sixth inning. Chapman passed the first man, the next man got on by an error, and the next man up coupled with Chapman's delivery for the only hit, a home run, thus tieing the score. In the seventh, Madsen who replaced Chapman, walked the first man, who scored on a bunt along first base line, winning for Earlham 4-3. This was the closest and hardest fought game Earlham had in the tournament. This is a most excellent showing, since at the time of writing, Earlham is either runners-up or State Champions. This game was Belmonds first defeat this year.

The grade musical program given Monday night under the direction of Miss Baumgardner, provided a pleasurable evening for the children and their friends. While the costumes of the children were suggestive and appropriate, affort was directed toward demonstrating artistic singing for childish voices rather than toward providing an elaborately staged and costumed pageant. Simply as such a program may be planned, it represents an infinite expenditure of time and work by those who undertake it. Earnest appreciation from the school patrons and the benefit which is given to the children constitute their reward.

Friday evening, May 19, the Senior Class presents "Clarence" a comedy by Booth Tarkington. "Clarence" is considered by critics as the cleverest play produced in the last ten seasons. Plan to attend.

Cast of Characters

Mrs. Martyn—Leona Smith.
Mr. Wheeler—William Vestweber.
Mrs. Wheeler —Carol Tyrrell.
Bobby Wheeler—Lee Lowenberg.
Cora Wheeler—Luella Hauge.

Clarence—Teddy Johnson.
Della—Elaine Rierson.
Dinwiddie—Irwin Haupt.
Hubert Stein—Clifford Johnson.

Tickets on sale at Schultz's the first of next week. Prices 50c and 35c.

A matinee for school children will be given in the afternoon. Admission 25c. No advance ticket sale for matinee. Adults tickets for matinee 50c.

The Commencement Excercises of the 8th grade will be on Thursday evening June 1. Members of the graduating class will present a one-act play—title to be chosen. The Junior High Girls' Glee Club will give "Fays of the Foating Island," three-part contata by Paul Bliss. The Junior High Girls' Glee Club has been organized by Miss Baumgardner to create a greater musical atmosphere and to train the voices for a larger and finer High School Glee Club next year.

The High School Glee Club are preparing three special numbers for Commencement and Baccalaurate srvices:

Amaryllis—Gavatte—Ambrose.
Over the Sea—Fifth Nocurne—Leybach.
My Sylvan Glories—La Ciuquantaine—Gabriel-Marie.

Mrs. Purcell, Mrs. O. Tomson, and Mrs. Dochterman were fourth grade visitors last week.

CROPS BEHIND IN ILLINOIS

Mrs. A. W. Martin and Mrs. Tom Brooks returned last week from Illinois, where they were recently called by the death of their father Mrs. Martin reports farming conditions in Illinois as being very poor, with much of the ground covered with water as a result of the many heavy rains they have had in that part of the country. Very little seeding had been done in the part of the state where she was, and prospects for the crops this year were exceedingly gloomy.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

SELL YOUR HAMMER

This is a large world, with many folks in it, and some of them queer ones. To our notion, among the queerest are those turtle-shelled folks who regard progress and improvement as something on the wicked order, not to be tolerated as a community affair, and to be pitied and condemned in an individual. To do their little bit towards making the world "safer" and "saner," they swing their hammer upon every progressive move that comes up.

If anyone suggests an improvement to the community, the hammer starts swinging, and occasionally the noise they make drownds out the idea. A community move of a progressive nature runs into the battery of hammer swingers at the first corner. The disarmemant conference brought out an anvil chorus in full, and the hammers beat their song like frogs on a hot night. Because there always had been war, there must always be. Altho they used to burn "witches" at the stake we seem to have gotten away from that idea; why not burn them yet?

"Sell your hammer and buy a horn" is a slang phrase which should be adopted as a motto by a great many people. You know yourself how tiresome, boresome and disgusting the fellow is who continually knocks, knocks, knocks; who slushes a pail of cold water on everything that comes up; who says it can't be done, it never has been done, hadn't ought to be done, is foolish, idiotic and senseless, and the money ought to be saved and the time and labor devoted to something else. And if you drop it and start "something else" he brings his hammer into play on that.

Such folks give us large in-growing pain. They take all the joy out of life, and substitute vinegar for honey. Every community ought to have a lake in which to drop such pesticators; if they didn't drown, they might at least be cooled off. There isn't one of them who would go back to "the good old days" they tell us about, of the little red school house, and the sythe, and the mud fireplace, and the ox carts, and pony express.

If you can't boost, at least be reasonable enough to shut up and let someone else do it; don't bring your hammer down with a "wham!" on everything that comes up. If you don't want to do anything for your community, then go away back and sit where you won't be noticed, and let the rest push the thing through. You'll benefit, along with the rest, but the rest will greatly appreciate your curtesy if you'll let 'em alone while they benefit you, instead of hindering them as they work.

READ THE RADIO ARTICLES

Are you reading the Radio articles now being published in the Independent? If not, read them. They contain some interesting "dope" on the newest and most far-reaching invention, or discovery, as well as craze, of the age. There are in Iowa alone 23,000 receiving Radio sets, with a number of sending stations, and in the country over it is estimated that there are a million receiving stations in operation.

Radio is only in its infancy; the great developments are to come. It is one of the queerest things ever discovered, in the way it acts and works. These articles are designed to give you the knowledge of radio that will make it understandable, without the tiresome and—to most people—incomprehensible details of the technical part of it. The Independent and the Battery Station will be glad to show you their receiving set, and explain the "little we know" about it. Many concerts have been caught on it, from as far as Albany, N. Y., and market reports received. When you stop to think that it is just "coming from the air," it seems impossible, but it is there, nevertheless.

Have you ever noticed that the fellow who thinks he knows it all, usually proves to know but very little?

Now that the ball team has secured a start, it's about time for somebody to start swinging a hammer.

If the saying, "A wise man changeth his mind, a fool never," is true, there are a bunch of both in Belmond.

Ten Nights In A Barroom, as a play, gave the younger generation a glimpse into the honorible past. Probably in another fifty years they will have a similar play entitled "Ten Afternoons In A Soda Parlor."

CLIPPINGS

It appears that Henry Sporaa must love excitement and appears to enjoy being tangled with the law. Saturday of last week he was again arrested for "throwing a fit." This time, the information recites, he used profane and abusive language, and in other ways disturbed the Mayor Pritchard. Sporaa asked for peace and quiet of our city. Marshall MacNichol brought him before time to secure counsel and this His Honor granted, taking the precaution of placing him under $300 bonds for appearance Monday, however. At Monday's hearing, a continuance until today was asked, and this to was granted by Mayor Prichard. An ungovernable temper when coupled with lack of judgment, is no prize for anyone to foster, and in this respect, Sporaa is indeed unfortunate.—Garner Signal.

Mrs. A. W. Martin of Belmond came Monday morning from Illinois where she was called by the death of her mother.—Signal.

Marcellus Jensen has announced his candidacy for county attorney on the republican ticket in Wright county. Mr. Jensen was born and raised in this county, and later located for the practice of law at Buffalo Center. While there he was chairman of the republican county central committee, and later was elected mayor of Buffalo Center, which position he resigned when he moved to Belmond about eighteen months ago. We have not learned whether he will have opposition or not, but J. M. is a campaigner and will make his opponent go some—if he has one.—Forest City Summit.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Carlston and little daughter autoed here from Belmond, Sunday and spent a few hours with relatives and friends. The were accompanied by Miss Natzke who had been a visitor at the Carlston home for a couple of days. Reporter.

The local ball players are getting things lined up for a Carion ball club this year. There are a number of the boys who played last year rarin' to go, and others have since come to town and will play with the local organization, so it is figured a strong team can be gotten together in time to start playing soon. Sunday the boys play a pick-up nine at Cornelia.

The question of financing the organization has not as yet been decided upon, but some local support will be needed. Belmond is organizing a purely home town team and is financing it by selling season tickets at $5.—News.

They are going to ask Wright county to vote the bonds necessary to buy the old fair grounds there and preserve them as a county fair grounds. Steps have been taken to circulate the necessary petition, and it is hoped that the supervisors will call an election and vote on the subject.

Of course it is certain that the other towns of the county will object to the cash being spent in Clarion, and it is also profitable that the project will fail.

The failure will be caused by the selfishness of human nature. The right thing would be to buy the grounds.—Humboldt Republican.

Perhaps the greatest lack in human life is the lack of praise. Have you not looked on many a human face that held within it the suggestion of tragedy due to the fact that no word of kindly praise or encouragement had ever fallen into that heart? If we were half careful enough to express our pleasure in the person who renders any worthy service, what a different world it world be. And, after all, have we any right to be silent when any one has given us joy, or done a thing that is worth while?

RADIO

PROGRESS OF RADIO THROUGH THE YEARS

Wireless Research Began Long Ago, But Development Has Been Swift Lately.

Wireless research started many years ago, as far back even as 1827. Even the radio telephone is not a recent perfection; rather it is that introduction to the layman of the human voice and music has suddenly popularized something that wireless men had thought a pastime or amusement. Here is the chronological record of wireless:

1827—It was found that the magnetic discharge from a leyden jar would magnetize a steel needle.

1831 — Electro-magnetic induction was discovered between two entirely separate circuits by Michael Faraday.

1837—Cooke and Wheatstone of London, England, and Morse of the United States take out first patent for electric telegraph.

1838—K. A. Steinheil of Munich suggested that a system of wireless telegraphy could be established after his discovery of the use of the earth return.

1840—Joseph Henry (U. S. A.) produced the first high-frequency electric oscillations, and stated that the condenser discharge is oscillatory.

1842 — Wireless experiments were made by S. F. B. Morse by electric conduction through water across Washington canal and across wide rivers.

1843—A wireless system for transatlantic communication was suggested.

1845—Water was used as a conducting medium in wireless experiments across a wide river.

1849—Intelligible signals were actually sent across a river 4,500 feet wide in India, but the cost was found prohibitive for commercial use.

1867—The electric waves that are now utilized in wireless telegraphy and telephony were predicted in an address before the Royal Society in London, England.

1880—The sending of an electric current through earth was systematically studied by John Trowbridge of Harvard. It was found that signaling might be carried on over large distances between places not connected by wires.

1885—It was found that telephonic speech could be conveyed by induction over a space of quarter mile. This experiment took place in England.

1889—Electric waves were suggested as being particularly suitable for the sending of signals through fogs.

1892—An instrument for the detection of electro-magnetic waves was discovered which was given the name of a "coherer."

1894—A scientist of Berlin signaled through three miles of water.

1895—High frequency waves excite curiosity of Senatore Marconi.

1896—First patent for practical wireless transmitting system is taken out in London by Marconi. Afterward, successful signaling was carried out over distances as great as one and one-quarter miles. Sir William Preece of the British postoffice system interested his cohorts in Marconi's wireless experiments.

1897—Marconi establishes communication between points four miles distant. Balloons were used to suspend antennae.

Marconi demonstrates his wireless system before the king of Italy, communicating with two Italian warships nine miles distant.

The first Marconi station is erected on the Isle of Wight and experiments conducted over a distance of 14 miles.

Near the end of the year the first floating wireless station was successfully operated.

1898—The first paid marconigram was sent from the Isle of Wight station.

1899—Reports made on lighthouse accident by radio. First French gunboat is fitted with radio apparatus. In Vienna communication between two balloons is established. New York Herald receives radio report of international yacht races. The British war office introduces Marconi apparatus into the South African battlefields.

1900—German vessel communicates a distance of 60 miles by radio signals.

1901—Radio communication started with five islands in the Hawaiian group. The first British ship is fitted with the wireless telegraph.

1902—Radiograph signals received aboard vessels at sea at 1,500 statute miles. Signals received from a distance of 2,000 miles.

1903—King Edward receives a radio message from President Roosevelt. High-power stations were ordered by the Italian government. First transatlantic radio message sent. Telegraphic news service for ships at sea is started. Marconi knighted in Russia.

1904—The first press message was sent across the sea.

1905—Patent suit started in New York between the Marconi and De Forest company.

Patent for horizontal directional aerial is taken out. This was a great step forward in long-distance work.

1906—International conference is held in Berlin, at which most of the countries of the world are represented.

1907—The use of steel disks for producing notes were successfully tested.

Radio stations in Ireland and Nova Scotia were opened for limited public service.

1908—Radio stations opened for unlimited public service between Great Britain and Canada.

1909—Steamship in collision with another off the coast of Florida succeeds in calling assistance by radio.

1910—Marconi receives messages 6,700 miles while on board ship going to South America.

Spanish radio company formed.

1911—Canadian government leased radio stations for 20 years.

1912—Radio distress signals from the Titanic bring assistance and save lives of 700 passengers.

1913—Tests were made between the Eiffel tower in France and the station at Washington. During the trip into Central Asia an explorer received his longitude and time signals from a distant radio station.

1914—Marconi and radio officials start test of wireless telephone between vessels of the Italian fleet. The test was continued between vessels on the high seas and voices were heard with clarity at a distance of 44 miles. One day radio-telephone communication was kept up constantly for 12 hours. Great Britain declared war upon Germany August 4 and all private radio telegraphy and telephony suspended.

1915—Radio communication between America and Japan is completed. The stations were located at San Francisco and Tokyo with a relay station at Honolulu.

The American Telephone and Telegraph company succeeded in radio telephoning from Arlington station at Washington to Hawaii, a distance of nearly 5,000 miles.

Secretary Daniels of the United States navy transmitted telephonic messages from Washington to the Brooklyn navy yards.

1916—President Wilson and the mikado of Japan exchange messages over the new transpacific radio service, which is formally opened.

1917—Senatore Marconi visits the United States and aids greatly in recruiting for radio operators for the United States army.

1918—Wireless telephony progressed rapidly, being used to a great extent in the equipment of airplanes.

Several new long range stations were erected in the United States, it being claimed for one built at Annapolis, Md., that it was capable of communication at 4,000 miles. The United States government also opened a high-power station at Bordeaux.

In September of this year radio signals sent from a point 12,000 miles away were received in Sydney, Australia.

1919—With the exception of the three transatlantic flights—that of the U. S. NC-4, and the British flights of Alcock and Brown and the dirigible R-34, in which radio communication played an important part in keeping the ships of the air on their courses—no very great progress was made in radio telegraphy, although radio telephony was being pushed along quietly.

Restrictions upon amateur receiving and sending were lifted by the American government.

1920—This was the year of the radio telephone, more attention probably being paid to this branch of radio than to its older brother, telegraphy. Several broadcasting stations were opened.

1921—This year was another radio telephonic year. It was marked by the opening of numerous broadcasting stations.

ROWAN NEWS

The Andrew Whitten Post of the American Legion is making preparations along with the local committee of the town for Memoriol Day Sunday and Decoration Day. Captian H. Tomkinson will deliver the Memorial sermon in the M. E. Church, whilst Captain Van Meder, of Odebolt, formerly pastor of the Clarion and Belmond M. E. churches will deliver the Decoration Day oration.

Captain H. Tomkinson will speak at Thornton on Decoration Day.

A large number of base ball fans turned out to see the game between Meservey and Rowan High school teams. The game went against Rowan—this was due largely to the fact that the team had had no workouts.

A meeting of the Rowan Tennis and Croquet Association was held at the bank last Monday evening when the following officers were elected: President, William A. Rietz; Vice President, G. W. Whitten; secretary, Rev. H. Tomkinson; Treasurer, Guy Sheldon.

It was decided to limit the membership to twenty five. The courts are already fixed up and everything points to a successful season. Games are being arranged with outside teams.

The Baccalaurate Sermon will be conducted in the M. E. church on Sunday, May 21, when the preacher will be Rev. Herbert Nye.

The speaker for the Commencement exercises of the High school will be Dr. Frank Mossman, of Morningside College, Sioux City, Iowa.

Next Sunday will be observed as Mothers Day, when a special service will be held in the Methodist church. The pastor, Rev. Harold Tomkinson, will preach on "America's uncrowned Queen." Let us fall in line with thousands of people who will next Sunday, "Render tribute to whom tribute is due" by being present at church.

The Missionary society of the Congregational church met at the home of Mrs. E. Bingham last Thursday afternoon. A good crowd attended. Mrs. H. J. C. Box was the leader and a very interesting lesson was studied concerning the Missionary work in Porta Rica.

The Young People's Christian Endavor held their regular montnly business meeting and social hour at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jake Aldinger Thursday evening. Several car loads went from town well loaded. Over fifty young people attended this social time. After a short business meeting the evening was turned over to the entertainment committee and was spent in games and music. Much fun was derived from several of the games. Refreshments of ice creamand wafers were served and the crowd left at quite a late hour voting a very pleasant evening.

Saturday afternoon a number of the Rowan people attended a demonstration at the home of Mrs. Wm Moellering, at which time she demonstrated to us the Burrows course in Music for children. This is surely a wonderful course for beginners as the method of teaching the formally dry parts of music are dressed up in little songs and games which leave them so indelibly marked on the memory that they will never be forgotten. All present felt the afternoon had been very profitably spent.

The M. E. Ladies Aid Society met Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. H. Whitten. A good crowd attended this meeting. A lunch was served which was enjoyed by all.

Several of the Rowan people attended the show "Ten Night's in a Barroom" which was shown at Belmond Monday night.

Miss Florence Nordmeyer, of Livermore, spent the week end in Rowan with her friend, Miss Laura McCallum.

Fletcher and Son traded their dray truck to a man at Thornton, Monday for two teams.

The work on the state road is progressing nicely now. The grading is finished in town and the men moved to Goodell Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Robinson, of Meservey sepnt the week end with Rowan friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Mantle entertained at dinner Sunday the following guests: Mr. and Mrs. Ed Miller and daughter, Blanche, of Clarion, Mr. Gordon Thomas of Eagle Grove, George Miller, of Hampton, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Jacobs of Goodell, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Gates, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brooks and family, Miss Fannie Reed and Chalie Graff.

Mr. E. J. Lineweaver went to Iowa City last week to return home with his wife who has been in the hospital at that place. She is improving slowly in health.

Tom Lindsey was on the sick list the past week.

Miss Izetta Fletcher went to Fort Dodge last Wednesday to visit her sister, Mrs. Morris Sullivan and help them move and settle.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Whitten are rejoicing over the arrival of a ten pound baby boy who arrived at their home last Friday. His name is Daniel Eugene. Mother and baby are reported as doing fine.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Snow, of Goldfield visited at the home of her sister, Mrs. Will Whitten Friday.

Miss Jennette Kervink spent the week end with Miss Edna McCutcheon at her home in Goldtienld.

Miss Susan Duffy spent the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Will Duffy.

Mrs. Hannah Whitten was called to Harrold So. Dak. Tuesday evening to attend the funeral of a niece.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Whitten and daughter, Gladys, Evelyn and Wayne Whitten and Miss Angie Baines spent Sunday in Coulter at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harm Brinkman.

The W. C. T. U. will meet Wednesday May 17th, at the home of Mrs. R. H. Kieth. The leader will be Mrs. Hannah Whitten. Everyone is invitd to come.

Mrs. Jens Kjar is on the sick list with tonsilitis.

Grace Hubbell is assisting at the hotel this week.

Mr. Guy Stewert and Mr. Benson visited at their home in Armstrong and Algona, respectively, the first of the week.

Miss Zelda Fuller, of Fort Dodge spent Sunday with her friend Miss Izetta Fletcher.

Mr. and Mrs. Verni McCallum, of Chicago came the first of last week for a visit at the home of his parents Mr. and Mrs. L. A. McCallum.

Mrs. J. K. Johnson, of Allison is visiting at the home of her son C. E. and family. Mrs. C. E. Johnson does not improve in health as rapidly as could be hoped.

Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Olson have moved back into the Clint Kercheval residence.

Mrs. Ida Ryder has vacated her residence in town and will live with her son on the farm this summer.

George Miller, of Hampton, was a week end visitor with Rowan relatives and friends.

J. A. Whitten sells Goodyear tires.

Dr. C. O. Ring, Chiropractor, Rowan.

Mrs. William Steffens and daughter Dorothy and Clarence Lindsey motored to Colfax Saturday where Mrs. Steffens will enter the Sanitorium for traetment for rheumatism. She has been suffering from this disease all winter. Mr. Lindsey returned Sunday. Miss Dorothy remained with her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Myers called at the J. L. Sinclair home in Clarion Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Ballou and daughter, LaVonne, returned from their six week visit with relatives in California, Friday afternoon. They rport a very pleasant time. Mr. Ballou resumed his duties at the Rock Island depot Monday, Mr. Denniger, the young man who had been supply going to another place Monday night.

REMEMBER

The International Line is the most complete line on the market today. Every machine has that built-in value and is backed by the same unequalled service you have learned to expect from those good old names —Mc Cormick and Deering.

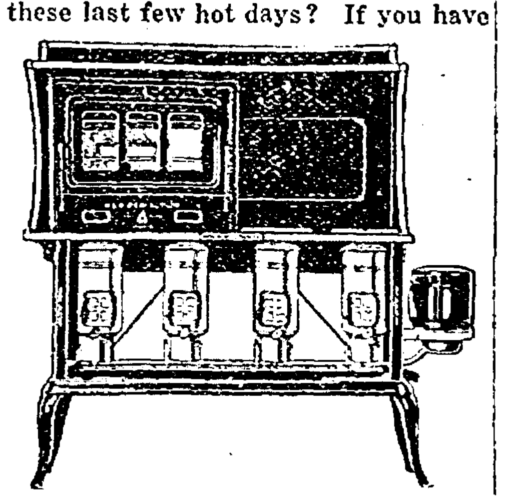
If every unwise man died, no one would be buried; there would be no one to dig the grave.

You still have until May 20th to buy that International Tractor and get the plow free. Come in and let us tell you about the proposition.

Remember that you are always welcome to make our store your stopping place when in town. We are always glad to have you inspect our stock and service. And speaking of Service; have you seen our new Red Wagon? We will admit that our buildings are not the most beautiful but they are full of quality merchandise at consistent prices and there are five people employed who are more than willing to give you a Dollar's service for every dollar spent.

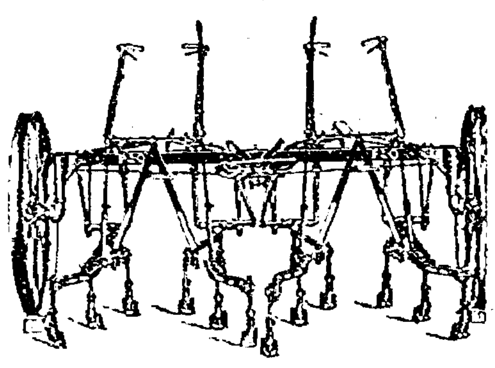
Yes, it was a love match pure and simple—she was pure and he was simple.

Gosh—isn't it hot? Yes, and just think what we can expect this summer when things get really started. Have you been out in the kitchen these last few hot days? If you have you will surely come in and buy the Good Wife one of our oil stoves. And while we are thinking about it a new refrigerator or an electric washing machine might help things out quite a bit.



Get A Big Yield.

From the first day those tender corn plants push through the soil into sight, you look anxiously down the corn rows and picture in your mind's eye the crop to follow, what that crop yield will be depends much on your cutivator and how you use it. Do you like to use it? Is it easily controlled? Does it do the work effectively? These are important questions. In buying our line of cultivators we beleive we have taken into consideration all of these features. Come in and talk it over.



Swat the Fly

Get the fly before he gets you. Mankind has no more deadly ememy than the fly. They kill thousands of people every year by spreading disease. A female fly killed in May will make neary six billion fewer flies in September. Screen your porches and windows. We carry a full line of both black and aluminum screen.

UNTESTED FAMILY COW CAUSES DEATH OF TWO

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

The Chicago Drovers Journal of April 8th, cites another startling instance of disease and death in a happy farm family caused by drinking milk from a tubercular cow in an untested herd in Indiana. The account of the case is furnished the Drovers Journal by one who is thoughly familiar with all the facts of the tragedy. The description below presents the bare facts without exaggeration or sensationalism:

Wife is First Victim

During 1917 the wife of a prominent farmer, banker and merchant in this community began to fail in health, become feverish and finally in a period of six months after the first conditions became evident their doctor suspected tuberculosis. Yet he thought it could barely be possible because of the strict sanitary conditions and the great precaution used on this farm.

On this farm a fine herd of some 100 purebreds, and a single Jersey which was producing the family's milk supply, rich, creamy and in abundance. This Jersey had been on the farm for several years. After a thorough going over of the entire herd by a veterinarian, accompanied by the family doctor, they were still at a loss to find a causative agent among the cattle to suspect tuberculosis. However, suspicion fell on the Jersey cow. A pathalogical examination was made of her whole cream, skim milk and butter, with the result tubercular bacilli were found in great quantities.

Ignore First Warning of Danger

The fine looking, good old high producing Jersey was condemned and killed on the farm. On post mortem examination her condition was pronounced 100 per cent generalized case of tuberculosis. Her undder was typical incubator for the bacteria.

Then, is was thought all was well again. During the early period of the world war the eldest son, 23 years of age, enlisted for service, was examined and found to be physically perfect—170 pounds of real bone, muscle and energy. He was sent overseas and after 18 months of army life returned to the place of his birth to further his father's aim and desire, namely, to manage the farm and the herd. During this interval another family cow was chosen from the 125 purebreds and taken from the herd and placed alone. During three years she brought three heifer calves into the world and three more were nursing her at intervals. The young man consumed the milk and butter from this chosen cow.

First Son Succombs.

In April, 1921, this healty young man was held up in an unexpected blizzard, an exposure was experienced and within three days he was confined to his bed. The doctor first suspected lung trouble or pneumonia, and in just 90 days the death toll was sounded. An autopsy was held and tuberculosis found in general form.

During February 1922, the intrdermal test was applied to 73 cattle on the farm, all purebreds, containing this family milch cow and the six calves which she raised. 13 head reacted to the test, including this choice cow and her six calves. The reactors were sent to Chicago, slaughtered under federal inspection, and on post mortem the cow and one of her calves were wholly condemned as having generalized tuberculosis. The remaining animals showed prominent lesions in the spreading stage.

The latest chapter to the case was written when the suspected cow was slaughtered in the Chicago abattoir where such animals are handled. The owner of the cow, and bereaved father after wittnessing the examination of the carcass, and being convinced of her diseased condition, was overcome with grief when he realized that he might have protected his dear ones from the ravages of a dreaded disease.

Apply to the County Agent for the Federal test for your herd. Additional appropriation is being voted by congress for payment of indemnities for cattle affected with T. B. This money will be available in Iowa as soon as the bill is passed. Better get your application in at once because 69 applications from Wright County are on file at the State veterinarians office in Des Moines at present.

DEATH SPECTRE NEAR

Thirty-three million starving men, women and children in the Volga Valley of Russia know death. The death rate now exceeds 35,000 a day and the toll promises to surpass that of the "black plague" in the Fourteenth century. Babies and little children are taken first, being unable to subsist on the famine "bread," made from horse manure and camel dung, executives of the American committee, 405 Steinway building, Chicago, say. The picture shows a Russian peasant woman and her little boy waiting in a hovel for death.

DON'T PLANT POTATOES

(From Farm Bureau Exchange)

Don't plant any potatoes without first giving them the formaldehyde treatment—one pint of formaldehyde, 30 gallon of water, leaving the potatoes in two hours, then dry them. This should be done before they are cut. Don't plant potatoes on soil that had scabby potatoes in before.

The saddest thing about a late spring is that it delays the watermelon.

THE FARMER'S WIFE

Salads should form an important part of the day's menu during these first spring days. In order to make an attractive, tasty salad have the salad materils tender, crisp nd cold.

--Mayonnaise Dressing for spring salads is made as follows: 1t. mustard, 1 t. salt, 1 t. powdered sugar, few grains cayenne, 2 t. lemon juice, yolks of two eggs, 2 t. vinegar, 1½ c. olive oil. Mix dry ingredients, add egg yolks and when well mixed add ½ t. vinegar. Add oil gradually, at first drop by drop, stirring constantly. As mixture thickens, thin with vinegar or lemon juice. Add oil and vinegar or lemon juice alternately until all is used, stirring or beating constanty. If oil is added to rapidly, dressing will have a curdled appearance. A smooth consistency may be restored by taking another yolk of egg and adding mixture (curdled) to it slowly. It is desirable to have bowl containing mixture placed in crushed ice. Olive oil should throughly chilled when used in this dressing. Mayonnaise should be stiff enough to hold its shape. It soon liquifies when added to meat or vegetables; therefore it should be added just before serving time.

Thousand Island Dressing— 1 c. mayonnaise, 1 t. tarragon vinegar, ¼ t. paprika, 1 t. chopped chives, 1 t. chopped pimentos, 1 t. chopped green peppers, 1 cooked egg yolk grated, 1 t. catsup, 1-3 c. chili sauce. To the mayonnaise add the chopped and grated ingredients. Mix thoroughly then add the vinegar. If the dressing is too thick, add some olive oil and stir vigorously.

GOODELL NEWS NOTES

Rev. Tom Roberts of Sheffield, will deliver the Baccalaureate address for the High school graduating class at th U. B. church on May 14, 8 p. m. Rev. is the State Chaplain for the American Legion. He is a fine speaker and will give an excellent address.

Last Friday morning at five o'clock the barn of Mrs. Julia Wilson, who lives east of Twin Lakes, burned with all of its contents. A cow and ten calves were burned; the horses and other stock having been turned out during the night. A call over the telephone brought the neighbors who by hard work saved the corn crib and the granary. The building and stock were covered by insurance.

Mr. L. G. Avery and family and Mrs. John Ahrnkiel went to Hampton on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Surbale of Garner were calling on friends of Goodell on Thursday evening.

Supt. O. Nelson was taken sick Wednesday morning with the flu and has been confined to his bed since.

Mrs. H. T. Miller is teaching Mr. Nelson's classes while he is sick.

Mr. and Mrs. Wood of Marshalltown came Saturday to visit at her mother, Mrs. Africa. Mr. Wood returned to Marshalltown the first part of the week, but Mrs. Wood will remain some time to help care for little Fray Alice who is sick with the flu.

Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. O. Sandberg, daughter Edith and son, Carl visited at the home of Mr. Bensons near Kanawha.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ellsworth called at the home of Mrs. Julia Wilson on Sunday afternoon.

Miss Alva Matson is spending some time in Des Moines this week.

The T. R. Burgess family visited at the home of Matt Smith on Sunday.

A large number attended the opening of the Catholic church on Sunday. The past week they were busy cleaning up the ground and leveling up around the church.

Mrs. O. Nelson's sister came Monday to visit her.

Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Own Conwell drove to Clear Lake and visited the fish hatchery.

U. B. Church Notes

The Womens Missionary Association held their monthly meeting last Friday.

Miss Alma Ruka attended the State Sunday School at Cedar Rapids last week. She will make her report next Sunday at the close of the Sunday school hour. It was a great convention and she will have some good things to tell us.

May the 14 will be observed as Mother's Day. A sermon appropriate for the occasion will be preached in the morning.

The Baccalaureate service will take place at the evening service.

The attendance at Sunday and church services has been good since the roads are good. You are invited to meet with us for the study of the Word and worship.

Pastor, H. T. Miller.

"BUSINESS IS GOOD"

The farmer sells a load of wheat,
And all the world grows fair and sweet:

He hums a couple of cheerful tunes,
And pays the grocer for his prunes;

The Grocer who had the blues,
Now buys his wife a pair of shoes.

That ten the Shoeman thinks God-sent,
And runs and pays it on the rent.

Next day the Rent Man hands the ten
To Jones and Smith the Hardware men.

And Billy Jones, he tells his Frau,
That business is improving now.

And cheers her up and says "My dear,
You've been quite feeble for a year.

I'm thinking you should have a rest,
You'd better take a trip out west."

And in a couple days the Frau,
Is on the farm of Joshua Howe.

She pays her board to Farmer Howe,
Who take the bill and says, "I swow,

Here's something that just can't be beat,
This bill's the one I got for wheat."

He hums a couple cheerful tunes,
And goes and buys a lot more prunes.

Use above as your guide to help business.
Start the $10.00 right now.

School Notes

The High school play, "Deacon Dubbs" given last Friday night, drew a packed house. Each individual of the caste, acted the part in a manner bordering on professionalism. Miss Eva Whetstone who trained the players, deserves much praise and credit for their excellent showing.

The Misses Ruth and Alma Johnson assisted very materially in the musical part of the program.

The net receipts will approximate seventy five dollars.

Next Sunday evening at eight o'clock Rev. Hyenga of the local Reformed church, will deliver the Baccalaureate sermon. The excerises will be held in the school auditorium. Music will be furnished by a choir composed of representatives from the choirs of the local churches.

The Commencement exercises will be given next Wednesday and Thursday evening, May 17 and 18 respectively. The eighth grade graduation exercises will held on the former date and the High School Commencement on the latter. Rev. A. D. Mohr of the local Congregational church will deliver the address for the eighth grade excerises and Rev. Wilkinson of the Methodist church will give the Commencement address. Subject,—"Running for a Prize."

Our Movie for Tuesday evening May 9, is "A Love Sublime." This will probably be the last one put on by the school, this year. The rain on Tuesday evening May 2, cut our attendance down to such an extent as to cause a slight financial loss. We have admitted school children free to all the shows and are ahead to the extent of over forty dollars. As we expect to use all surplus funds for the library and laboratory we can not stane very many losses. Remember when you attend our Movies the surplus funds save you just that much in taxes—on the same principle as extracting teeth without pain.

The Health Program given under the auspices of the Red Cross, at the school auditorium was a decided success. The school children put on a short program in the afternoon, consisting of health songs and dialogues. Prof. Waterman did not arrive in time to deliver the afternoon lecture. The evening excerises consisted of several films illustrating personal and community sanitation. Prof. Waterman also lectured on "Health and Sanitation." The Health Poster display was very interesting and instructive. The sixth grade children prepared many of the postes. This part of the program was under the management of Mrs. Geo. Dunn and Mrs. C. R. Clark. This meeting was one of several series of meetings in a better health campaign being put on in Franklin county by Miss Harriett Lee, our county nurse.

PREPARATION COST PER ACRE

The following report on the cost of preparing and seeding a field of oats has been conducted with the aim in view of giving the members of the Vocational Class some idea of the actual expense incurred in putting in a field of oats in this community. Each field crop is divided into what we call operation units; namely, preparation of seed bed and seeding; harvesting; threshing and marketing. In the corn crop we have five units

The table in the following report are the actual figures from the different farms with the costs of labor and machinery figured as follows: man Hrs. 20c per hour, horse labor 10c per hour, machinery labor 5c per each horse hour, tractor hours 80c to $1.00 per hour depending on the size of the machine. These labor costs are sent out by the Farm Management Dept. of our state based upon the actual labor cost on one hundred twenty successful farms in Iowa.

What It Costs To Seed Oats

In the first place the cost of seeding and preparing the land for oats depends upon the quality and quantity of work done. Usually when more work is put into the preparation and seeding a larger yield is obtained when the oats are harvested in the fall. Using a tractor helps in many cases to put in the crop quicker therefore reducing the net cost per acre.

The best way to seed oats on stalks as has been experiemented is to double disc, sow with broadcast seeder, single disc, then cross harrow. Where the stalks are not heavy single discing the first time is sufficient. Another good method is to corner disc, sow, then straight disc and harrow. This method levels off the ground. The following is the cost per acre for seeding and preparation of the seed bed for oats and barley seeding on the different farms of the Vocational Agriculture Class members:

Farm No. 1. Cost per acre $1.029
No. Acres 12.
Farm No. 2. Cost per acre $1.365
No. acres 40.
Farm No 3. Coct per acre $ .892
No. acres 40.
Farm No. 4. Cost per acre $ .874
No. acres 80.
Farm No. 5. Cost per acre $1.072
No. acres 40.
Farm No. 6. Cost per acre $1.225
No acres 45.
Farm No. 7. Cost per acre $1.087
No. acres 65.
Farm No. 8. Cost per acre $1.228
No. acres 25.
Farm No. 9. Cost per acre $1.48
No. acres 15.
Farm No. 10. Cost per acre $1.34
No. acres 35.
Farm No. 11. Cost per acre $1.096
No. acres 60.

The small cost per acre of the farms No. one and four was because a tractor was used. The cost was more as on farms No. eight and nine because it cost more to seed a small field of oats than it does to seed a large field. The relative small cost for seeding field No. three was because the land was disced only once. Whether this is a paying proposition or not will be told next fall when the yield per acre is found—By Cecil Riley.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

They turned in at the entrance of a house in the middle of the block and went up the low, wide stone steps; the door opened to them without ring or knock; a servant in the hall within took Alan's hat and coat, and he followed Constance past some great room upon his right to a smaller one farther down the hall.

"Will you wait here, please?" she asked.

He sat down, and she left him; when her footsteps had died away, and he could hear no other sounds except the occasional soft tread of some servant, he twisted himself about in his chair and looked around. Who were these Sherrills? Who was Corvet, and what was his relation to the Sherrills? What, beyond all, was their and Corvet's relation to Alan Conrad—to himself? The shock and confusion he had felt at the nature of his reception in Corvet's house, and the strangeness of his transition from his little Kansas town to a place and people such as this, had prevented him from inquiring directly from Constance Sherrill as to that; and, on her part, she had assumed, plainly, that he already knew and need not be told.

He straightened and looked about, then got up, as Constance Sherrill came back into the room.

"Father is not here just now," she said. "We weren't sure from your telegram exactly at what hour you would arrive, and that was why I waited at Mr. Corvet's to be sure we wouldn't miss you. I have telephoned father, and he's coming home at once."

She hesitated an instant in the doorway, then turned to go out again.

"Miss Sherrill—" he said.

She halted. "Yes."

"You told me you had been waiting for me to come and explain my connection with Mr. Corvet. Well—I can't do that; that is what I came here hoping to find out."

She came back toward him slowly.

"What do you mean?" she asked.

He fought down and controlled resolutely the excitement in his voice, as he told her rapidly the little he knew about himself.

He could not tell definitely how she was affected by what he said. She flushed slightly, following her first start of surprise after he had begun to speak; when he had finished, he saw that she was a little pale.

"Then you don't know anything about Mr. Corvet at all," she said.

"No; until I got his letter sending for me here, I'd never seen or heard his name."

She was thoughtful for a moment.

"Thank you for telling me," she said. "I'll tell my father when he comes."

"Your father is—?" he ventured.

She understood now that the name of Sherrill had meant nothing to him. "Father is Mr. Corvet's closest friend, and his business partner as well," she explained.

He thought she was going to tell him something more about them; but she seemed to decide to leave that for her father to do. She crossed to the big chair beside the grate and seated herself. As she sat looking at him, hands clasped beneath her chin, and her elbows resting on the arm of the chair, there was speculation and interest in her gaze; but she did not ask him anything more about himself.

She, he saw, was listening, like himself, for the sound of Sherrill's arrival at the house; and when it came she recognized it first, rose, and excused herself. He heard her voice in the hall, then her father's deeper voice which answered; and ten minutes later, he looked up to see the man these things had told him must be Sherrill standing in the door and looking at him.

Alan had arisen at sight of him; Sherrill, as he came in, motioned him back to his seat; he did not sit down himself, but crossed to the mantel and leaned against it.

"I am Lawrence Sherrill," he said.

As the tall, graceful, thoughtful man stood looking down at him, Alan could tell nothing of the attitude of this friend of Benjamin Corvet toward himself. His manner had the same reserve toward Alan, the same questioning consideration of him, that Constance Sherrill had had after Alan had told her about himself.

"My daughter has repeated to me what you told her, Mr. Conrad," Sherrill observed. "Is there anything you want to add to me regarding that?"

"There's nothing I can add," Alan answered. "I told her all that I know about myself."

"And about Mr. Corvet?"

"I know nothing at all about Mr. Corvet."

"I am going to tell you some things about Mr. Corvet," Sherrill said. "I had reason—I do not want to explain just yet what that reason was—for thinking you could tell us certain things about Mr. Corvet, which would, perhaps, make plainer what has happened to him. When I tell you about him now, it is in the hope that, in that way, I may awake some forgotten memory of him in you; if not that, you may discover some coincidence of dates or events in Corvet's life with dates or events in your own. Will you tell me frankly, if you do discover anything like that?"

"Yes; certainly."

For several moments, Sherrill paced up and down before the fire; then he returned to his place before the mantel.

"I first met Benjamin Corvet," he commenced, "nearly thirty years ago. I had come West for the first time the year before; I was about your own age and had been graduated from college only a short time, and a business opening had offered itself here. Times were booming on the Great Lakes. Chicago, which had more than recovered from the fire, was doubling its population every decade; Cleveland, Duluth, and Milwaukee were leaping up as ports. Men were growing millions of bushels of grain which they couldn't ship except by lake; hundreds of thousands of tons of ore had to go by water; and there were tens of millions of feet of pine and hardwood from the Michigan forests. Sailing vessels, it is true, had seen their day and were disappearing from the lakes; were being 'sold,' many of them, as the saying is, 'to the insurance companies' by deliberate wrecking. Steamers were taking their place. Towing had come in. I felt, young man though I was, that this transportation matter was all one thing, and that in the end the railroads would own the ships. I have never engaged very actively in the operation of the ships; my daughter would like me to be more active in it than I have been; but ever since, I have had money in lake vessels. It was the year that I began that sort of investment that I first met Corvet."

Alan looked up quickly. "Mr. Corvet was—?" he asked.

"Corvet was—is a lakeman," Sherrill said.

Alan sat motionless, as he recollected the strange exaltation that had come to him when he saw the lake for the first time. Should he tell Sherrill of that? He decided it was too vague, too indefinite to be mentioned; no doubt any other man used only to the prairie might have felt the same.

"He was a shipowner, then," he said.

"Yes; he was a shipowner—not, however, on a large scale at that time. He had been a master, sailing ships which belonged to others; then he had sailed one of his own. He was operating then, I believe, two vessels; but with the boom times on the lakes, his interests were beginning to expand. I met him frequently in the next few years, and we became close friends."

Sherrill broke off and stared an instant down at the rug. Alan bent forward; he made no interruption but only watched Sherrill attentively.

"Between 1886, when I first met him, and 1895, Corvet laid the foundation of great success; his boats seemed lucky, men liked to work for him, and he got the best skippers and crews. There was a saying that in storm a Corvet ship never asked help; it gave it; certainly in twenty years no Corvet ship had suffered serious disaster. Corvet was not yet rich, but unless accident or undue competition intervened, he was certain to become so. Then something happened."

Sherrill looked away at evident loss how to describe it.

"To the ships?" Alan asked him.

"No; to him. In 1896, for no apparent reason, a great change came over him."

"In 1896!"

"That was the year."

Alan bent forward, his heart throbbing in his throat. "That was also the year when I was brought and left with the Weltons in Kansas," he said.

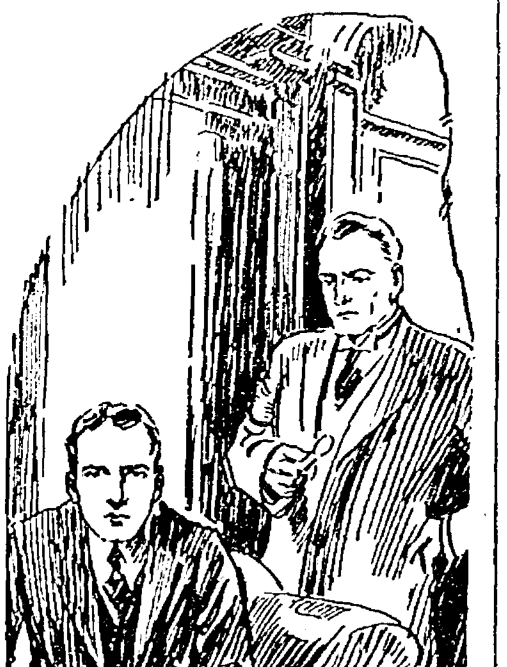
Sherrill did not speak for a moment. "I thought," he said finally, "it must have been about that time; but you did not tell my daughter the exact date."

"What kind of change came over him that year?" Alan asked.

Sherrill gazed down at the rug, then at Alan, then past him. "A change in his way of living," he replied. "The Corvet line of boats went on, expanded; interests were acquired in other lines; and Corvet and those allied with him swiftly grew rich. But in all this great development, for which Corvet's genius and ability had laid the foundation, Corvet himself ceased to take active part. He took into partnership, about a year later, Henry Spearman, a young man who had been merely a mate on one of his ships. This proved subsequently to have been a good business move, for Spearman had tremendous energy, daring, and enterprise; and no doubt Corvet had recognized these qualities in him before others did. Since then he has been ostensibly and publicly the head of the concern, but he has left the management almost entirely to Spearman. The personal change to Corvet at that time is harder for me to describe to you."

Sherrill halted, his eyes dark with thought, his lips pressed closely together; Alan waited.

"When I saw Corvet again, in the summer of '96—I had been South during the latter part of the winter and East through the spring—I was impressed by the vague but, to me, alarming change in him. I was reminded, I recall, of a friend I had had in college who had thought he was in perfect health and had gone to an examiner for life insurance and had been refused, and was trying to deny to himself and others that anything could be the matter. But with Corvet I knew the trouble was not physical. The next year his wife left him."



"That Was 1897."

"The year of—?" Alan asked.

"That was 1897. There was no question of their understanding and affection up to the very time she so strangely left him. She died in France in the spring of 1910, and Corvet's first information of her death came to him through a paragraph in a newspaper."

Alan had started; Sherrill looked at him questioningly.

"The spring of 1910," Alan explained, "was when I received the bank draft for fifteen hundred dollars."

Sherrill nodded; he did not seem surprised to hear this; rather it appeared to be confirmation of something in his own thought.

"Following his wife's leaving him," Sherrill went on, "Corvet saw very little of any one. He spent most of his time in his own house; occasionally he lunched at his club, at rare intervals, and always unexpectedly, he appeared at his office. I remember that summer he was terribly disturbed because one of his ships was lost. The Corvet record was broken; a Corvet ship had appealed for help; a Corvet vessel had not reached port. . . . And later in the fall, when two deckhands were washed from another of his vessels and drowned, he was again greatly wrought up, though his ships still had a most favorable record. In 1902 I proposed to him that I buy full ownership in the vessels I partly controlled and ally them with those he and Spearman operated. Since then, the firm name has been Corvet, Sherrill, and Spearman.

"Our friendship had strengthened and ripened during those years. The intense activity of Corvet's mind, which as a younger man he had directed wholly to the shipping, was directed, after he had isolated himself in this way, to other things. He took up almost feverishly an immense number of studies—strange studies most of them for a man whose youth had been almost violently active and who had once been a lake captain. I cannot tell you what they all were—geology, ethnology, nearly a score of subjects; he corresponded with various scientific societies; he has given almost the whole of his attention to such things for about twenty years. But he has made very few acquaintances in that time, and has kept almost none of his old friendships. He has lived alone in the house on Astor street with only one servant—the same one all these years.

"The only house he has visited with any frequency has been mine. He has always liked my wife; he had—he has a great affection for my daughter, who, when she was a child, ran in and out of his home as she pleased. My daughter believes now that his present disappearance—whatever has happened to him—is connected in some way with herself. I do not think that is so—"

Sherrill broke off and stood in thought for a moment; he seemed to consider, and to decide that it was not necessary to say anything more on that subject.

"Is there anything in what I have told you which makes it possible for you to recollect or to explain?"

Alan shook his head, flushed, and then grew a little pale. What Sherrill told him had excited him by the coincidences it offered between events in Benjamin Corvet's life and his own; it had not made him "recollect" Corvet, but it had given definiteness and direction to his speculations as to Corvet's relation to himself.

Sherrill drew one of the large chairs nearer to Alan and sat down facing him. He felt in an inner pocket and brought out an envelope; from the envelope he took three pictures, and handed the smallest of them to Alan. As Alan took it, he saw that it was a tintype of himself as a round-faced boy of seven.

"That is you?" Sherrill asked.

"Yes; it was taken by the photographer in Blue Rapids."

"And this?"

The second picture, Alan saw, was one that had been taken in front of the barn at the farm. It showed Alan at twelve, in overalls and barefooted, holding a stick over his head at which a shepherd dog was jumping.

"Yes, that is Shep and I, Mr. Sherrill. It was taken by a man who stopped at the house for dinner one day; he liked Shep and wanted a picture of him; so he got me to make Shep jump, and he took it."

"Doesn't it occur to you that it was your picture he wanted, and that he had been sent to get it? I wanted your verification that these earlier pictures were of you, but this last one is easily recognizable."

Sherrill unfolded the third picture; it was larger than the others and had been folded across the middle to get it into the envelope. Alan leaned forward to look at it.

"That is the University of Kansas football team," he said. "I am the second one in the front row; I played end my junior year and tackle when I was a senior. Mr. Corvet—?"

"Yes; Mr. Corvet had these pictures. They came into my possession day before yesterday, the day after Corvet disappeared; I do not want to tell just yet how they did that."

Alan's face, which had been flushed at first with excitement, had gone quite pale, and his hands, as he clenched and unclenched them nervously, were cold, and his lips were very dry. He could think of no possible relationship between Benjamin Corvet and himself, except one, which could account for Corvet's obtaining and keeping these pictures of him through the years.

"I think you know who I am," Alan said.

"You have guessed, if I am not mistaken, that you are Corvet's son."

The color flamed to Alan's face for an instant, then left it paler than before. "I thought it must be that way," he answered; "but you said he had no children."

"Benjamin Corvet and his wife had no children."

"I thought that was what you meant." A twinge twisted Alan's face; he tried to control it but for a moment could not.

"Do not misapprehend your father," Sherrill said quietly. "I cannot prevent what other people may think when they learn this; but I do not share such thoughts with them. There is much in this I cannot understand; but I know that it is not merely the result of what others may think it—of 'a wife in more ports than one,' as you will hear the lakemen put it. What lies under this is some great misadventure which had changed and frustrated all your father's life."

Sherrill crossed the room and rang for a servant.

"I am going to ask you to be my guest for a short time, Alan," he announced. "I have had your bag carried to your room; the man will show you which one it is."

Alan hesitated; he felt that Sherrill had not told him all he knew—that there were some things Sherrill purposely was withholding from him; but he could not force Sherrill to tell more than he wished; so after an instant's irresolution, he accepted the dismissal.

Sherrill walked with him to the door, and gave his directions to the servant; he stood watching, as Alan and the man went up the stairs. Then he went back and seated himself in the chair Alan had occupied, and sat with hands grasping the arms of the chair while he stared into the fire.

He seemed to be considering and debating something within himself; and presently he seemed to come to a decision. He went up the stairs and on the second floor he went to a front room and knocked. Alan's voice told him to come in. Sherrill went in and, when he had made sure that the servant was not with Alan, he closed the door carefully behind him.

Then he turned back to Alan, and for an instant stood indecisive as though he did not know how to begin what he wanted to say. As he glanced down at a key he took from his pocket, his indecision seemed to receive direction and inspiration from it; and he put it down on Alan's dresser.

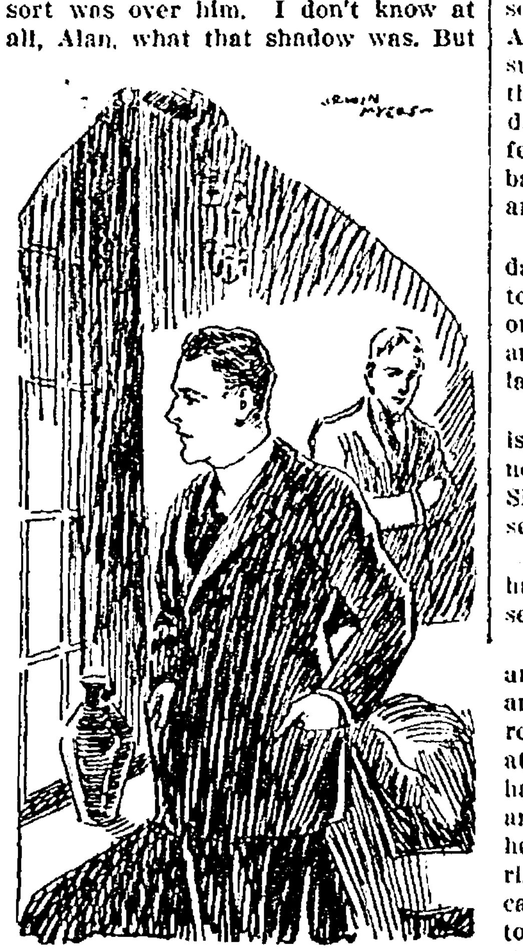
"I've brought you," he said evenly, "the key to your house."

Alan gazed at him, bewildered. "The key to my house?"

"To the house on Astor street," Sherrill confirmed. "Your father deeded the house and its furniture and all its contents to you the day before he disappeared. I have not the deed here; it came into my hands the day before yesterday at the same time I got possession of the pictures which might—or might not, for all I knew then—be you. I have the deed down town and will give it to you. The house is yours in fee simple, given you by your father, not bequeathed to you by him to become your property after his death. He meant by that, I think, even more than the mere acknowledgment that he is your father."

Sherrill walked to the window and stood as though looking out, but his eyes were blank with thought.

"For almost twenty years," he said, "your father, as I have told you, lived in that house practically alone; during all those years a shadow of some sort was over him. I don't know at all, Alan, what that shadow was. But it is certain that whatever it was that had changed him from the man he was when I first knew him culminated three days ago when he wrote to you. It may be that the consequences of his writing to you were such that, after he had sent the letter, he could not bring himself to face them and so has merely . . . gone away. In that case, as we stand here talking, he is still alive. On the other hand, his writing you may have precipitated something that I know nothing of. In either case, if he has left anywhere any evidence of what it is that changed and oppressed him for all these years, or if there is any evidence of what has happened to him now, it will be found in his house."



"For Almost Twenty Years," He Said, "Your Father, as I Have Told You, Lived in That House Practically Alone."

Sherrill turned back to Alan. "It is for you—not me, Alan," he said simply, "to make that search. I have thought seriously about it, this last half hour, and have decided that is as he would want it—perhaps as he did want it—to be. He could have told me what his trouble was any time in these twenty years, if he had been willing I should know; but he never did. Your father, of course, had a key to the front door like this one; his servant has a key to the servants' entrance. I do not know of any other keys."

"The servant is in charge there now?" Alan asked.

"Just now there is no one in the house. The servant, after your father disappeared, thought that, if he had merely gone away, he might have gone back to his birthplace near Manistique, and he went up there to look for him. I had a wire from him today that he had not found him and was coming back."

Sherrill waited a moment to see whether there was anything more Alan wanted to ask; then he went out.

CHAPTER IV.

"Arrived Safe; Well."

As the door closed behind Sherrill, Alan went over to the dresser and picked up the key which Sherrill had left. He put it, after a moment, on the ring with two or three other keys he had, and dropped them into his pocket; then he crossed to a chair and sat down.

Sherrill had spoken of the possibility that something might have "happened" to Corvet; but it was plain he did not believe he had met with actual violence. He had left it to Alan to examine Corvet's house; but he had not urged Alan to examine it at once; he had left the time of the examination to be determined by Alan. This showed clearly that Sherrill believed—perhaps had sufficient reason for believing—that Corvet had simply "gone away." Corvet, Sherrill had said, had married in 1889. But Sherrill in long knowledge of his friend, had shown firm conviction that there had been no mere vulgar liaison in Corvet's life. Did this mean that there might have been some previous marriage of Alan's father—some marriage which had strangely overlapped and nullified his public marriage? In that case, Alan could be, not only in fact but legally, Corvet's son; and such things as this, Alan knew, had sometimes happened, and had happened by a strange combination of events, innocently for all parties. Corvet's public separation from his wife, Sherrill had said, had taken place in 1897, but the actual separation between them might, possibly, have taken place long before that.

The afternoon had changed swiftly into night; dusk had been gathering during his last talk with Sherrill, so that he hardly had been able to see Sherrill's face, and just after Sherrill had left him, full dark had come. Alan did not know how long he had been sitting in the darkness thinking out these things; but now a little clock which had been ticking steadily in the blackness tinkled six. Alan heard a knock at his door, and when it was repeated, he called, "Come in."

The light which came in from the hall, as the door was opened, showed a man servant. The man, after a respectful inquiry, switched on the light. He crossed into the adjoining room—a bedroom; the room where Alan was, he thought, must be a dressing room, and there was a bath between. Presently the man reappeared, and moved softly about the room, unpacking Alan's suitcase. He hung Alan's other suit in the closet on hangers; he put the linen, except for one shirt, in the dresser drawers, and he put Alan's few toilet things with the ivory-backed brushes and comb and other articles on the dressing stand.

Alan wondered, with a sort of trepidation, whether the man would expect to stay and help him dress; but he only put the buttons in the clean shirt and reopened the dresser drawers and laid out a change of things.

"I was to tell you, sir, Mr. Sherrill is sorry he cannot be at home to dinner tonight. Mrs. Sherrill and Miss Sherrill will be here. Dinner is at seven, sir."

Alan dressed slowly, after the man had gone; and at one minute before seven he went downstairs.

There was no one in the lower hall and, after an instant of irresolution and a glance into the empty drawing room, he turned into the small room at the opposite side of the hall. A handsome, stately, rather large woman, whom he found there, introduced herself to him formally as Mrs. Sherrill. Her reserved, yet almost too casual acceptance of Alan's presence, told him that she knew all the particulars about himself which Sherrill had been able to give; and as Constance came down the stairs and joined them half a minute later, Alan was certain that she also knew.

Dinner was announced, and they went into the great dining room, where the table with its linen, silver, and china gleamed under shaded lights. The oldest and most dignified of the three men servants who waited upon them in the dining room Alan thought must be a butler—a species of creature of whom Alan had heard but never had seen; the other servants, at least, received and handed things through him, and took their orders from him.

What Sherrill had told Alan of his father had been iterating itself again and again in Alan's thoughts; now he recalled that Sherrill had said that his daughter believed that Corvet's disappearance had had something to do with her. Alan had wondered at the moment how that could be; and as he watched her across the table and now and then exchanged a comment with her, it puzzled him still more. He had opportunity to ask her when she waited with him in the library, after dinner was finished and her mother had gone upstairs; but he did not see then how to go about it.

"I'm sorry," she said to him, "that we can't be home tonight; but perhaps you would rather be alone?"

He did not answer that.

"Have you a picture here, Miss Sherrill, of—my father?" he asked.

"Uncle Benny had had very few pictures taken; but there is one here."

She went into the study and came back with a book open at a half-tone picture of Benjamin Corvet. Alan took it from her and carried it quickly closer to the light. The face that looked up to him from the heavily glazed page was regular of feature, handsome in a way, and forceful. There were imagination and vigor of thought in the broad, smooth forehead; the eyes were strangely moody and brooding; the mouth was gentle, rather kindly; it was a queerly impelling, haunting face. This was his father! But, as Alan held the picture, gazing down upon it, the only emotion which came to him was realization that he felt none. He had no emotion of any sort; he could not attach to this man, because he bore the name which some one had told him was his father's, the passions which, when dreaming of his father, he had felt.

Alan stood still a moment longer, then, remembering the book which he held, he drew a chair up to the light, and read the short, dry biography of his father printed on the page opposite the portrait. It summarized in a few hundred words his father's life. Alan shut the book and sat thoughtful. The tall clock in the hall struck nine. He got up and went out into the hall and asked for his hat and coat. When they had been brought him, he put them on and went out.

He went down the steps and to the corner and turned west to Astor street. When he reached the house of his father he stopped under a street lamp, looking up at the big, stern old mansion questioningly.

He could not call up any sense that the house was his, any more than he had been able to when Sherrill had told him of it. He own a house on that street! Yet was that in itself any more remarkable than that he should be the guest, the friend of such people as the Sherrills? No one as yet, since Sherrill had told him he was Corvet's son, had called him by name; when they did, what would they call him? Alan Conrad still? Or Alan Corvet?

Kinseth's Store News

Say wasn't it hot yesterday? Regular July weather, seemed like. Sure indication that summer is coming.

And speaking of summer, before you buy that straw hat come in and see the ones we have to offer. Nothing fancy about them, but they're real serviceable ones and cost you only 28 cents.

We've a bunch of little things this week that you can get bargains on. Washing powder, in large packages, for 19 cents. Corn beef in cans of good size at only 20 cents. Cocoa, high grade, just the thing for morning these warm days instead of coffee, two pounds for two bits. Flour at $1.95. Matches a big box for a nickel. These are just a few of them. Come in and ask us about the others and remember when the Store on the Corner says bargains, bargains it is.

Oh, yes, folks; one thing more: DON'T FORGET that we'll deliver to your door ANY TIME of the day. It's part of our service. Just call 19 and get what you want when you want it.

SENIOR CLASS PLAY GIVEN FRIDAY NIGHT

Mrs. Friesleben Dies During Night

Well Known Citizen Answers Last Call During Early Hours of Morning

FUNERAL HELD SUNDAY

Anna Elizabeth Friesleben, nee Wenzel, was born Dec., 5 1855, in Wahra Hesse, Germany. There she received the sacrement of Holy Baptism. She was also instructed in the word of God, and confirmed there. In May of the year 1878 she emigrated with her parents to America, and setteld in the near vicinity of Peru, Ill.

On the 17th day of Feb. 1885 she was united in marriage with Christian Friesleben. The duration of this happy union was a little over 37 years. In the year 1894 she, together with her family, moved to Iowa and settled in the near vicinity of Belmond. In 1901 the family moved onto their own farm in Wisner township, Franklin county, nine ad one-half miles east of Belmond, where she spent many years which were not without the blessing of God. In 1918 she with her husband moved to Belmond, there to spend the remaining years of her life in peace.

Mrs. Friesleben was always a faithful member of the Ev. Lutheran church. Her good deeds towards her church as also towards her pastors, were many. It was always a great joy for her to find her way into the House of God, there to join with the congregation in worshiping, to hear and to learn more of the saving truth of the Word of God. Her good deeds were many but she performed them not for rewards; they came as an outward expression of her faith in Jesus Christ, who alone could save her from her sins.

She always enjoyed the best of health until about five years ago, when heart trouble set in. A few months ago she was taken sick and confined to her bed for some time, but by the grace of God she was soon able to be up and around again. She was apparantly improving in health until the Lord suddenly and unexpectedly called her home. Her death came as a shock to the entire community. On the evening of May 10th she retired in seeming good health. Early on te morning of the 11th about 1:30 she passed away, the Lord calling her in her sleep. She reached the age of 66 years, five months and six days. She leaves to mourn her loss a husband, four sons, John, Henry, Will and Christal, all of this locality; two daughters, (Marie) Mrs. Meier, of Manson, Ia, and (Emma) Mrs. Fred Pletch, of Belmond; four daughters-in-law, and many other relatives and a host of friends. May the Lord bless and comfort those who are near and dear to them.

Funeral services were held Sunday, at the Evangelical Lutheran church in Belmond, Rev. Wippermann assisted by Rev. Meier in charge. Interment was made in the Belmond cemetery.

Out of town relatives and friends who were present at the funeral were Rev. and Mrs. Meier of Manson, Ia; H. Wenzel of Peru Ill; Mrs. A. Moews of Hennepin, Ill: Mr. and Mrs. Gus Vestweber, and Mrs. Bieber, of Lakefield, Minn; Mrs. Henry Long, of Shellrock, Ia.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the friends and neighbors who so kindly comforted and assisted us in the illness and death of our beloved wife and mother, and for the beautiful floral offerings contributed to our loved one.

Christ Friesleben and Children.

Glenn Klemme was a business visitor at Eagle Grove Monday.

Friends in Belmond recently received word of the death at Grandview, Washington, of A. C. Whiting, an old time resident of Belmond. Mr. Whiting will be remembered by many of the older residents of the city, who will extend to the relatives their sympathy.

RADIO CONCERTS COMING FROM MANY PLACES

Concerts Received From Many Middle West Stations And From New York

Concerts over the Radio of the Battery Station and the Independent continue to come in nicely, and some very fine concerts have been received and enjoyed. Many different stations in the middle west have been heard, while market reports are received at noon every day. Last Friday evening was the best that has come thru yet, when St. Paul and Des Moines each gave three selections, Kansas City five and two hours steady from Schnectedy, N. Y. The Schnectedy concert came in clear and loud, so that practically every word could be distinguished. Interference was very little. Static, as a rule this time of the year, is the greatest trouble in getting concerts clearly. Tuesday evening of this week several different stations were heard, Des Moines and Dearborn, Mich., coming in the best, both being clear and loud. Manager Hake, at the Lyric, has been able lately to "step up" some of the concerts so that they could be heard by the audience, thru his amplifier.

RADIO MARKETS YESTERDAY

Radio market reports received yesterday noon give hogs 10 cents lower, prices $10.05 to $10.30, with top $10.35; cattle steady; sheep 25 cents lower. Chicago receipts were 16,000 hogs, 11,000 cattle, 16,000 sheep, with today's estimated receipts at 25,000 hogs, 11,000 cattle, and 12,000 sheep. Rye and barley remained unchanged, oats ¼c lower, corn ½ to 1c lower. Weather report gives showers probably today (Thursday) for Iowa. Seeding thruout the middle west two to three weeks behind. Received from Radio Station WAAW, Omaha Grain Exchange.

SHERIFF'S SALE

STATE OF IOWA, Wright County, ss.

To Rube McFerren, Minnie McFerren, E. F. King, Webster City Savings Bank of Webster City, Iowa, J. A. Daniels, Belmond Lumber Company of Belmond, Iowa, Cato C. Griesy, and James Kenefick:

You are hereby notified that by virtue of a Special execution, to me directed and issued out of the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the State of Iowa, within and for Wright County, upon a judgement rendered in said Court in favor of John Dorenkamp, and against Rube McFerren and Minnie McFerren for the sum of Sixteen Thousand Three Hundred Eighty Two and 18-100 dollars debt, and Two Hundred Twenty-Two and 11-100 dollars costs, I have levied upon the following described Real Estate, to-wit:

The South-east Quarter (SE1-4) of Section Twenty Seven (27) and the Northwest Quarter (NW ¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE1-4) and the Northeast Quarter (NE ¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE 1-4) of Section Thirty-Four (34) all in Township Ninety-Three (93) North, Range Twenty Four (24) West of the 5th P. M. in Wright County, Iowa.

And that on the 9th day of June, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. at the front door of the Court House in Clarion, Wright County, Iowa, I will proceed to sell the same in satisfaction of said execution, together with all legal costs accruing.

Dated at the Sheriff's office, in Clarion, on this 10th day of May, 1922.

JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET PROVES BIG TIME

Some Fine Toasts Given By Students—Program Of Event In Full

Minimum Essentials

Madam toastmistress, fellow students, and faculty. We have been taught that minimum essentials on any subject is the least possible that can be said. So you will find that I am giving the very minimum essentials.

The very least that I can say on the subject of the banquet is that it has been a wonderful success. In speaking for the Senior Class I want to express our sincere appreciation of this entertainment given us by the Juniors.

I shall now get down to the real minimum essentials. First it is essential that Doris talk to at least one of the Jenison's every morning.

Second, it is essential that Harvey get a calling down every two weeks.

Third, it is essential that Lois and Leona wear the same style clothes each day.

Fourth, it is essential that Mildred Parsons and Irving Haupt talk after the 1:15 bell each day.

Fifth, it is essential that Winston look at Marjorie for five minutes just preceding recess.

Sixth, it is essential that Mr. Fyler carries a ring of keys on his belt so that we may hear him coming.

Seventh, it is essential that Beatrice Davenport has her Blood Hounds on the trail.

Eighth, it is essential that Lee come to school every morning with Elizabeth, for how could the school get along without Elizabeth?

Ninth. it is essential that Cecil Riley have a different girl every night in the week.

Tenth, it is essential that Mrs. Peterson be the big boss of the Junior-Senior banquet to make it a real success and fianally, it is essential that I quit if I expect to keep my B. H. S. FRIENDS.

Mr. Fyler's Toast

The topic, "Proof" which was given me suggests different ideas to each one of us, but the program turns our thoughts toward Geometry.

As Seniors you will soon say goodbye to your schoolmates and enter life's work. What kind of a life is yours to be?

You entered High school four years ago, after eight years preparation in the grades, and now you have six years more training along educational lines than the average citizen of the United States. How will this preparation effect yoru life?

Returning again to Geometry, your proposition is "To Live a Successful Life."

You have been given twelve years preparation in the schools of one of the best states in the Union.

You are to prove to the world that the education you have received will enable you to better preform your duties as a citizen in the community in which you live.

And finally comes the Proof, when in a few short days you will receive your diploma and bid farewell to B. H. S. Your Proof is to make "good" in life.

What is a successful life? Each one of us would probably answer the question in a different way, but to me, a successful life is a life of service in which character reigns and the individual does his best at all times, without fear or favor.

Success should not be measured in dollars, but by deeds. Success should not be measured by thoughts, but by action. Even success in High School should not be measured by grades, as many of us may think, but by honest effort, willingness and ability to do the thing at hand promptly and well.

Grades in the High School mean but little to me, but they are a necessary evil of the school system and must semain.

A student with a grade of 70 per cent has worked honestly and faithfully is more deserving of promotion and graduation than one who has received a higher grade, unfairly without effort, because the first has formed a habit that will be an asset in meeting life's problems whereas the latter will have a libility.

Character is the cornerstone of a successful life, and cannot be obtained in a short time. Remember that character is what you are, and not what you may be able to make other people think you are. It is the sum total of all your thoughts and acts, whether good, bad or indifferent.

As you go out into the battle of life, and you will find it to be a battle, remember that high ideals will mean much toward living a successful life.

Perhaps some of you may have heard the story about the small boy who worshipped his pet Bantam hen, but was sorely disappointed in the size egg she laid. One day as the boy's father was pasing the coop he stooped and looked in. There, before the nest and a little above it, he saw suspended by a string a large ostrich egg upon which was written, "Keep Your Eye On This And Do The Best You Can.

The thought I wish to leave with you is, AIM HIGH and do the best you can to be of service to others. "Live not for self alone, but for others, that your life may prove a blessing to mankind." Follow high ideals and you need have no worry about your life being successful.

Axioms and Postulates
(Marjorie Williams)

Madam Toastmistress, Juniors Seniors and Faculty: My subject is Axioms and postulates, so undoubtedly I'm to tell all the truths that are self-evident about the faculty.

Now there are certain things that are self-evident about the faculty to the Seniors, that perhaps the Juniors have not learned as yet, and we deem it wise to pass a few of these on to the coming Senior class.

First, I'll give a hint as to how certain members of the faculty should be treated in order to retain their good will.

Mr. Gruetzmacher's specialty is grades. Now, if for any possible reason you are not satisfied with a grade you receive from him, don't hesitate to see him and complain about it, for he is always so willing to raise a grade you are not satisfied with.

Another thing, don't ever think of bothering to return your report card,

FARM BUREAU NEWS OF WRIGHT COUNTY

Many Interesting Items And Doings Of Farmers' Organizations

By R. M. Edwards

Norway Will Picnic

Members of the Norway Township Farm Bureau are planning an all-day picnic for Thursday, May 25th, Mrs. E. E. Evans and Harold Holm, chairman of the Norway farm bureau organization, have selected the folowing committee members to plan and organize the picnic program:

Ground committee: A. B. Erickson, John O. Engh, W. E. Buck, E. E. Evans, Elmer Thorson.

Refreshments Committee: Ernest Carr, Mrs. L. E. Evans, Austin Espe, Mrs. Bert Espe, Mrs. John Engh.

Program committee: Mrs. E. E. Evans, Henry Holm, Miss Jennie Maage, Harold Holm, Miss Alma Erickson, Mrs. W. E. Buck, Mrs. Edwin Johnson.

Athletic committee: Cryder Wicks, Joe Erickson, Roy Mickelson.

A. J. Shinn of Woodbine, who is an executive member of the State Farm Bureau Federation Board has been secured as the speaker of the occasion. Mr. Shinn has been in Wright county on several other occasions and those who heard him know his ability as a farm bureau speaker.

It will be remembered that Norway township staged a real honest to goodness picnic last year. The picnic was held last year at the W. E .Buck home and will be held at the same place this year. The program committee will report later on the complete program for the day.

Girls' Club Leader Here

Miss Josephine Arnquist, state leader in charge of the Girls' club work is in Wright county this week conducting meetings with the girls' garment clubs of Wright county. Miss Arnquist's work is being carried on with the garment clubs which were organized here when Miss Spencer had charge of the work.

Meetings have been arranged so that Miss Arnquist is meeting with the different garment clubs out in the different communities where the girls live. Great interest has been shown in the girls' club work and our only regret is that we do not have a country club leader who could devote her entire time to boys' and girls' club work in the county.

Livestock Shipping Association Meetings

Martin E. Sar, director of the livestock department of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation at Des Moines, will be in Wright county next week to speak to members of the various livestock shipping associations.

Mr. Sar is a wizard on livestock shiping problems and every farmer who is interested in hearing a real authority on the livestock situation should plan to attend one of the meetings.

The livestock shipping association meetings will be held as follows:

Belmond Monday, May 22, 7:30 p. m., Belmond Township hall.

Clarion, Tuesday, May 23, 7:30 p. m., county agent's office.

Eagle Grove, Wednesday, May 24, 7:30 p. m., Geo. Atwood's office.

Galt, Thursday, May 25, 7:30 p. m., Farmers' Elevator.

Dows, Friday, May 26, 7:30 p. m., Farmers' Elevator.

Woolstock Get-to-Gether

Members of the Woolstock Township Farm Bureau enjoyed a most interesting program at the Center school last Friday evening, May 12th. A program consisting of recitations, dialogues, and a splendid talk by one of the local members was given at this meeting. A short talk was also given by the county agent.

The feature of this meeting was a detailed explanation of a hog feeding experiment which was given by Ed Kirstein. This experiment which was conducted by the Nebraska Agricultural experiment station showed that the quickest and cheapest grains in feeding hogs are by feeding corn and alfalfa. The hogs in this experiment were purchased at $10.00 per cwt. and sold at the end of the experiment at $9.00 per cwt. The hogs which were fed on corn alone showed a loss of 75 cents per head and those which were fed on corn and alfalfa made a profit of $8.62 per head, showing the relative value of alfalfa as a supplement.

Farm Bloc in the Future

Senator Capper of Kansas is now the leader of the farm bloc. He has taken up the leadership where Senator Kenyon left off and under his steering the farmers of the United States are expecting the farm bloc to function with its usual efficiency in securing for them much needed legislation.

Senator Capper outlines the program of the bloc as follows:

"The farm bloc favors a liberal but sane appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, that it may function efficiently and conduct its activities on a scale in conformity with the size and importaance of the industry it serves.

"The farm bloc believes railway freight rates are too high and must come down.

"The farm bloc would restore to state railway commission much of the power taken away from them by an unwarrantable interpretation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"Another measure favored by the farm bloc which will contribute to a permanent and prosperous system of agriculture is the development of the musle shoals project. We should resume work immediately on the government's great fertilizer and power plants on the Tennessee river. I believe it is possible to reduce this one-half if we carry out the Muscle shoals program.

"The farm bloc is supporting the Caper-French Truth-in-fabric bill to compel makers of clothing to brand their goods so that the buyer will know the amount of pure wool and the amount of shoddy in it."

"Clarence" Will Hold Forth That Evening

Senior Class Play Will Be The Big Event Of Week—Plan To Attend

AT SCHOOL AUDITORIUM

Friday evening, May 19, the Senior Class Play "Clarence" will be given at the High School auditorium. Every one will want to see this play as it has a laugh in every line. Around Clarence revolves such a group of characters as only Booth Tarkington can offer.

Cast of Characters

Mrs. Martin—Leona Smith.
Mr. Wheeler—William Vestweber.
Mrs. Wheeler—Carol Tyrrell.
Bobby Wheeler—Lee Lowenberg.
Cora Wheeler—Luella Hauge.
Violet Pinney—Marjorie Williams.
Clarence—Teddy Johnson.
Della—Elaine Rierson.
Dinwiddie—Irvin Haupt.
Hubert Stem—Clifford Johnson.

A matinee for school children will be held in the afternoon at one o'clock Admission 25c. Adults 50c.

Monday afternoon the Annuals were sold to High School pupils. The second annual is a great success and every one will want one. They will be ready for distribution to Alumni and town people the last of the week.

Any merchant having bills against any class or school organization must present their bill on or before May 29 to assure payment of same during present school year.

Miss Jane Ramsay, of the teaching faculty, left last Friday for her home in Garner, where she will rest up a few days from her illness. She expects to be back on duty at the school the latter part of this week.

Ronald Purcell celebrated his 10th birthday last Friday, when 10 of his boy friends gave him a surprise party in honor of the event. An afternoon of various games was enjoyed, after which delicious refreshments were served by Mrs. Purcell.

How's Your Battery?

Maybe you've noticed that it isn't turning the motor over as strong as it might, that it hasn't quite the pep it used to have, that it seems to be just a little "off its feed".

That's a signal that your battery needs the kind of attention we give—and probably needs it right away!

Never mind if it isn't a Willard. Bring it in anyway. Here at Battery Headquarters we've had experience in fixing all makes of batteries—and we give them all exactly the same attention.

for Miss Thomas just loves just delights in making out new ones.

If you're ever in a farce directed by Miss Dodd, consider yourself lucky, for she never requires the lines to be memorized. She likes to prompt people from the wings.

One good thing about Miss Sharon is that she never requires original work. She recommends to all her Latin classes the Latin ponies sold by Sears, Roebuck & Co. Does she get a commission?

Mr. Fyler is so accomodating about bills at the office that, well, in fact he doesn't care if you don't pay your bills at all. No names are ever put on the board for bills less than 1 cent.

If you're on the B. B. squad and want to especially please Miss Stedman, follow the directions carefully: On out-of-town games never come home on the right train, but manage to be at least a day late. If she says anything, don't worry, for she never means a word she says.

While I'm speaking of Basket Ball coaches, I'll give a word of advice to the boys. You can throw a ball any old place in your practice, for Mr. Christie is noted for his "calm temper" and silence.

Commercial people notice: Let your shorthand go on busy days, for Miss Eastman won't even expect you to prepare a lesson when you have heavy assignments in other subjects.

All girls taking Glee Club work plan to be 5 minutes late every morning and don't under any circumstances learn the songs for public appearances.

When Mrs. Peterson is helping anyone in the study room, every one else start talking and whispering. Mrs. Peterson can think better when there is plenty of noise.

Second, I'll give you some instructions, as all of our faculty will not be here next year, you will need some directions that work equally well with all teachers:

1. Learn the first lesson perfectly. Once you get your reputation established you can pull the wool over the teacher's eyes easily.
2. Always laugh loud and long at your instructor's jokes.
3. If you don't know anything about a subject, and you are asked to recite, don't hesitate but start right out and pretty soon you will see the prof. become intensely interested in some point you touch. Hang on to it and let the rest go.
4. The curse of H. S. life is boredom. Driven by this you are likely to get interested in study if are not careful. To avoid this, one great preventive is sleep. Sleep all you can. If you don't sleep enough in bed sleep in class.
5. Never do today what the teacher will forget to call for tomorrow.

When the Junior banquet is over, and commencement days have gone by; When the Seniors' colors have faded, and the Juniors' are flying high; Our thoughts will return to those good old days, When we Seniors were supreme. And the days we spent in High school are nothing but a dream. And only the faculty praised us, and only the faculty blamed; When none of us worked for money, and only a few for fame, and none for the joy of working, and none for the grades he earned; And now we're beginning to realize, how very little we learned. In spite of all our foolishness, and all the things we have done we wouldn't give up one moment, one least little bit of our fun. But when we are gone we shall miss them, we shall miss them most of all of our friends, for they have faithfully guided us, on them we have learned to depend. So now to each faculty member, our best of wishes extend; Success, good-bye and thank you, dear friends.

The annual Junior-Senior banquet was held at the school building Friday evening, May 12. The gymnasium was artistically decorated with the Senior class colors, green and white. A canopy was suspended from the ceiling under which the tables were placed in the form of a cross. Lily-of-the-Valley, the Senior class flower, and ferns made the table decorations. The prevailing colors were carried out in the following menu:

Pistachio Punch
Wafers
Mashed Potatoes with Peas
Meat Loaf Roulettes
Watermelon Pickles
Cucumber Salad
Cheese Balls
Ice a' la 1922
Macaroons
Coffee Mints

After the serving of the banquet an interesting toast program was given, Doris Bailey presiding as toastmistress.

Proposition 1—Doris Bailey.
Minimum Essentials—Morey Nelson
Axioms and Postulates—Marjorie Williams.
Q. E. D.—Cecil Riley.
The Nth Power—Miss Sharon.
Proof—Mr. Fyler.

Proposition 1
(Doris Bailey)

Members of the Senior Class, Faculty and friends, although I was listed on the program as PROPOSITION 1, it seems to me that this should be the Corallary. However, I'll leave it to you how much of a Proposition this banquet has been. I never could understand why toast is served last at a banquet, unless it is the perlude to breakfast. There are several kinds of toasts, according to most hotel menus, but I have chosen cinnamon toast, because I want something spicy.

To be real frank with you, I feel something like a certain Captain of whom a Lieutenant remarked, "They say Captain Jinks was very calm and collected after his accident this morning."

To which a brother replied, "Yes, yes, quite calm, but he is still being collected."

Now it's just the other way with us. You are collected and I suppose I should feel quite calm.

We Juniors take great pleasure in welcoming the Seniors and faculty here this evening.

This annual gathering may be the high spot in the social activities of the Junior year, and each member of the class is glad to have had a share in this party, which we trust will be a great memory of high school days to you who will so soon be counted as students in the school of life.

The Nth Power

The proper introduction for this toast would be a defination of the subject, but my proposition is like that of the negro school master who was taking an oral examination from his board of directors. He had answered question after question without the least hesitancy, and after each question he had become more satisfied with himself. Finally one of the examiners asked him to define the word jeopardy.

"What's that word, Mister?"

"The word is jeopardy."

"You wants me to define the word jeopahdy?"

"Yes, explain the meaning of the word, jeopardy."

"Well, I should define the word jeopardy as being any action or deed which has been or will be performed by a jeopard."

My definition of the Nth power is the value of a number raised to the degree N.

But we meet many illustration of the Nth degree in our daily life, or at least we come to many places where it might well be used.

We often hear children talking in this manner: if one says "Oh, I have a hundred of those," the other will say, "I ave a hundred-hundred." Then the first goes up to ten hundred hundred and so on. They are carried away by the numbers until they seem to b lost in a maze of figures, but neither can come to any stopping place. The value N might help them, but it is saved for more advanced mathematics.

There are occasions too, much nearer to us, where values areraised to the exponent N. The seniors working their arithmetic are a good example; they make enough flourishes and scowls and even groans to convince us that they are raising a little care to Nth power. Or the teachers hurrying about seem to be raising the urgency of their affairs to the Nth degree.

There are places in the world of facts where some such indefinite value as N is demanded, where the relations of Arabic numerals no longer are practical nor even valid. The number of stars, the age of the world are values so unlimited that their contemplation is almost dizzying. But much nearer to us there is another unlimited value, which is often called the variable in the human equation. Variable it certainly is, without limit of any kind. Everyone of us will have to admit that we have never yet done our very best possible work, without leaving some little place which might have been better. And here the functional relation stands for effort raised to the Nth degree, we may expect a return of achievement in the same degree.

And this, Seniors and Juniors is our wish for you. Success and happiness, the reward of effort in the Nth power.

Q. E. D.
(Cecil Riley)

Honorable toastmistress: guests of Honor, teachers of Belmond High School and classmates it has been a difficult task for me to prepare a speech for this occasion. I am a little handicapped having been here only a short time with you. Nevertheless I have been here long enough to discover some of the real virtures of the class of '22, and realize that we the students of the Junior class, have a high standard to attain in order to fill acceptably that position which they vacate. At this time I am reminded of a story of a young school teacher who had just been graduated from a normal school and who was asked to substitute in a grade higher than her own. She was a little nervous over the temporary promotion and was anxious that everything should go off in the usual good order. While instructing the class in composition, she said: "Now children don't attempt any flights of fancy. Don't try to imitate the things you have heard, but just be yourselves and write what is really in you." As a result of this advice, one little boy turned in the following composition:

"I ain't goin' to attempt no flite of fancy; I'm just goin' to write what's in me, and I got a hart, a liver, two lungs, and some other things like that; then I got a stummick, and it's got in it a pickle a piece of pie, two sticks of peppermint candy, and my dinner."

I am going to follow that teachers advice as the boy did and not try any flights of fancy but deliver my sentiments in a straight forward simple way.

Every graduating class is fine, but this class is superfine, which proves there a reexceptions to every rule. Several individuals of the class should receive honorable mention for their competitive work in school and in athletics. The class has in it many leaders and captains, there's Everett Parsons the track captain with more individual honors than any other athlete in school. He is also a whirlwind of a basket ball player. Wiliam Vestweber captain of the basket ball put his team through the season successfully having won more games than he lost to his apponents. Bill did great work on the debating team in declamatory and was president of the literary society one semester. Besides all that I have mentioned, he was kept busy giving the necessary attention to his numerous girl friends. Elaine Rierson is an all around girl student and athlete. She was the main stay of the debating team. The girls basket ball team owe much of their success this year to Elaine, who was one of the best players on the team and was truly qualified to hold the position as floor manager. Whenever there is a look of doubt on Elaine's face, yu can be pretty sure she will ask the question "where is Lee." Teddy Johnson also did commendable work on the debating team this year. His ability as a ball player is notable, as he succeeded in holding a steady job on both baseball and basket ball teams. Carol Tyrrell did wonderful work as a dramatic speaker. What puzzled me is how she could accomplish successfully such work when she is so timid and modest. We all know there is one in the class of '22 who has developed strong lungs. As a leader of the yell group Morey Nelson has helped our boys and girls teams to recuperate in spirit and win when defeat seemed almost certain. Eloise Brooks accomplished much as a dramatic speaker. The self appointed position as class critic she held successfully and I believe she is unsurpassed along that line of work. Lee Lowenberg has made a fine record in track so far this year as well as in debate and other school activities. I could keep on telling the work and virtures of the rest of the class but it would take too much time. The class has in it many who are noted for their talkative manner, for instance, Ellen Hinman, Wilma Thompson, and Josie Kallestad.

The seniors have proved their ability in school work and athletics and only need a Q. E. D. to make their proof complete. The Juniors have just reached the place where the proposition is put before them to prove, and I sincerely hope that they will prove it with as great a degree of success as did the class of '22.

Bank courtesy is no different than any other kind of courtesy. Genuine courtesy is the same whether you encounter it in a bank, in a store, on the street or in the home of a friend.

Courtesy is consideration, appreciation and a genuine desire to do unto others as you would have others do unto you.

You will find that courtesy is a distinct part of this bank's service.

A FEW THOUGHTS ABOUT YOUR BATTERY

Asking how many months a battery will last is like asking how many months a pair of shoes will last. The maker, or his agent can only answer that it is "Wear, tear and care" that count, but at the same time he will lay special stress on the "care." Manufacturers of the Willard storage battery have figured as a matter of fact, that there are just four things that determine the life of a battery. These are use, time, care, and the quality of the battery itself.

If a person makes unusual demands upon a battery he will probably reduce its life by a few months, but with all other things equal he will have attained a satisfactory milage. Consequently cost per mile in such a case is as fair a basis for comparison as cost per month.

What does time do to your battery? Going back to the shoe argument, if you bought a new pair, wore them a couple weeks and then left them off exposed to every condition for a length of time, they would deteriorate. In fact, you would discover that they had been wearing themselves out. It's the same with a battery.

Care comes next. The battery is something not only to use, but to use up. You provide your car with electricity for starting, lighting and ignition by using up the battery. The battery is not an inexhaustible supply of electricity, but it is a boxful of electricity making ingredients and these ingredients must be restored as used or the supply will give out. The best protection is to refill the cells with water, recharge the battery regularly, preferable at a service station, and make tests of the battery every two weeks. Such care will guard against a sudden and perhaps costly breakdown.

If the professional reformers really must reform something, why don't they start on themselves?

If silence is golden, we know a lot of folks who haven't even small change.

NEW FISH HATCHERY AT CLEAR LAKE

If one has never seen the inside of a fish hatchery, it is well worth the time to make a trip to Clear Lake and see the new state hatchery in operation. Mr. Monpleasure is in charge of the place, and he will do his best to explain the workings of the place to you. At this time, and until about the 20th inst, pike are being hatched. Spon from which the fish are being hatched, has been brought from Wisconsin points, and there is a sufficient quanity of it to produce 10,000,000 fish. The hatching process is very interesting, and when the fish first appear, they look just like "wigglers" that we have all seen in rain barrels. In size and appearance, they are almost identical. As they hatch, they swim to the top of the glass jar in which the eggs are located. Running water passes thro these jars all the time. The current is strong enough to carry the little fellows overboard when they get near the top, and they are thus dumped into a large vat. From this they are placed in cans for shipment or dumped into the lake as desired. Three-Fourths of the pike hatched this season will be placed in Clear Lake to restock that resort. Mr. Monpleasure tells us that approximately ten per cent of the minnows hatched live to be real fish. With a few million extra fish cavorting about the lake, we are of the opinion that even we would be able to land one occasionally. After the 20th, the hatchery will be closed for the season. A great many people have availed themselves of the opportunity of visiting the place.—Garner Leader.

As a general rule, the ones whom you do the most favors for are the very first to forget them.

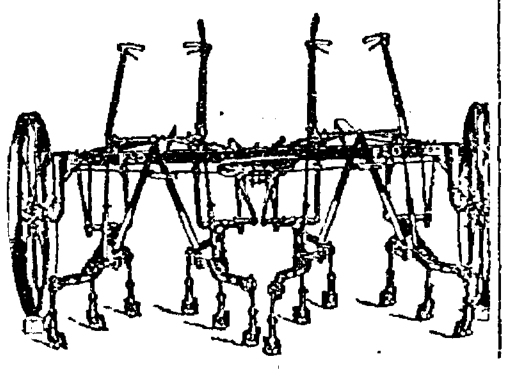
Twine

Yes, we are here every week to remind you that harvest time will be on your heels before you know it. And harvest time means that you must have twine. We have already placed our reservation for a quantity of the old reliable Deering twine, but in order to make sure that you get yours, give us your order now. Prices this year sound mighty good. Buy good twine. The only kind of twine that pays is the kind that binds the grain securely, and is free from breakage, snarling, and slippage. You will find this in Deering twine at the lowest price over five years.

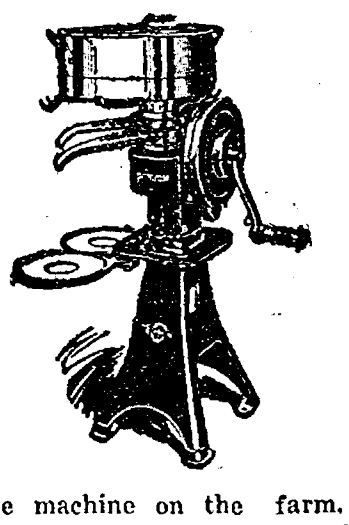
Cultivators of Merit

Years ago International and P & O cultivators were introduced to cultivator users in this locality. They were good cultivators then. Since that time every possible improvement has been made. They stand today at the top of the list—light in draft and weight, easy for man or boy to handle and with well-earned reputation for lasting dependable service. In these lines you will find walkers, riders, shovel, disk, surface, two-row, and single row cultivators. Come in, let us show them to you.



A Profit Maker

The Primrose cream separator properly used becomes the most profitable machine on the farm. A Primrose provides the means of securing ample skimmilk in the best possible condition for feeding, always at the same temperature. It saves all the butter fat and delivers cream that brings the highest market price, in the best condition for butter making. Let us tell you about the Primrose. Ask us to show you this profit making machine the next time you are in Belmond.



Are You Ready

Haying and harvesting time will soon be here. Perhaps some of those old machines will hold together another year if they are repaired, and perhaps some other machines not so old need repairs to put them in good working order. For your McCormick-Deering haying and harvesting machines use only I C H repairs. They last longer and wear better. No doubt you will also need at least one new machine this year. We have it—a complete line-up from mowers to threshing machines in the McCormick-Deering machines.

Is that old lawn mower working? We carry a complete line at reasonable prices.

McFARLANE

For Congress

The people of the Third district have an opportunity to put in congress a man of ripe legislative experience and standing---one who has been elected speaker of the Iowa House of Representatives and who has the distinction of having been re-elected to that exalted position by acclamation. Arch W. McFarlane of Waterloo has been a loyal and active republican all his life, and has given freely of his time and means to the support of the party and its principles. He commands the confidence and esteem of those who know him.

Experience United With Character

United with experience of the most valuable kind, Mr. McFarlane possesses the character of a sturdy, dependable and successful business man,

Vitally concerned in all problems of interest to every person in the Third district and if nominated and elected he can be relied upon to vote for the best interests of his constituency. On this basis he solicits the votes and support of the people of Wright county, assuring them of his hearty sympathy with their problems and realizing that no greater honor could come to any man than to represent them in the halls of congress.

Vote for McFarlane At the Primary

A vote for Arch W. McFarlane at the primary is a vote for progressive government, economy in expenditures of public money, intelligent administration of the nation's laws and courageous solution of its problems. McFarlane has the ability and experience to make the district one of the best representatives it has ever had. Vote for him on primary day, Monday, June 5.

GOODELL NEWS

The Manual Training Department of the High school has a fine exhibit in the windows of the old drug store.

A large crowd listened to the excellent address delivered by the Rev. Tom Roberts of Sheffield, to the graduating class. The church choir and the high school girls furnished the music for the occasion.

The operata given last Tursday night by the grades of the school was enjoyed by all that attended. Each pupil preformed his or her part in a very creditable manner. To render such a program required much training. The teachers are to be congratulated. on the excellent results.

Last Wednesday evening at a six o'clock the seniors of the High school were entertained by the teachers and the lower clases. At 5:30 they journeyed toward the Iowa river and enjoyed the refreshments on the banks of the river near Old Town.

Supt. Nelson has so improved that he was able to attend the Baccalaurate sermon on Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. O. Sandberg drove to Belmond Friday afternoon.

On Firday Mrs. Harry Ruka was taken to the Hospital at Hampton for treatment.

A large force of men are working in the Wilson Highway both north and south of Goodell. Between 60 and 70 men are tiling and grading on this road.

Mrs. Iva Christie Stacy of Lake Mills, who has been visiting her mother and sisters for some time returned to her home on Sunday. Her Husband came down for her.

Mr. Harold Smith and family called at the T. R. Burgess home Wednesday evening.

Tuesday evening Mrs. T. R. Burgess and Mrs. L. W. Wesenberg entertained the teachers at the home of Mrs. Burgess.

Mr. James Trumbell of Mason City was seen on our streets Saturday.

The Commencement exercises will be held in the U. B. church on Thursday evening at 8 p. m. Dr. Shannon of Des Moines will be the speaker of the evening.

Roy Cline came down from Buffalo Center on Sunday and spent a few hours with his parents. His father returned with him Sunday afternoon.

What's the Price of GOOD CLOTHES?

The public today will not buy if they believe the article offered is "high priced." Unfortunately, many stores have taken this to mean that people want only cheap merchandise.

That is not our belief. Our customers want fair prices, the lowest prices possible for quality merchandise. But they know we cannot sell good clothing at the same price as cheap clothing.

There is nothing the public buys in which quality is so important as in clothing. Nor is there anything in which workmanship can be so easily concealed from the casual observer.

The difference between the cost of good clothing and poor clothing is small. But the difference in value---in satisfaction to the wearer---is great.

We sell good clothing. The price represents the quality that's in it. The kind of clothing that makes satisfied customers---and that's the kind we want.

Our clothes are the kind that deserve special consideration from any man who thinks well of his appearance. Good style, good tailoring and good fabrics.

School Notes

The Baccalaurate services were held in the High School auditorium last Sunday evening. Rev. Heyenga of the Reformed church delivered the sermon. His sermon was an excellent one teeming with food for thought, high ideals and inspiration. Rev. A. D. Mohr assisted in the preliminaries. The singing was furnished by the combined choirs of the churches of the town and was rendered in a highly pleasing manner. A large crowd was present and filled the auditorium to the limit.

Next Friday May 19th will be a day long to be remembered on account of the heavy rainfall induced by the proposed annual school picnic. All grades plan an excursion on this date, to various parts of Franklin and Wright counties.

School closes this week on Friday May 19. The eighth grade exercises will be given Wednesday evening May 17th. The eighth grade class this year is composed of 19 members, five boys and 14 girls. The High School Commencement will be held Thursday evening May 18th. The class consists of two members, Walter Smith and Alice Barkema.

We are in receipt of a letter from the Earl Ferris Nursery offering us a dozen South Carlonia poplars for the school yard, free of charge. We hope the weather is favorable for our getting the trees and planting them

School exhibits will be on display Wednesday and Thursday night. These exhibits include various phases of the school work of the present year. The public is invited to inspect the work.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Veeder and Mr. and Mrs. Vern Finkle and daughter, Leona of Hampton were Sunday visitors at the Lewis Bell home.

KNOW YOUR NEIGHBOR

Get acquainted with your neighbor!
Stop and pass the time of day;
You may get a lot of pleasure
From the things he has to say.
You may find a different fellow
Than you thought him at the start;
You may form a mutual liking,
Tho your views be far apart.

He may have a good suggestion
That's the very thing you need—
That will you fame or fortune
If you cultivate the seed.
He may need some small assistance,
In a purely personal way,
That you'd feel quite free in giving,
So why treat him like a stray?

How is one to love his neighbor,
As the Bible bids us do,
If you never get acquainted—
If he's not a help to you?
Would each happy wife be married
To her present choice of man,
If she hadn't learned to know him
In a way no stranger can?

You may some day be a stranger,
Like the man who's just "moved in."
Meeting folks with good intentions,
But who just forget to grin.
Friend, regardless of your calling—
Whether business, field or labor—
Know the felow at your elbow—
Get acquainted with your neighbor!

AUTOS AND ADS HELP THE CHURCH

Kearney, Neb.,—Publicity has changed the automobile from an enemy to a friend of the church, according to the Rev. Oliver Kene, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church here. When the people of the whole community know of a church and the kind of sermons preached the car will carry them to it instead of away from it, he said. "By advertising in local papers I have quadrupled the membership of my church in four years. Christ said, 'Go out and compel them to come in.' What is more compelling than advertising in the modern way?"

"I have often inserted a quarter page or half page ad in the home town papers. The expense of advertising is met by the collection box, and the more people the advertising draws to church of course, the larger the collections. So the ads pay for themselves in actual money. The good, sound, honest gospel message from the pulpit. Nothing can take the place of the gospel; not movies, nor current topics. And the man who goes once is pretty apt to bring someone with him."

BELMOND BOY WINNER SWINE JUDGE CONTEST

Ames, Ia., May 4.—(Special—F. H. Leinbach of Belmond won first place in the annual swine judging contest for junior animal husbandry students at Iowa State College in which 115 students competed. Leinbach wins the gold medal presented annually for this contest by W. F. Silver, well known Hampshire hog breeder of Cantril.

Second place was taken by J. H. Hilton of Ames, 3. S. Wheeler of Caldwell, N. J., was third, and O. E. Felton of Fairmount, Ind., fourth.

Eight classes of hogs were judged. including Duroc Jersey aged sows, Hampshire fat barrows, Berkshire gilts, Chester white aged sows, Poland China boars, Duroc Jersey barrows, Poland China sows and Poland China gilts.

The twenty men who ranked highest in this contest will compose the squad from which the intercollegiate swine judging team is picked next fall to judge at the national swine show at Peoria, Ill.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

He noticed, up a street to the west, the lighted sign of a drug store and turned up that way; he had promised, he had recollected now, to write to . . . those in Kansas—he could not call them "father" and "mother" any more—and tell them what he had discovered as soon as he arrived. He could not tell them that, but he could write them at least that he had arrived safely and was well. He bought a postcard in the drug store, and wrote just, "Arrived safely; am well" to John Welton in Kansas. There was a little vending machine upon the counter, and he dropped in a penny and got a box of matches and put them in his pocket.

He mailed the card and turned back to Astor street; and he walked more swiftly now, having come to his decision, and only shot one quick look up at the house as he approached it. With what had his father shut himself up within that house for twenty years? And was it there still? And was it from that that Benjamin Corvet had fled? He saw no one in the street, and was certain no one was observing him as, taking the key from his pocket, he ran up the steps and unlocked the outer door. Holding this door open to get the light from the street lamp, he fitted the key into the inner door; then he closed the outer door. For fully a minute, with fast-beating heart and a sense of expectation of he knew not what, he kept his hand upon the key before he turned it; then he opened the door and stepped into the dark and silent house.

CHAPTER V

An Encounter.

Alan, standing in the darkness of the hall, felt in his pocket for his matches and struck one on the box. The light showed the hall in front of him, reaching back into some vague, distant darkness, and great rooms with wide portiered doorways gaping on both sides. He turned into the room upon his right, glanced to see that the shades were drawn on the windows toward the street, then found the switch and turned on the electric light.

Alan had the feeling which so often comes to one in an unfamiliar and vacant house that there was some one in the house with him. He listened and seemed to hear another sound in the upper hall, a footstep. He went out quickly to the foot of the stairs and looked up them.

"Is any one here?" he called. "Is any one here?"

His voice brought no response. He went half way up the curve of the wide stairway and called again, and listened; then he fought down the feeling he had had; Sherrill had said there would be no one in the house, and Alan was certain there was no one. So he went back to the room where he had left the light.

The center of this room, like the room next to it, was occupied by a library table-desk. He pulled open some drawers in it; one or two had blueprints and technical drawings in them; the others had only the miscellany which accumulates in a room much used. There were drawers also under the bookcases all around the room; they appeared, when Allan opened some of them, to contain pamphlets of various societies, and the scientific correspondence of which Sherrill had told him. Alan felt that seeing these things was bringing his father closer to him; they gave him a little of the feeling he had been unable to get when he looked at his father's picture. He could realize better now the lonely, restless man, pursued by some ghost he could not kill, taking up for distraction one subject of study after another, exhausting each in turn until he could no longer make it engross him, and then absorbing himself in the next.

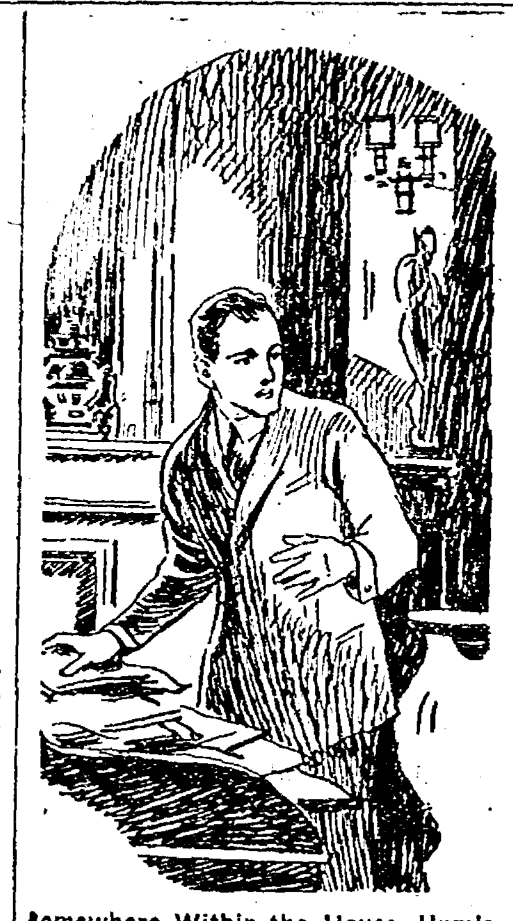
On the top of a chest of high drawers in a corner near the dressing table were some papers. Alan went over to look at them; they were invitations, notices of concerts and of plays twenty years old—the mail, probably, of the morning when Corvet's wife had gone away, left where her maid or she herself had laid them, and only picked up and put back there at the times since when the room was dusted. As Alan touched them, he saw that his fingers left marks in the dust on the smooth top of the chest; he noticed that some one else had touched the things and made marks of the same sort as he had made. The freshness of these other marks startled him; they had been made within a day or so. They could not have been made by Sherrill, for Alan had noticed that Sherrill's hands were slender and delicately formed; Corvet, too, was not a large man; Alan's own hand was of good size and powerful, but when he put his fingers over the marks the other man had made, he found that the other hand must have been larger and more powerful than his own. Had it been Corvet's servant? It might have been, though the marks seemed too fresh for that; for the servant, Sherrill had said, had left the day Corvet's disappearance was discovered.

This proof that some one had been prying about in the house before himself and since Corvet had gone, startled Alan and angered him. Who had been searching in Benjamin Corvet's—in Alan's house? He pushed the drawers shut hastily and hurried across the hall to the room opposite. In this room—plainly Benjamin Corvet's bedroom—were no signs of intrusion. He went to the door of the room connecting with it, turned on the light, and looked in. It was a smaller room than the others and contained a roll-top desk and a cabinet. The cover of the desk was closed, and the drawers of the cabinet were shut and apparently undisturbed. He tried the cover of the desk, but it appeared to be locked; after looking around vainly for a key, he tried again, exerting a little more force, and this time the top went up easily, tearing away the metal plate into which the claws of the lock clasped and the two long screws which had held it. He examined the lock, surprised, and saw that the screws must have been merely set into the holes; scars showed where a chisel or some metal implement had been thrust in under the top to force it up. The pigeonholes and little drawers in the upper part of the desk, as he swiftly opened them, he found entirely empty. He hurried to the cabinet; the drawers of the cabinet too had been forced, and very recently; for the scars and the splinters of wood were clean and fresh. These drawers and the drawers in the lower part of the desk either were empty, or the papers in them had been disarranged and tumbled in confusion, as though some one had examined them hastily and tossed them back. To Alan, the marks of violence and roughness were unmistakably the work of the man with the big hands who had left marks upon the top of the chest of drawers; and the feeling that he had been in the house very recently was stronger than ever.

Alan ran out into the hall and listened; he heard no sound; but he went back to the little room more excited than before. For what had the other man been searching? For the same things which Alan was looking for? And had the other man got them? Who might the other be, and what might be his connection with Benjamin Corvet? Alan had no doubt that everything of importance must have been taken away, but he would make sure of that. He took some of the papers from the drawers and began to examine them; after nearly an hour of this, he had found only one article which appeared connected in any way with what Sherrill had told him or with Alan himself. In one of the little drawers of the desk he found several books, much worn as though from being carried in a pocket, and one of these contained a series of entries stretching over several years. These listed an amount—$150—opposite a series of dates with only the year and the month given, and there was an entry for every second month.

Alan felt his fingers trembling as he turned the pages of the little book and found at the end of the list a blank, and below, in the same hand but in writing which had changed slightly with the passage of years, another date and the confirming entry of $1,500. Alan looked through the little book again and put it in his pocket. It was, beyond doubt, his father's memorandum of the sums sent to Blue Rapids for Alan; it told him that here he had been in his father's thoughts. He grew warm at the thought as he began putting the other things back into the drawers.

He started and straightened suddenly; then he listened attentively, and his skin, warm an instant before, turned cold and prickled. Somewhere within the house, unmistakably on the floor below him, a door had slammed. Some one—it was beyond question now, for the realization was quite different from the feeling he had had about that before—was in the house with him. Was it . . . his father who had come back? That, though not impossible, seemed improbable.



Somewhere Within the House, Unmistakably on the Floor Below Him, a Door Had Slammed.

Alan stooped quickly, unlaced and stripped off his shoes, and ran out into the hall to the head of the stairs, where he looked down and listened. From here the sound of some one moving about came to him distinctly; he could see no light below, but when he ran down to the turn of the stairs, it became plain that there was a very dim and flickering light in the library. He crept on farther down the staircase. His hands were cold and moist from his excitement, and his body was hot and trembling.

Whoever it was that was moving about downstairs, even if he was not one who had a right to be there, at least felt secure from interruption. He was going with heavy step from window to window; where he found a shade up, he pulled it down brusquely and with a violence which suggested great strength under a nervous strain; a shade, which had been pulled down, flew up, and the man damned it as though it had startled him; then, after an instant, he pulled it down again.

Alan crept still farther down and at last caught sight of him. He was a big, young-looking man, with broad shoulders and very evident vigor; Alan guessed his age at thirty-five; he was handsome—he had a straight forehead over daring, deep-set eyes; his nose, lips and chin were powerfully formed; and he was expensively and very carefully dressed. The light by which Alan saw these things came from a flat little pocket searchlight that the man carried in one hand, which threw a little brilliant circle of light as he directed it; and now, as the light chanced to fall on his other hand—powerful and heavily muscled—Alan recollected the look and size of the finger prints on the chest of drawers upstairs. He did not doubt that this was the same man who had gone through the desk; but since he had already rifled the desks, what did he want here now? As the man moved out of sight, Alan crept on down as far as the door to the library; the man had gone on into the rear room, and Alan went far enough into the library so he could see him.

He had pulled open one of the drawers in the big table in the rear room and with his light held so high as to show what was in it, he was tumbling over its contents and examining them. He went through one after another of the drawers of the table like this; after examining them, he rose and kicked the last one shut disgustedly; he stood looking about the room questioningly, then he started toward the front room.

He had, as yet, neither seen nor heard anything to alarm him, and as he went to the desk in the front room and peered impatiently into the drawers, he slammed them shut, one after another. He straightened and stared about. "D—n Ben! D—n Ben!" he ejaculated violently and returned to the rear room. Alan, again following him, found him on his knees in front of one of the drawers under the bookcases. As he continued searching through the drawers, his irritation became greater and greater. He jerked one drawer entirely out of its case, and the contents flew in every direction; swearing at it, he gathered up the letters. One suddenly caught his attention; he began reading it closely, then snapped it back into the drawer, crammed the rest on top of it, and went on to the next of the files. He searched in this manner through half a dozen drawers, plainly finding nothing at all he wanted; he dragged some of the books from their cases, felt behind them and shoved back some of the books but dropped others on the floor and blasphemy burst from him. The beam of light from the torch in his hand swayed aside and back and forth. Without warning, suddenly it caught Alan as he stood in the dark of the front room; and as the dim white circle of light gleamed into Alan's face, the man looked that way and saw him.

The effect of this upon the man was so strange and so bewildering to Alan that Alan could only stare at him. The big man seemed to shrink into himself and to shrink back and away from Alan. He roared out something in a bellow thick with fear and horror; he seemed to choke with terror. There was nothing in his look akin to mere surprise or alarm at realizing that another was there and had been seeing and overhearing him. The light which he still gripped swayed back and forth and showed him Alan again, and he raised his arm before his face as he recoiled.

The consternation of the man was so complete that it checked Alan's rush toward him; he halted, then advanced silently and watchfully. As he went forward, and the light shone upon his face again, the big man cried out hoarsely:

"D—n you, d—n you, with the hole above your eye! The bullet got you! And now you've got Ben! But you can't get me! Go back to hell! You can't get me! I'll get you—I'll get you! You—can't save the Miwaka!"

He drew back his arm and with all his might hurled the flashlight at Alan. It missed and crashed somewhere behind him, but did not go out; the beam of light shot back and wavered and flickered over both of them, as the torch rolled on the floor. Alan rushed forward and, thrusting through the dark, his hand struck the man's chest and seized his coat.

The man caught at and seized Alan's arm; he seemed to feel of it and assure himself of its reality.

"Flesh! Flesh!" he roared in relief; and his big arms grappled Alan. As they struggled, they stumbled and fell to the floor, the big man underneath. His hand shifted its hold and caught Alan's throat; Alan got an arm free and, with all his force, struck the man's face. The man struck back—a heavy blow on the side of Alan's head which dizzied him but left him strength to strike again, and his knuckles reached the man's face once more, but he got another heavy blow in return. The man was grappling no longer; he swung Alan to one side and off of him, and rolled himself away. He scrambled to his feet and dashed out through the library, across the hall, and into the service room. Alan got to his feet; dizzied and not yet familiar with the house, he blundered against a wall and had to feel his way along it to the service room; as he slipped and stumbled down the stairway, a door closed loudly at the end of the corridor he had seen at the foot of the stairs. He ran along the corridor to the door; it had closed with a spring lock, and seconds passed while he felt in the dark for the catch; he found it and tore the door open, and came out suddenly into the cold air of the night in a paved passageway beside the house which led in one direction to the street and in the other to a gate opening on the alley. He ran forward to the street and looked up and down, but found it empty; then he ran back to the alley. At the end of the alley, where it intersected the cross street, the figure of the man running away appeared suddenly out of the shadows, then disappeared; Alan, following as far as the street, could see nothing more of him; this street too was empty.

He ran a little farther and looked, then he went back to the house. The side door had swung shut again and latched. He let himself in at the front door and turned on the light in the reading lamp in the library. The electric torch still was burning on the floor and he picked it up and extinguished it; he went upstairs and brought down his shoes. He had seen a wood fire set ready for lighting in the library, and now he lighted it and sat before it drying his wet socks before he put on his shoes. He was still shaking and breathing fast from his struggle with the man and his chase after him, and by the strangeness of what had taken place.

When the shaft of light from the torch had flashed across Alan's face in the dark library, the man had not taken him for what he was—a living person; he had taken him for a specter. His terror and the things he had cried out could mean only that. The specter of whom? Not of Benjamin Corvet; for one of the things Alan had remarked when he saw Benjamin Corvet's picture was that he himself did not look at all like his father. Besides, what the man had said made it certain that he did not think the specter was "Ben"; for the specter had "got Ben." Did Alan look like some one else, then? Like whom? Evidently like the man—now dead, for he had a ghost—who had "got" Ben, in the big man's opinion. Who could that be?

Alan got up and went to look at himself in the mirror he had seen in the hall. He was white, now that the flush of the fighting was going; he probably had been pale before with excitement, and over his right eye there was a round black mark. Alan looked down at his hands; a little skin was off one knuckle, where he had struck the man, and his fingers were smudged with a black and sotty dust. He had smudged them on the papers upstairs or else in feeling his way about the dark house, and at some time he had touched his forehead and left the black mark. That had been the "bullet hole."

The rest that the man had said had been a reference to some name; Alan had no trouble to recollect the name, and, while he did not understand it at all, it stirred him queerly—"the Miwaka." What was that? The queer excitement and questioning that the name brought, when he repeated it to himself, was not recollection; for he could not recall ever having heard the name before; but it was not completely strange to him. He could define the excitement it stirred only in that way.

Kinseth's Store News

You know, we do things different. Our methods are different, our policy is different, and our goods are the same, "different." One of the different things we have for you is just the common every day Prune. Our's is different; and we capitalize them because they are.

We have the Silver Prunes, an extra fancy article. At an ordinary as that sweet juice, and they aren't at the way that has them. Take a dish of rightly stewed prunes, with lots of that sweet juice, and they [illegible] at all bad to "take". Healthy, and cheap.

Don't get the idea that all we have is prunes; we have everything, including oyster shells for the chickens, shoes shirts, hats, shirts, salt by the hundred or by the pound, and scores of things you need. And we pay cash or trade for your eggs. So don't forget the Store on the Corner, or the above "essay" on prunes. Try 'em both and be happy!

DECORATION DAY PROGRAM HELD TUESDAY MORNING

Pioneer of Belmond Goes to Her Reward

Mrs. Fred Luick Dies At Her Home In Belmond After Long Illness

A PIONEER SETTLER HERE

Alice (Packard) Luick, widow of Fred Luick, died at her home in Belmond, Friday evening, May 19th, 1922 aged 75 years and 6 months. Mrs. Luick was born Nov. 18th, 1846, at Fredonia, Licking county, Ohio. Her father, E. C. Packard, was decended from Samuel Packard who came from England to America, in 1638, settling in Massachusetts. When four years of age Mrs. Luick's parents moved to Wisconsin, where they lived until 1864 when they came to Iowa locating near Bailey's Grove in Hancock county. She drove an ox team from Wis. to Iowa. She came to Belmond to teach school in a little school house located on the present site of Belmond cemetery. In this little frontier settlement she met the soldier lad, Fred Luick, who wooed and won her, and by their marriage established one of the homes which powerfully molded the life of this community through the intervening years. They lived first in a little log house in the grove, a house 12x 14 feet in size, and with none of what in present days count as luxuries and few indeed of present day necessities. But whatever the vicissitudes of those early pioneer days they have produced a race of men and women who have upheld the ideals of America's civilization. Mrs. Luick was preceeded in death by her husband, Fred Luick, who passed away in December, 1919. The were blessed with four children, Mrs. S. U. Leinbach, C. P. Luick and H. F. Luick who with their families are residents of Belmond and Albert who died in infancy. Nellie E. an adopted daughter, resides in Los Angeles California. Eight grandchildren survive the deceased as does her brother, D. E. Packard of Belmond and a sister, Mrs. Alma Vennum who resides in Florida.

Time is all too brief and our words all too limited to fully record all the manifold activities and services of Mrs. Luick. A descendant of pioneers, herself a pioneer in two different states of the union, her life was full to the uttermost. And through it all, efficient in the practical needs of everyday life in a new and growing country, always she helped build up in the community the things of greater worth in the intellectual and religious world. During the busiest part of her life, in the midst of the duties of a farm and of raising a family who have grown up to do her honor and to be an honor to her training, during that period she found time to devote to the developmet of the finest culture in intellectual life. She found time to select and build up a library of the choicest literature. She found time to cultivate the intellectual life of the community and was one of the leading spirits in the "Holly Press Club" Women's club of earlier years in Belmond, whose members, in prose and poetry, made their efforts known favorably by the greater world of letters. For many years there was little of a community nature or of a purpose to benefit the community in which Mrs. Luick did not have a leading place. That her literary ability and inclination was deeply bred is evidenced by the fact that an ancester was likewise the ancester of William Cullen Bryant, one of America's great poets. One of her treasured privileges was her membership in the Candle Stick Chapter of the D. A. R. at Hampton to which her Revolutionary ancesters gave her title.

A great number will think of her with tenderest recolection and mourn for her passing. She had passed the three score and ten and the grain was ripened to the sickle of the Harvester, and yet her sterling worth her Christian character and attractive and unselfish personality so stamped the lives of her loved ones and all with whom she came in contact that they cannot but mourn their loss. To many she was "Aunt Alice" and to others of no blood relation she was "Mother Luick." And to her family she was "Mother" in all that word implies. And where can be found the pen that can portray the profound and marvelous meaning of that word "Mother." So beautifully it has been said that "God needs someone to be his agents here on earth so he made mothers." A good women, a lofty character, a forceful personality for the upbuilding of her surroundings, a devoted Christian mother has gone to her reward. To be greeted by Him who has given us mother's love as the best portrayal of His own image in humankind.

Mrs. Luick's beauty of character and unselfish desire for service is most aptly expressed in one of her own poems:

How I Would Be Remembered

When quietly I'm lying beneath the churchyard shade,
I would not be remembered by the cutting words I've said,
Nor leave a wound still bleeding from a cruel thrust I've made.
I would not, by my presence, cast a shadow o'er a heart;
Nor by one look or action cause the guarded tear to start;
But, bear the balm of healing to sooth each painful smart.
I'd understand the heartaches, understand them by my own,
Guide where I had been mistaken, lead where I had walked alone
Sympathize before the golden opportunity had flown.

Funeral services were held in the Methodist church Monday afternoon at 2;30 o'clock conducted by the pastor Rev. Wilkinson assisted by Rev. Burress of Madrid, Iowa. Interment was in Belmond cemetery.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION INTERESTING

Tuesday of this week the Forty-seventh Annual Convention of Wright County S. S. Association met in regular session in the Sands Memorial church. This was the first time in many years that the Convention met in our city. It is perhaps for the reason that only a few of the teachers and officers of the various churches of Blmond and vicinity were present. It would seem that the value of education and inspiration of such a gathering is either not understood or else not known. One of Lincoln's wise sayings was: "Nothing is settled until it is settled right." The same holds true of the value of a County Convention. You can't settle the matter as to the estimate that can be placed upon a S. S. Convention until you've been there and have heard and seen things that show you how a class of boys or girls can be won and interested and the interest won held indifinitely. To settle the matter whether a S. S. Convention is worth one's time, it will be necessary to attend such a session and the unanimous report will be that it is worth the time spent in listening to men and women who make a specialty of S. S. work. Three such workers led the discussion, Mr. Walter Hutton of Des Moines, Gen. Sec. Ia. State S. S. Ass'n., Mr. O. G. Herbrecht, State Supt. of Y. P. Division and Miss Elizabeth Dean, State Supt. of Children's Division. Each state worker spoke and led the discussions in his or her particular line. Each worker was a specialist, and gave much valuable information out of the abandance of their knowledge and experience. We separated with new visions of the possibilities before the tacher and parent. It is to be greatly desired that the next time a meeting of this sort is held in our city the fathers and mothers will come en masse so that evry available seating room is taken. Unless one specializes along the line of child training or else spends much time and effort in the study of the various ages of child life, his training of the child will be greatly hampered by lack of knowing how. For example, what are the needs of the child at the age of 12-14? Do we understand the child and what its needs are at the age of 15-17? What of the needs of the young man or women during the ages of 18-24? If we are ignorant of the physcology of the child life, how shall we adequately meet their needs? A proper knowledge of the child life and the needs at the various stages of their lives will help keep our penitentiaries empty and crime will be lessened. All these matters were touched upon and explained and analyzed in detail at the convention. We who have been present have received a new vision and added knowledge of the how and the wherefore of child training.

A. W. Waalkes.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP

Don't forget the regular services in the American language at the Immanual church every Sunday evening at 7:30.

Rev. Meinderts, who attended the funeral of Mrs. Henry Meinderts, occupied the pulpit of the Immanuel church last Sunday night.

The remains of Mrs. Henry Meinderts, who died recently of pneumonia at her home in Willard Minnesota, were brought to Belmond last Saturday and funeral services were held in the Immanuel church Sunday afternoon. The Henry Meinderts family was formally residents of this township, and only about seven years ago made their home in Minnesota. Our heartfelt sympathy is extended to the relatives and friends in their time of sorrow.

Mrs. Robert Walters, and daughter, Harriet, were over Sunday visitos at the home of the former's mother, Mrs. Theodore Wendel in Nora Springs.

Fannie Burns left last Tuesday for Meekin, Ill., where she will visit her brother, Bruno, who is attending school there.

The Harm H. Pals family near Meservey were Sunday callers at the Fol. Mennenga home.

Mr. and Mrs. Dick Barkema and family spent Sunday evening at the Chas. Barkema home.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Court did not adjourn until Friday owing to the large number of witnesses in the case of Thebiay vs. Thebiay from Eagle Grove. The evidence was all submitted and Judge Thompson adjourned court until June 7th, when he will return and hear the attorneys' pleas and also dispose of several other matters. In the meantime he is presiding over the regular May term of court at Fort Dodge.

The board of supervisors let three road grading and draining contracts Friday. The grading of the nine miles of the Wilson highway, known as primary No. 15, from Blairsburg north, and let at 24.7c per cubic yard to a Nevada firm. Six miles between Woolstock and Dows, and four miles between Goldfield and Renwick was let at 23.5c. Thus it will be seen the county grading was let at the lowest figure. Competition was keen, twenty-five or thirty bidders being present. Good prices were also obtained for the tile work.

In publishing the list of candidates for county office last week an injustice was inadvertently done J. C. Peterson of Dayton township by giving his residence at Eagle Grove. As a matter of fact he has received his mail and transacted the bulk of his business in Clarion for several years. He was on the Eagle Grove route at one time and this fact led to the error.

Miss Hope Pardun is assisting with the stenogaphic work in the county clerk's office, there being an especially large amount of court work.

At the primary election June 5th in addition to the regular ballot the voter will be handed a yellow ballot upon which will appear two special propositions. One is the matter of voting $14,000 for the purchase of the fair grounds site. The other is for the purpose of obtaining an expression of the voters regarding the continuance of the county nurse. The law says the board of supervisors "may" support the nurse, but in the case of the farm bureau agent it says it "shall" support the work. The board has supported the nurse work for the past few years, but now asks the approval of the people for a continuance of the same. In other words it will be a "straw vote" on the proposition.

To do away with the county nurse at this time would not only seem unwise, but false economy. It would mean the waste of the money already expended in establishing the work. The state legislature passes laws to combat hog choera and other animal diseases and appropriates several hundred thousand dollars to carry on the work. Why cannot Wright county continue to expend a few hundred dollars for the betterment of its children—the men and women of the future? The tax to the average property owner is about fifty cents—a couple of dozen eggs per year. The saving of a child's tooth is worth ten times that amount, to say nothing of the care of the eyes and a dozen other troubles. The prevention of a single epidemic of smallpox or diphtheria is enough to satisfy most people of the value of the nurse's work.

Last year the amount of taxes collected on the tobbacco sold in the United States alone was over $225,000,000. How much would you say was spent for the purchase of tobbacco? The automobile tax was over $237,000,000. No right thinking man or woman has a right to deny a child the privilege of healthful supervision for the matter of small saving referred to above.—Monitor.

TO HOLD POPPY SALE

A poppy sale will be conducted by the American Legion Auxiliary, on Saturday, May 27, and on Memorial Day, May 30. This drive has been indorsed by President Harding as a National movement. The poppy has been chosen as an official flower of sorrow; the sale has a two-fold purpose: that every one may wear the poppy in memory of the sacrifice made by the boys who were in service; and that the proceeds of the sale may be used in caring for the needy families of service men and for hospital work for the boys who have not been released from Government hospitals or the service men who may be sick and again return to hospitals.

LET GRADING CONTRACT

Friday was road letting day at the courthouse and the Supervisors opened bids on the projects advertised letting grading of the Wilson highway project south of Dows to R. E. Shugart of Nevada, Iowa, at 24.7c per square yard. There are nine and one-half miles of the highway to be improved. The tiling for the stretch goes to the Jorgenson company of Garner for a total of $12.634.85. This is a primary road improvement.

O'Hanlan & Reilly, of West Bend, landed the contact for the county road project let at this time, at 23½ sents per square yard for the grading. The tiling contract for the same job was let to the Westergaard concern of Buffalo Center, for a total of $5,081.45 for the ten miles stretch. These contracts cover four miles of county road south of Renwick and six miles on the Woolstock-Dows roadway.

The Supervisors have also acted favorably on a proposition of adding to the colnty road system seven and one-half miles of roadway running from Galt thru Lincoln, and joining up the Eagle Grove and Clarion main roads. The matter has gone to the State Highway commission, which will likely O. K. the matter and thus the farmers in the territory served will secure the benefit of a better road along the route.—News.

"CLARENCE"

The large audience which saw the class play, "Clarence," produced under the efficient direction of Miss Thomas last Friday were unanimous in their praise of the play and the players. The lines of of play were full of the subtleties which tickle one's finer sense of humor instead of producing roaring laughter. In the field of portraying juvenile characters Booth Tarkington is without a peer. However, the smiles which Cora and Bobby provoke are rather from the adult who recalls similar near-tragedies of his own youth than from the high school pupils who are not far enough away from that stage themselves to see them in perspective.

The parts were all very well interpreted, in fact, it seemed impossible to imagine being done by any others than the ones who were chosen to play them. The numbers between the acts gave pleasing variety to the program. In every way the class brought themselves and the school honor on this occasion which one feels should be the climax of the year's public programs.

COMMUNITY CLUB ITEMS

The Community Welfare Club meets in the library basement Friday afternoon, May 26. Mrs. Francis Whitley from Webster City will speak about our National parks. This ought to be a very interesting talk; and everybody should try to come and bring a friend.

The serving committee are: Miss Julia Johnson, Mrs. Box, Mrs. Groh, Mrs. M. R. Pierce, Mrs. J. D. Baker, Mrs. E. W. Luick, Mrs. Nordschow, Mrs. Lillie Anderson.

127,249 FORDS SOLD IN APRIL 1922

According to a report received from the Ford Motor Company, a daily average of 5,210 retail sales of cars and trucks had been reached by the close of April in the Uuited States alone.

Sales of cars and trucks for the month, including both domestic and foreign, totaled 127, 249. This establishes a new high record, exceeding the largest previous month, June 1921, by 15,467.

The sale of tractors has also been steadily climbing. A total of 11,131 Fordsons were sold during April in the United States, a total average of 469 having been reached by the end of the month. This gives a new sales record, and shows one hundred per cent increase over the best month in 1921.

The Ford Company is enjoying a banner year in all departments. Output of cars and trucks for the year, according to present estimates, will exceed 1,100,000 which represent a ten per cent increase over 1921.

The factory is now operating at full capacity, having a force of more than 40,000 men on the payroll. The scheduled output for May will probably reach 135-000 cars and trucks, which will be applied against orders approximately 165,000.

Despite the attempt of the factory and the twenty-three assembling plants in the United States to produce a sufficient number of cars to meet the unusually heavy demand, it has been impossible for dealers in most cases to make immediate deliveries.

A PLEA FOR THE NURSE

During six years' experience as a teacher in both town and rural schools I decided that every mother should teach at least one year of school, but since becoming a mother I am sure that every one concerned would be benefited much more if every mother could pass a creditable examination in home nursing.

If we could sum up the time and energy lost both by teacher and pupils, in order that some pupil, who has enlarged tonsils, poor eye sight or poor hearing, (or more than likely all three), may be given special instruction because he hasn't heard directions given by the teacher, can't see the blackboard, or is simply listless and inattentive from the effects of ill health, the "two dozen eggs" required of the average taxpayer to pay a competent nurse for a year would be comparatively nothing.

Before our county nurse came we used to recommend treatment for children—even promote some on the condition that they have eyes or ears treated, tonsils and adenoids removed, etc., during the summer vacation but there was one one to do the follow up work and to see that it was done, consequently the child came back to school in September with the request that he be allowed to continue with his class because it cost too much to go to a doctor for the treatment, and the child was allowed to drag through another year. Now all such cases are taken care of either at home or at Iowa City by one of our nurses.

The law says the board of supervisors shall support the farm bureau agent in order that the farmers may be helped in the raising of the best type of hogs, but it is left to the discretion of five men as to whether we farm women are to have any help in the care and feeding of our children.

And now that not only the farm women, but all women interested in healthy intelligent children, can use their influence at the polls it is a pleasure that all should share to show the county supervisors whom we have placed in their present positions that we do want and need, more than any individual can realize, a county nurse.

Graduation Exercises To Occupy Week—Sermon To Be Given Next Sunday

OTHER SCHOOL NEWS ITEMS

The Commencement Exercises of the Belmond High School will be held the week of May 28. Rev. Wilkinson of the M. E. chuhch will deliver the Baccalaureate sermon in the High school auditorium next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock.

Wednesday evening May 31 at 8 o'clock, Honorable Frederick F. Faville, Judge of the Supreme Court of Iowa, will deliver the Commencement address to the class of 1922.

Thursday evening, June 1, the Eighth Commencement excerises and Class Play, "The Revolving Wedge," will be held in the school auditorium at 8 o'colck. An addmission of 15c and 25c will be charged for these exercises.

The Revolving Wedge

Mr. Thomas Martin, a Cambridge gentleman—David Tyrrell.
Mrs. Thomas Martin, Martin's wife—Elaine Moe.
Bob Martin, A Harvard Football Player—Gerald Barry.
Nell Martin, Martin's daughter
Mr. Edward Biddle, Martin's second cousin—Clair Rierson.
Dr. George Brown, Mrs. Martin's brother—Albert Matin.
Norah, Their servant—Bernice House.

Synopsis—The Harvard and Pennsylvania football team scheduled a game for Thanksgiving. Bob Martin, a player on the Harvard team has secured a promise from his father to premit him to play all the games that season. Mr. Martin has always had a family reunion on Thanksgiving and is much opposed to football, so has forbidden the other members of the family to attend the game. All the guests decline the invitations except Mr. Biddle, which angers Mr. Martin very much. Mr. Biddle finally appears and jokes with Mr. Martin about his being so clever as to not to go to the game and see his college beaten.

Thursday evening, June 1, in conjunction with the commencement exercises and Class Play, the Junior High Girls Glee Club will present the cantata, "Fays of the Floating Island," by Paul Bliss. This cantata is the first of its kind to be given in Belmond schools. This is very difficult, using three voice parts throughout. This Glee Club has been organized only four months, and is full of enthusiastic workers and promising voices who will lend valuable aid to the High School Glee Club in the coming years.

The school is indebeted to many business firms and individuals for the loan of many things necessary for the stage setting of "Clarence." We are especially indebted to Carlston & Skovlin, Wright Co. Furniture Co. and the Belmond Furniture Co.

The Annual Staff will have annuals to sell this week. Every one will want one of these books at $1.00. If you do not get yours phone Marjorie Williams.

The Picture given by the Seniors to the school in now framed and hung in front of the assembly. It is a reproduction of "The Rocks" by Dunning, an Iowa painter.

Last Friday our baseball team took Dows into camp 6-4. Upon reading the Dows write-up it occurs to us that seemingly all of the Dows team starred but when the scores were counted Belmond had 6 to Dows 4. Our boys pulled the game out of the fire 3 times, Madsen getting two doubles with men on. The ground was very wet and a rain during the entire game made it disagreeable playing, more so for Dows than us.

Dows will play a return game here Friday. This should be of much interest as it is your high school which is claiming Northern State Championship, having won all regularly scheduled games and having played the State champions a 4-3 game. The Earlham coach said Belmond gave them the hardest battle of the season. Will Dows ruin our records? Not if you come out and Boost!

Monday the baseball team went to Klemme and emerged victor in a very loosely played game, with the score standing 16-3. The game was mostly comedy, interspersed with wild heaves and costly errors. The Klemme catcher allowed 3 of first four scores on passed balls with men on 3rd. Belmond scored almost at will.

Students are studying hard this week preparatory to taking the Semester Examinations which will be given Monday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

Friday June 2nd will be a "Gala Day" for B. H. S. All the High school students will meet at 9 o'clock

Good Business

Everybody we talk to about it agrees with us that it's good business:

To diagnose battery troubles as carefully as a doctor diagnoses his cases.

To advise and make repairs only when we know repairs will pay.

To recommend the purchase of a new battery only when repairs on the old one would not be a good investment.

To speak frankly, plainly, and with a thought of the best interests of the battery owner whether his is a Willard Battery or not.

MODERN CAVE MAN BEATS NEIGHBOR'S WIFE

Leader: Too much "hootch" coupled with an ungovernable temper, has gotten Mike Simmek, a beet weeder who resided north of Eagle Lake, in bad Monday of this week, Sheriff Hanson was called to that section to take the fellow into custody. Simmek was to work beets on the land just south of the Bill Coller place. In some manner, he and the wife of a neighbor beet worker got into a row and Simmek beat the woman unmercifully, so the story goes. Sheriff Peck was told to bring Dr. McMahon with him to attend the lady's injuries. Simmek was brought to Garner and placed in the city jail. Yesterday, he was given a hearing before Justice Mullen of Britt. The charge against him was "Attempt to commit great bodily injury." He was bound over to the grand jury on $500 bonds.

LEST WE FORGET

If Memorial Day served no other purpose than to bring to our minds those who have served us in the last full measure of devotion, it would be worth while. That such a day was set aside, lest we forget those who died for us, is typical of America, and characteristic of our Christian principles. It is not possible that we could forget, in the rush of our daily lives, these American Men who fell on the fields of battle in our cause, but that one certain day is set aside for their memories is fitting. We would not have it otherwise. In justice to ourselves, we wish it. We wish, on this day, to bow our heads in reverence, in humilation, and in love, to those heroic men and women who gave their lives that American principles of freedom and liberty might prevail, that "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" should not perish from the earth.

And we wish on this day, then to raise our heads toward the Divinity who has guided us a nation thru the trials, the temptations and pitfalls that have beset us, and thank Him for His guidence and help to pray that in the future as in the past, "In God We Trust" may be our motto. We wish to lift our heads in pride for the noble manhood and womanhood which this nation has produced; in pride for their shining services to humanity. It is a Day wherein we, as fellows of those who have gone, wish to renew our pledges of loyality, of service, to our country; to vow anew that we shall maintain, as our fallen brothers maintained, those Christian principles of Americanism which have made America the chosen of God, and American people the favored of Him.

And we would render loving services to our dead. We would visit their last resting places, that we may place upon their graves flower symbols of our rememberance and devotion; that we may join with one another in a Holy Service of their memories. Memorial Day is a Day of strengthening, heartening memories; a Day of pride, of glory, of devotion; and a Day in which we shall all, as loyal, true Americans, give honor to our nation's dead; and promise them as fellow Americans, to uphold as they upheld, our freedom and liberties, and keep and protect America in loyalty to her standards as they would have us do.

"In Flanders' fields the poppies grow,
Between the crosses, row on row."
And we shall not forget.

THE COUNTY FAIR

One of the things which you will be asked to vote upon Monday, June 5, will be the question of the county fair grounds. As is generally known, the fair grounds, thru various circurstances, were sold to Sams, at Clarion. Agitation to have the city of Clarion buy them for a park and use as fair grounds for the county fair, resulted in favorable action, when it was found that the law does not permit a town to levy sufficient tax to meet the cost of the grounds.

It was argued pro and con, and ultimately decided to put the proposition of county owned fair up to the voters at the June 5th primary. The voters of Wright county are asked on that day to state whether they shall be taxed to purchase these grounds FOR THE COUNTY. The tax will run, as we gather it, from 50c to three or four dollars, for one year only; that is, you will pay your share whether it be 50 cents, or four dollars, ONLY ONCE.

Some "kick" has been registered because the fair grounds will be in Clarion, and Clarion it is claimed, will benefit thereby while the other towns in the county foot the bill. The Independent believes this is a rather small view to take of the matter; Belmond would benefit, perhaps in some slight degree if the grounds were located here; so would Eagle Grove, or Dows, or Goldfield. It is a question of wether Wright county people want to hold the county fair, or let it drop. The Independent believes that the fair should be maintained; to go into the reason therefor is needless, they are obvious to all. Granting that Clarion may benefit slightly, for the sake of argument—and we aren't going to benefit Clarion for nothing, not if we know it—so do the other communities of the county benefit, while the farmer benefits most of all.

If Wright county is to maintain its past progressive policy, to keep in the march of progress industrially and agriculturally, it needs the fair. This paper favors it. It is endorsed by the Farm Bureau, thru the County Agent as a benefit to the farmers. Making it a county affair is the logical thing to do. The cost individually is small, and it gives the universal interest which any fair needs. Rightly conducted and managed, it will return a profit to the county—and that profit will reduce the taxes that much. Lay aside petty jealousies and considerations; forget that circumstances place the grounds in Clarion; throw off the selfish viewpoint, and consider the proposition impartially. Sum it up in these two ways: Do we need it? Will it pay?

A LA WALT MASON

In the spring the whiskered farmer drinks hard cider from the can, thowing wads of burning language at the loafing hired man; in the spring the village gardner plants his lettuce, beets, and corn, and the cut worm eats it while he sleepeth in the morn; in the spring the old sow wanders to some quiet fen or brake, and returns with seven piglets cutely toddling in her wake; in the spring the good dog Rover hides behind the bushes damp, waiting always, waiting ever, for a chance to nail a tramp that has been a pet for years, gores the proud, confiding farmer, sits on him and eats his ears; in the spring the youth and maiden go to picnils in the woods, packing with them in their basket jells and fudge and other goods; and they fall into the river and the bull heads eat them up, till they come home in the evening swollen like a poisoned pup.—Miller

WRIGHT COUNTY LAND SELLS FOR BIG PRICE

The Des Moines Regiseter for Sunday, the 7th, contained two interesting "deals in dirt," one of which was in Wright county. Th old Birdsall farm bordering on Wall Lake was sold to an attorney at Davenport for $200,000 There are 860 acres in the place. The other transaction was the sale of 6,000 acres near Sioux City, for a total of $1,500,000. Judging from the prices on these two parcels of land, Iowa soil is a pretty good investment yet in spite of the high taxes.

When Spring doesn't get here on time we have that much longer anticipation.

Don't get faint-hearted. The world ain't going to ruin—not even when it's going your way.

RADIO

THINGS BEGINNERS MUST LEARN FIRST

Explanation of Terms Used in Radio and of Its Basic Principles.

Due to the great interest taken in radio since broadcasting stations have been started, many radio terms are seen and heard that may be unfamiliar to the novice. Some of the most commonly used terms are explained and defined below.

Like light, heat and sound, radio energy is propagated in the form of a wave motion. Every one is familiar with the wave motion set up on the surface of a still body of water by the dropping of a stone into it.

Every time a point on the surface of the waves goes through a complete set of motions and starts to repeat those motions the wave is said to have gone through a cycle.

The number of complete cycles gone through per second is the frequency.

The human ear is responsive to sound frequencies up to a few thousand cycles per second but is not capable of responding to the higher frequencies encountered in radio. Arbitrarily a frequency of less than 10,000 cycles has been called an audible frequency—one which can be heard—and frequencies above 10,000 cycles, radio or inaudible frequencies—because they cannot be heard by the human ear.

The particular type of wave which propagates radio energy is an electromagnetic wave. All of us have seen bits of iron and steel attracted by the little toy magnets made up in the form of horseshoes. This attraction of the magnet for the bits of iron and steel showed the existence of a magnetic field about the tips of the magnet and this same kind of a field propagates the electro-magnetic force, except that unlike the toy magnet, its power comes off in the form of wavy motions. This electro-magnetic force propagates radio energy in all directions.

The medium that transmits the electro-magnetic waves is the same medium that transmits light—the ether. This medium is supposed to fill all space, even that occupied by fluids and solids. Little is known about its properties.

In radio it is more common to speak of wave length than frequency. The wave length of any wave motion is the distance between any two successive crests in the same direction. The wave length depends upon the frequency. If the frequency is high the wave length is short. On the other hand if the frequency is low the wave length is long. Numerically the wave length is equal to the distance traveled by the wave in one second divided by the frequency. Suppose, for example, that it were desired to know the wave length of an electro-magnetic wave having a frequency of 835,000 cycles. Electro-magnetic waves travel at the same speed as do light waves, that is, 186,000 miles per second. Dividing the 186,000 by 835,000 the wave length would be .223 miles or 396 yards. In radio work it is measured in meters. A meter is equal to approximately 1.1 yards. Converting 396 yards into meters the wave length would be 396 divided by 1.1 or 360 meters. This is the wave length on which KDKA operates. It also means that the electro-magnetic waves sent out from this station have a frequency of 835,000 cycles.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES

In a radiophone transmitter there are two requirements that must be fulfilled. First, there must be a source of high-frequency current, say, between 15,000 and 1,500,000 cycles so connected to an antenna and ground system that energy in the form of electromagnetic waves will be radiated. Second, there must be some method of controlling this high-frequency current or modulating it so that the variations in the amplitude of the high-frequency current will be directly proportional to the voice or music to be transmitted.

The high-frequency current is known as the carrier-wave and its function is to radiate into space in the form of electro-magnetic waves and by its variation in amplitude carry with it the variation in the tone at the transmitting station.

It is the frequency of the carrier-wave that determines the wave-length on which a radiophone station is transmitted. By experiment it has been found that electro-magnetic waves travel at the same velocity that light waves travel, that is, 186,000 miles per second. Wave-length is the distance between any two similar points on two successive waves; for example, the distance from crest to crest of any two successive waves in the same direction, measured in meters, a unit of length equal approximately to one and one-tenth yards. Converting 186,000 miles to meters, the equivalent is 300,000,000 meters. The length of an electro-magnetic wave is equal then to 300,000,000 divided by the frequency. Suppose a station was transmitting on a wave-length of 360 meters. The frequency of the carrier-wave would be approximately 835,000 cycles.

Just as a violinist tunes his instrument, that is, makes a certain string emit a note of higher or lower pitch, or, technically speaking, a sound wave of higher or lower frequency, by adjusting the tension on the string, so may the electrical constants of the antenna circuit of a radiophone transmitter be changed in order to have the station emit a carrier-wave of a different frequency.

If a tuning fork having a natural period corresponding to middle C be placed near a violinist who is playing, the fork will vibrate when the musician plays middle C, but all other times it will remain quiescent. This phenomenon of the tuning fork vibrating whenever the musician plays the corresponding note on the violin is known as mechanical resonance. If a radio receiver be adjusted so that electrically its natural period of vibration will be 835,000 cycles (360 meters wavelength) every time a station transmits on a wave-length of 360 meters, current will be set up in the receiver by electrical resonance. Stations transmitting on any wave-length other than 360 meters will not cause a current to be set up in the receiver.

The portion of a radio receiver that changes the wave-length at which it is electrically resonant is called a tuner. Suppose that "A" station transmits on a wave-length of 200 meters and "B" on a wave-length of 360 meters. By adjusting the tuner until the constants of the receiver make it electrically resonant to a 200-meter wave or a 360-meter wave, either of the two stations can be picked up, but both stations cannot be picked up simultaneously. This is the reason that more than one transmitter can be operating at one time and yet only one can be heard on a receiver without interference from the others.

The other necessary part of a radio receiver is the detector. The function of this portion of the receiver is to utilize the small currents in the tuner that are set up by a transmitting station and make them audible through the medium of a telephone receiver. If the telephone receiver were connected directly to the tuner the high-frequency current would not operate the diaphragm of the receiver and even if the diaphragm were set in motion it would be too fast a motion to be picked up by the human ear.

In a simple receiver the detector usually consists of two pieces of mineral in contact or a piece of mineral in contact with a metallic spring. Either combination is known as a crystal detector. A detector of this type is nothing more than a rectifier; that is, when an alternating current is applied at the terminals the current is allowed to flow only in one direction.

How One Editor Uses Radio.

The editor of a paper in an isolated town in the northwest is using the radio in a most ingenious and effective way. An amateur radio friend in a big city 50 miles away buys the latest editions of the city papers as soon as they are off the press, reads the best news into his transmitter, and a typist in the country office copies the news as it comes in over the office receiver. The editor, through this ingenious plan, is always "First With the Latest" in his home town.

Miss Baumgartner, one of the local teachers, has accepted a position for this coming year in the schools at Montecello, Iowa, at a salary of $140 per month, an increase of ten dollars.

Miss Marie Leavy will be numbered among the teaching force of the Latimer schools next year, having accepted a position as grade teacher there.

Carol McIntyre demonstrated the mysteries of Radio to the Physics class of the school one morning this week, explaining to the students the "whyfors" of the wireless. Carol is experienced in the wireless and knows the ins and outs of Radio. He has had a station of his own for several years, and holds a second class government license for sending.

Miss Dodd spent Saturday of last week at Garner, visiting her fellow teacher, Miss Ramsay, who recently went to her home at Garner to recover from her illness. Miss Ramsay expects to return to her duties in the school here this week Thursday.

STATE CLUB LEADER VISITS WRIGHT

Miss Josephine Arnquist, State Leader of girls' club work spent two days in Wright County last week in assisting with the organization of girls' club work. Eight clubs in all were visited and judging from reports from the clubs Miss Arnquist's work was very interesting as well as instructive.

Miss Arnquist accompanied by the county agent met with the club leaders and members at the following places:

Mrs. Art Duitscher home, Lake School No. 2. Pleasant.
Mrs. C. S. Thomas home, Dayton School No. 1. Woolstock.
School No. 5. Lincoln, Mrs. N. E. Schroder, Wall Lake.
Mrs. Clarence Hill home Blaine, Mrs. Harry Woodley, Grant.

FARM BUREAU AND COUNTY FAIR

It would not be reasonable to expect the Wright County Farm Bureau as an organization to lend its influence towards continuing the Fair or towards discontinueing it according to the plan which has been proposed. It should be born in mind the the County Farm Bureau is made up of about 1200 to 1300 members whose opinions are divided on this issue and it would therefore be unfair to a certain percent of its members for the organization to take a definite stand for or against this proposition. There are very few members of this organization who do not realize the value of a county fair to the agricultural interests of the community, but since the tax payers of the county are the ones who will foot the bill in this project it would seem that the voters should decide this question at the polls and every Farm Bureau member as well as every other public spirited citizen should be willing to abide by the decision as expressed by the voters themselves next June 5th.

The sentiment as expressed by many farmers seems to be that the fair as it has been conducted in the past has not given enough attention to agricultural exhibits and that the fair has not been held at a time of the year when agricultural products could be shown. The original idea of the county fair was the exhibition of agricultural products and it is felt by many that more attention should be given to this department of the fair locally. It is true that concessions and horse racing are drawing cards at a county fair but many have felt that more attention could resonably be given to the agricultural exhibits. Many farmers would favor a fair which could be held in the fall of the year at a time when the fruits of their labor could be shown in competition with farmers from the various sections of the county. From the standpoint of purebred livestock Wright County ranks high with the other counties of the State and has been able to make a splendid showing in this department during the past few years. The Wright County Farm Bureau in its attitude towards the county fair will be guided by the decision of the voters June 5th, but should not be expected to influence any one's vote on this important issue. According to the proposed plan the taxpayers will buy the fair grounds and of course it naturally follows that improvements must be made and the buildings and all equipment maintained. The plan of having one director from each township seems feasible and if carried through on this basis should give satisfaction. The county fair should be a county wide proposition and should be controlled by the directors from the various parts of the county. Now is the time for every citizen of the county to decide in his own mind whether we should be taxed to buy the county fair grounds and let us hope that every voter will give this serious consideration before he casts his vote June 5th.

Personally, I feel that a county fair is a very good thing for any agricultural community and its advantages are known to all people and since Wright County is situated in the heart of the leading agricultural State in the union it would seem that its people would be justified in supporting a county fair which has for its main object the exhibition of its agricultural products. Altho it would be reasonable to expect that the means of its support should be decided upon by the voters of the county.

I believe people in general are in favor of a fair which is truely representative of the entire county, one which is self supporting, one which gives proper proportion of attention to agricultural products exhibits and one which is held at a time of year when agricultural products can be shown.

R. M. Edwards, County Agent.

P & O Two-Row Cultivators

Here are four good reasons for using a P & O Two-Row Cultivator on your farm: 1. One man using a P & O two- row will do as much work in one day as two men using one-row cultivators. Saves the labor of one man. 2. Under all ordinary conditions three horses handle the P & O two-row with ease. Saves the labor of one horse. 3. P & O two-row costs less than two good one-row riding cultivators. Saves on money invested. 4. P & O costs less to keep up than two one-row cultivators. Saves on upkeep.

VOTE FOR

T. J. B. ROBINSON

HAMPTON, IOWA

Candidate For Congress

In the Third Iowa District, at Republican Primary, June 5th, 1922

FARMERS AND BUSINESSMEN FAVOR ROBINSON

G. E. VanWert, president of the Franklin County Farm Bureau, and the legislative committee of the Farm Bureau, have strongly endorsed Mr. Robinson, and urge the farmers of the Third district to vote for him. Mr. Robinson is a prudent business man, knows the needs of the farmer and is and always has been interested in the success of agriculture, the business man and the laboring man. Mr. Robinson served as a member of the Iowa State Senate for four years, and made a most excellent record. He was active in the support of good laws, and his vote was always in the interests of the people, and for prudent management of state affairs.

Ex-Service Men Strong for Robinson

Chaplain Tom Roberts, and other leading members of the American Legion of the Third district have endorsed Mr. Robinson, and are active in his support, as he has always been the real friend of the ex-service man.

Vote for T. J. B. Robinson, a man who stands for the best things in life, and a man who stands for the same things in one end of the district as he does in the other. His home folks and neighbors endorse him as 100 per cent in ability and character.

McFARLANE

For Congress

The people of the Third district have an opportunity to put in congress a man of ripe legislative experience and standing---one who has been elected speaker of the Iowa House of Representatives and who has the distinction of having been re-elected to that exalted position by acclamation. Arch W. McFarlane of Waterloo has been a loyal and active republican all his life, and has given freely of his time and means to the support of the party and its principles. He commands the confidence and esteem of those who know him.

Experience United With Character

United with experience of the most valuable kind, Mr. McFarlane possesses the character of a sturdy, dependable and successful business man,

Vitally concerned in all problems of interest to every person in the Third district

and if nominated and elected he can be relied upon to vote for the best interests of his constituency. On this basis he solicits the votes and support of the people of Wright county, assuring them of his hearty sympathy with their problems and realizing that no greater honor could come to any man than to represent them in the halls of congress.

Vote for McFarlane At the Primary

A vote for Arch W. McFarlane at the primary is a vote for progressive government, economy in expenditures of public money, intelligent administration of the nation's laws and courageous solution of its problems. McFarlane has the ability and experience to make the district one of the best representatives it has ever had. Vote for him on primary day, Monday, June 5.

AUTO KILLS SHEEP, CAR CATCHES FIRE

Jake Cuvelier, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Cuvelier, and Harold Handorf, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hendorf, both of whom reside near Hansell, narrowly escaped death when the big Reo seven passenger touring car which they were driving turned turtle with them last Friday evening, near the Keefe farm just east of Hampton.

The boys were on their way to Hampton from Hansell about 9:00 o'clock Friday evening when the car struck a large sheep in the road in front of the W. J. Keefe farm home about one and one-half miles east of Hampton. The force of the blow caused young Handorf who was driving, to lose control of the car and about 100 feet from the spot where the sheep was struck the car went into the ditch on the south side of the road and turned completely over, pinning the boys underneath it. The car was owned by Handorf's father.

As the car pitched into the ditch the gasoline became ignited in some way and in only a moment the whole car was in flames. Had it not been for the fact that the accident took place right in front of the Keefe home where instant aid was at hand, the Cuvelier boy would probably have burned to death. As it was he was severely blistered on his left leg and also about the face. His most serious injury, however was the bruising of his right eye. The physicians in charge say that Cuvelier will recover without any bad effects from accident. Young Handorf was more fortunate than his companion. He escaped with only a few bruises, slight in comparison to those of Cuvelier.

The boys were taken from under the car by Mr. Keefe and were brot to this city and after a hurried medical examination they were taken to the Hampton hospital.

Handorf was allowed to return to his home Saturday, but Cuvelier was not able to go home for several days.—Chronicle.

WHAT A MAN OWES HIS TOWN

What does a business man owe to the town in which his business is located besides the payment of taxes? Nothing, some close-fisted and tight-lipped business men will say. But they are not the kind of business men who make the biggest success nor are they the kind of business men who get the most out of life.

The business men who make the biggest success and who get the most out of life are the kind who believe they owe something more to the town in which their business is located than the mere payment of taxes; who believe they owe it what they can contribute of active aid in solving the problems that confront their neighbor their social, political or commercial.

Fortunately for the towns of this country there are many able business men who, disregarding the advise of the kind business men who say that it may cause them to lose some trade if they take sides in city affairs, are devoting considerable of their time and their talents to do something for the general good of their town. And the number of such men is growing. The time has passed, and Buffalo Center men know it, when a merchant loses trade by getting out and boosting for an improvement the town needs, even though a few mossbacks are opposed to such an improvement. And we sincerely hope and trust that such a time may never return, or that the town may have as business men in the future those who can't see any farther than the cash drawer.—Buffalo Center Tribune

JAMISON SELLS STOCK IN DOWS BANK

G. H. Jamison has sold his stock in the Farmers State Bank at Dows, and is now completely out of the Banking business in that town. Mr. Jamison and members of his family have held control of the bank for many years. H. E. Ford, who has been acting vice president, has also sold his stock and will retire from the bank.

Several Hampton men and others from Dows, now have complete control of the bank, in fact Mr. Jamison has sold his entire holdings. E. R. Worley, who has been cashier of the bank during the past two years will remain in that capacity. W. E. Deam, a former well known Chapin boy, and a son of Ira T. Deam, of this city, is among the new stockholders, and has been elected vice president and will be one of the active officials in the bank. Mr. Deam has been engaged in the banking business in Iowa for several years, and goes to Dows very highly recommended. The people of Dows will find him a clean and reliable citizen, and a prudent business man.

Among the Hampton men who will be stockholders under the new management are Dr. C. F. Osborne, William Donaldson, Dr. J. C. Powers, and Ira T. Deam. Dr. Schnug and a number of farmers near Dows, who have been stockholders in the bank will retain their interests in the bank.

Dr. C. F. Osborne was chosen president of the bank, succeeding F. B. Sheldon of Rowan.—Hampton Chronicle.

PEOPLE WILL TALK

You may get through the world, but
'twill be very slow,
If you listen to all that is said as you go;
You'll be worried and fretted, and kept in a stew—
For meddlesome tongues must have something to do,
And people will talk.

If quiet and modest, you'll have it presumed
That your humble position is only assumed;
You're a wolf in sheep's clothing, or else you're a fool;
But don't get excited—keep perfectly cool—
For people will talk.

And then if you show the least boldness of heart,
Or a slight indication to take your own part,
They will call you an upstart, conceited and vain;
But keep straight ahead, don't stop to explain—
For people will talk.

If threadbare your dress, or old-fashioned your hat,
Someone will surely take notice of that,
And hint rather strong that you can't pay your way,
But don't get excited whatever they say—
For pople will talk.

If your dress is in fashion, don't think to escape,
For they criticise them in a different shape;
You're ahead of your means, or your tailor's unpaid;
But mind your own business—there's naught to be made—
For people will talk.

Now, the best way to do is to do as you please,
For your mind, if you have one, will then be at ease,
Of course, you will meet all sorts of abuse;
But don't think to stop them—it
"ain't" any use—
For people will talk.

The Senior Class Play entitled "An Old Fashioned Mother," given at the M. E. church here last Thursday evening was a decided success from start to finish. Every one handled their parts so well and gave them with such ease and ability that the audience was at times moved to tears then compelled to join in the mirth and laughter caused by a sudden out burst of humor. Altogether it was a play well rendered and appreciated by all present, and contained a lesson of real worth. Much credit should be given Mrs. Sifert for the excellent work she did in the training and the judgement used in giving the various parts to ones best fitted, and in succeeding so well that the play was repeated again on Saturday night to a full house. Special music was furnished by the orchestra and special mention should be made of the solo rendered by Mrs. K. Clarence Ruigh which was much enjoyed by every one present.

GOOD SALE IN GERMANY

In 1918 Andrew Scott of Marcus had an opportunity to sell a house and three lots he owned in Germany for a good price which was 1380 marks. In the meantime the money was changed, first into Denmark money and then into American money with the result he received word the other day he will receive ninety cents from the sale of his German property.—News.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

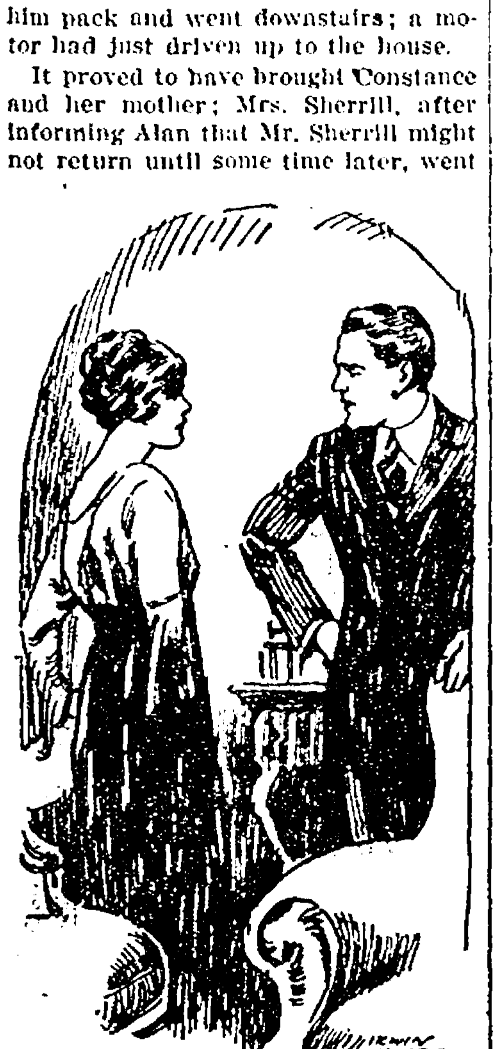
Sherrill had believed that here in this house Benjamin Corvet had left—or might have left—a memorandum, a record, or an account of some sort which would explain to Alan, his son, the blight which hung over his life. Sherrill had said that it could have been no mere intrigue, no vulgar personal sin; and the events of the night had made that very certain; for, plainly, whatever was hidden in that house involved some one else seriously, desperately. There was no other way to explain the intrusion of the sort of man whom Alan had surprised there an hour ago.

The fact that this other man searched also did not prove that Benjamin Corvet had left a record in the house, as Sherrill believed; but it certainly showed that another person believed—or feared—it. Whether or not guilt had sent Benjamin Corvet away four days ago, whether or not there had been guilt behind the ghost which had "got Ben," there was guilt in the big man's superstitious terror when he had seen Alan. A bold, powerful man like that one, when his conscience is clear, does not see a ghost. And the ghost which he had seen had a bullet hole above the brows!

Alan took up his hat and looked about the house; he was going to return and sleep here, of course; he was not going to leave the house unguarded for any long time after this, but, after what had just happened, he felt he could leave it safely for half an hour, particularly if he left a light burning within.

He did this and stepped over to the Sherrills'. The man who answered his ring recognized him at once and admitted him; in reply to Alan's question, the servant said that Mr. Sherrill had not yet returned. When Alan went to his room, the valet appeared and, finding that Alan was packing, the man offered his service. Alan let him pack and went downstairs; a motor had just driven up to the house.

It proved to have brought Constance and her mother; Mrs. Sherrill, after informing Alan that Mr. Sherrill might not return until some time later, went upstairs and did not appear again. Constance followed her mother, but, ten minutes later, came downstairs.



"You're Not Staying Here Tonight?" She Asked.

"You're not staying here tonight?" she asked.

"I wanted to say to your father," Alan explained, "that I believe I had better go over to the other house."

"Are you taking any one with you?" she inquired.

"Any one?"

"A servant, I mean."

"No."

"Then you'll let us lend you a man from here."

"You're awfully good; but I don't think I'll need anyone tonight. Mr. Corvet's—my father's man—is coming back tomorrow, I understand. I'll get along very well until then."

She was silent a moment as she looked away. Her shoulders suddenly jerked a little. "I wish you'd take some one with you," she persisted. "I don't like to think of you alone over there."

"My father must have been often alone there."

"Yes," she said. "Yes." She looked at him quickly, then away, checking a question. She wanted to ask, he knew, what he had discovered in that lonely house which had so agitated him; for of course she had noticed agitation in him. And he had intended to tell her, or, rather, her father. He had been rehearsing to himself the description of the man he had met there in order to ask Sherrill about him; but now Alan knew that he was not going to refer the matter even to Sherrill just yet.

Sherrill had believed that Benjamin Corvet's disappearance was from circumstances too personal and intimate to be made a subject of public inquiry; and what Alan had encountered in Corvet's house had confirmed that belief. Sherrill further had said that Benjamin Corvet, if he had wished Sherrill to know those circumstances, would have told them to him; but Corvet had not done that; instead, he had sent for Alan, his son. He had given his son his confidence.

Sherrill had admitted that he was withholding from Alan, for the time being, something that he knew about Benjamin Corvet; it was nothing, he had said, which would help Alan to learn about his father, or what had become of him; but perhaps Sherrill, not knowing these other things, could not speak accurately as to that. Alan determined to ask Sherrill what he had been withholding, before he told him all of what had happened in Corvet's house. There was one other circumstance which Sherrill had mentioned but not explained; it occurred to Alan now.

"Miss Sherrill—" he checked himself.

"What is it?"

"This afternoon your father said that you believed that Mr. Corvet's disappearance was in some way connected with you; he said that he did not think that was so; but do you want to tell me why you thought it?"

"Yes; I will tell you." She colored quickly. "One of the last things Mr. Corvet did—in fact, the last thing we know of his doing before he sent for you—was to come to me and warn me against one of my friends."

"Warn you, Miss Sherrill? How? I mean, warn you against what?"

"Against thinking too much of him." She turned away.

"I think I'll come to see your father in the morning," Alan said, when Constance looked back to him.

"But you'll come over here for breakfast in the morning?"

"You want me?"

"Certainly."

"I'd like to come very much."

"Then I'll expect you." She followed him to the door when he had put on his things, and he made no objection when she asked that the man be allowed to carry his bag around to the other house.

When he had dismissed Simons and re-entered the house on Astor street, he found no evidences of any disturbance while he had been gone. On the second floor, to the east of the room which had been his father's, was a bedroom which evidently had been kept as a guest chamber; Alan carried his suitcase there and made ready for bed.

The sight of Constance Sherrill standing and watching after him in concern as he started back to this house, came to him again and again and, also, her flush when she had spoken of the friend against whom Benjamin Corvet had warned her. Who was he? It had been impossible at that moment for Alan to ask her more; besides, if he had asked and she had told him, he would have learned only a name which he could not place yet in any connection with her or with Benjamin Corvet. Whoever he was, it was plain that Constance Sherrill "thought of him;" lucky man, Alan said to himself. Yet Corvet had warned her not to think of him. . . .

Alan turned back his bed. It had been for him a tremendous day. Barely twelve hours before he had come to that house, Alan Conrad from Blue Rapids, Kan., now . . . phrases from what Lawrence Sherrill had told him of his father were running through his mind as he opened the door of the room to be able to hear any noise in Benjamin Corvet's house, of which he was sole protector. The emotion roused by his first sight of the lake went through him again as he opened the window to the east.

Now—he was in bed—he seemed to be standing, a specter before a man blaspheming Benjamin Corvet and the souls of men dead. "And the hole above the eye! . . . The bullet got you! . . . So it's you that got Ben! . . . I'll get you! . . . You can't save the Miwaka!"

The Miwaka! The stir of that name was stronger now even than before; it had been running through his consciousness almost constantly since he had heard it. He jumped up and turned on the light and found a pencil. He did not know how to spell the name and it was not necessary to write it down; the name had taken on that definiteness and ineffaceableness of a thing which, once heard, can never again be forgotten. But, in panic that he might forget, he wrote it, guessing at the spelling—"Miwaka."

It was a name, of course; but the name of what? It repeated and repeated itself to him, after he got back into bed, until its very iteration made him drowsy.

Outside, the gale whistled and shrieked. The wind, passing its last resistance after its sweep across the prairies before it leaped upon the lake, battered and clamored in its assault about the house. But as Alan became sleepier, he heard it no longer as it rattled the windows and howled under the eaves and over the roof, but as out on the lake, above the roaring and ice-crunching waves, it whipped and circled with its chill the ice-shrouded sides of struggling ships. So, with the roar of surf and gale in his ears, he went to sleep with the sole conscious connection in his mind between himself and these people, among whom Benjamin Corvet's summons had brought him, the one name "Miwaka."

CHAPTER VI.

The Deed in Trust.

Memory, if Alan could call it that, had given him a feeling for ships and for the lake. But these recollections were only what those of a three-years' child might have been. Not only did they refuse to connect themselves with anything else, but by the very finality of their isolation, they warned him that they—and perhaps a few more vague memories of similar sort—were all that recollection ever would give him. He caught himself together and turned his thoughts to the approaching visit to Sherrill—and his father's offices. He had accepted Constance Sherrill's invitation to drive him downtown to his destination.

Observing the towering buildings to his right, he was able to identify some of the more prominent structures, familiar from photographs of the city. Constance drove swiftly a few blocks down this boulevard; then, with a sudden, "Here we are!" she shot the car to the curb and stopped. She led Alan into one of the tallest and best-looking buildings.

On several of the doors opening upon the wide marble hall where the elevator left them, Alan saw the names, "Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman."

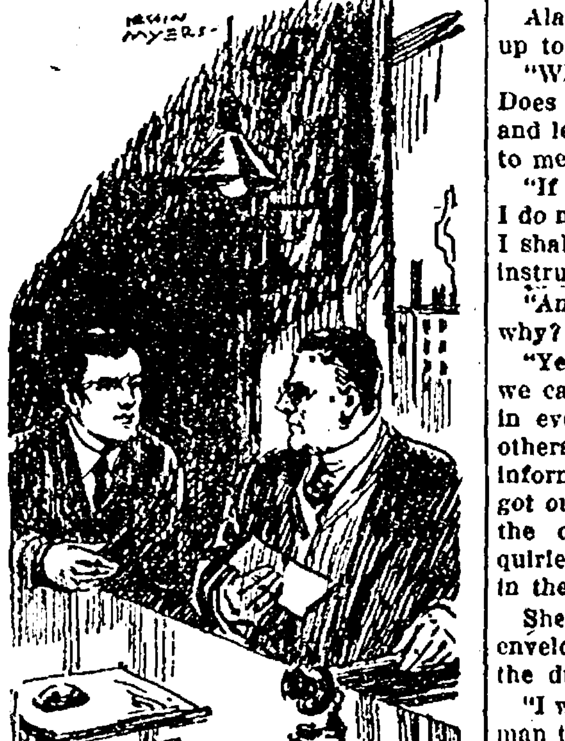
Constance led the way on past to a door farther down the corridor, which bore merely the name, "Lawrence Sherrill"; evidently Sherrill, who had interests aside from the shipping business, had offices connected with but not actually a part of the offices of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. A girl on guard at the door, saying that Mr. Sherrill had been awaiting Mr. Conrad, opened an inner door and led Alan into a large, many-windowed room, where Sherrill was sitting alone before a table-desk. He pulled the "visitor's chair" rather close to his desk and to his own big leather chair before asking Alan to seat himself.

"You wanted to tell me, or ask me, something last night, my daughter has told me," Sherrill said cordially. "I'm sorry I wasn't home when you came back."

"I wanted to ask you, Mr. Sherrill," Alan said, "about those facts in regard to Mr. Corvet which you mentioned to me yesterday but did not explain. You said it would not aid me to know them; but I found certain things in Mr. Corvet's house last night which made me want to know, if I could, everything you could tell me."

Sherrill opened a drawer and took out a large, plain envelope.

"On the day after your father disappeared," he said, "but before I knew he was gone—or before any one except my daughter felt any alarm about him—I received a short note from him. The note was agitated, almost incoherent. It told me he had sent for you—Alan Conrad, of Blue Rapids, Kansas—but spoke of you as though you were some one I ought to have known about, and commended you to my care. The remainder of it was merely an agitated, almost indecipherable farewell to me. When I opened the envelope, a key had fallen out. The note made no reference to the key, but, comparing it with one I had in my pocket, I saw that it appeared to be a key to a safety deposit box in the vaults of a company where we both had boxes.



Sherrill Opened a Drawer and Took Out a Large, Plain Envelope.

"The note, taken in connection with my daughter's alarm about him, made it so plain that something serious had happened to Corvet, that my first thought was merely for him. Corvet was not a man with whom one could readily connect the thought of suicide; but, Alan, that was the idea I had. I hurried at once to his house, but the bell was not answered, and I could not get in. His servant, Wassaquam, has very few friends, and the few times he has been away from home of recent years have been when he visited an acquaintance of his—the head porter in a South Side hotel. I went to the telephone in the house next door and called the hotel and found Wassaquam there. I told him over the telephone only that something was wrong, and hurried to my own home to get the key, which I had, to the Corvet house; but when I came back and let myself into the house, I found it empty and with no sign of anything having happened.

"The next morning, Alan, I went to the safe deposit vaults as soon as they were open. I presented the numbered key and was told that it belonged to a box rented by Corvet, and that Corvet had arranged about three days before for me to have access to the box if I presented the key. I had only to sign my name in their book and open the box. In it, Alan, I found the pictures of you which I showed you yesterday and the very strange communications that I am going to show you now."

Sherrill opened the long envelope, from which several thin, folded papers fell. He picked up the largest of these, which consisted of several sheets fastened together with a clip, and handed it to Alan without comment. Alan, as he looked at it and turned the pages, saw that it contained two columns of typewriting carried from page to page after the manner of an account.

The column to the left was an inventory of property and profits and income by months and years, and the one to the right was a list of losses and expenditures. Beginning at an indefinite day or month in the year 1895, there was set down in a lump sum what was indicated as the total of Benjamin Corvet's holdings at that time. To this, in sometimes undated items, the increase had been added. In the opposite column, beginning apparently from the same date in 1895, were the missing man's expenditures.

Alan having ascertained that the papers contained only this account, looked up questioningly to Sherrill; but Sherrill, without speaking, merely handed him the second of the papers. Alan unfolded it and saw that it was a letter written in the same hand which had written the summons he had received in Blue Rapids and had made the entries in the little memorandum book of the remittances that had been sent to John Welton.

It began simply:

"Lawrence—

"This will come to you in the event that I am not able to carry out the plan upon which I am now, at last, determined. You will find with this a list of my possessions. Deeds for all real estate executed and complete except for recording of the transfer at the county office; bonds, certificates, and other documents representing my ownership of properties, together with signed forms for their legal transfer to you, are in this box. These properties, in their entirety, I give to you in trust to hold for the young man now known as Alan Conrad of Blue Rapids, Kan., to deliver any part or all over to him or to continue to hold it all in trust for him as you shall consider to be to his greatest advantage.

"This for the reasons which I shall have told to you or him—I cannot know which one of you now, nor do I know how I shall tell it. But when you learn, Lawrence, think as well of me as you can and help him to be charitable to me.

"With the greatest affection,

"BENJAMIN CORVET."

Alan, as he finished reading, looked up to Sherrill, bewildered and dazed.

"What does it mean, Mr. Sherrill?—Does it mean that he has gone away and left everything he had—everything to me?"

"If Mr. Corvet does not return, and I do not receive any other instructions, I shall take over his estate, as he has instructed, for your advantage."

"And, Mr. Sherrill, he didn't tell you why? This is all you know?"

"Yes; you have everything now. All we can do, Alan, is to search for him in every way we can. There will be others searching for him too now; for information of his disappearance has got out. There have been reporters at the office this morning making inquiries, and his disappearance will be in the afternoon papers."

Sherrill put the papers back in their envelope, and the envelope back into the drawer, which he relocked.

"I went over all this with Mr. Spearman this morning," he said. "He is as much at a loss to explain it as I am."

The High School Annuals were delivered last week, and the Senior Class has reason to be proud of their efforts in this year's book. The Herald-Press gave them a very nice job in the printing.

In the Service Bulletin for March of the State Highway Commission of Iowa, there is an interesting table of figures on the number of automobiles in the state, and the increase that has taken place in the past 18 years. In 1904 there were 931 cars in Iowa, from which there was collected a total in fees of $959. In 1921 there were 881,535 automobiles, with $1,719,127.00 collected as fees. From less than a thousand to nearly half a million in a period of 18 years certainly seems to indicate that Iowa has prospered somewhat in that time. How many of the 481,535 cars are owned in and around Belmond?

Chas. Dalrymple, who has been visiting here the past few weeks, at the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Ole Lein, who has been ill, has been spending a few days at Albert Lea, Minnesota, the past week, visiting his brother, Earl, whom he reports as getting along nicely.

The Misses Frances and Elsie Bervick, Ella and Amy Hall and Henry Bervick, of Roland, were visitors at the F. A. Hereim home on Sunday.

Garner according to the Signal, has an interesting proposition offered it in a woolen mill. A gentleman from Des Moines, who owned such a mill, in Montana, will change his location, and is interested in Garner as a site. The old flour mill at that place, he claims, would be an ideal place for a woolen mill. No bonus is asked, but the Garner citizens are asked to take $1,500 in stock in the mill, which it is claimed will employ about 30 people. The Signal says Garner is quite interested in the proposition.

Belmond upset Clarion Track Dope in the Wright County Track Meet at Clarion last Saturday afternoon. Clarion won the meet, Belmond second, Eagle Grove third, Goldfield fourth. Belmond won the Mite Relay by Clarion in a 12 inch margin. Tyrrell sprung the surprise of the Meet in the Broad jump by leaping 19 ft. 11 in. followed by E. Parsons with a leap of 19 ft. 6½ inches.

Considering that this is Belmond's year in track and that the Clarion papers announced the Track Meet last week as a probable dual between Clarion and their old rival, Eagle Grove, the Belmond boys feel pretty good. An athletic field near the School house would do much to improve the work of both Track and Baseball teams.

Dows failed to appear as scheduled last Friday for the return baseball game. As they were informed by phone that the diamond was in good condition and weather was good we fail to understand why their advertised stars did not appear. Their Junior-Senior banquet was held that evening but the game was called for 3:15.

Friday the High School will hold an Inter-Society Field Meet in which both boys and girls will have a chance to show their skill. The girls are scheduled for a 3 inning baseball game.

The Meet will begin at 10 o'clock and will be completed after a picnic dinner. The Winning division will be presented with a Loving Cup.

The High School Alumni Base ball game will be played on the local diamond at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon B. H. S. has the best team this year for years past and may fool the local Alumni.

An admission of 25 cents will be charged to pay expenses. Any unused Athletic ticket will be good at this game.

Don't miss the last game of the year. Be a Booster and back your team.

Coach Greutzmacher entertained the baseball team at a feed last Saturday evening followed by a Theatre party. All present enjoyed the evening which will be one of the memories of the year. Wm. Tyrrell was elected Captain of the 1922-23 baseball team.

NOTED POLAND CHINA BREEDER KILLED

When Peter Mouw was accidently killed on his farm at Orange City, Iowa, May 15th, the Poland China breed lost one of its pioneer and foremost constructive breeders. His death was the result of being trampled by a team of horses which he was leading to water. He was the pioneer breeder of the big type Poland China and did more to popularize it than any other man.

He was a native of Holland, being born there in 1852, and came to the United States in 1866. In 1868 he went to Iowa and with his father built the first house on the site of Orange City. It was not long thereafter until he acquired an 80-acre tract adjoining the village and it was there that he made his home, and where Poland China devotees from all over the United States went to attend his sales. As his hog business expanded he bought more land and at the time of his death Mr. Mour owned over 1400 acres of land, and his estate is valued at $140,000 which was all made by his "Big Black" hogs.

In 1886 Mr. Mouw laid the foundation for a herd of pure bred Herefords. This herd he maintained for many years, breeding the cattle for extreme size, as he did his hogs. Later, however, he gave more attention to his herd of Poland China hogs.

He began breeding Poland Chinas in 1889, buying three animals:—Orange King, Illinois Maid and Illinois Maid 2nd for foundation stock. He was a capable judge of swine and carefully selected animals which showed extreme size and growthiness, qualities which later made his herd celebrated.

An incident is related of his exhibiting hogs at the Illinois State Fair about 15 years ago when the judge was awarding all premiums to the medium or "hot blood" types and was paying no attention to Peter Mouw's hogs. Mr. Mouw said to the judge, "I guess you do not like my hogs," but, pulling a big roll of money out of his pocket, he said "but the farmers do."

An important purchase for the herd in 1890 was the boar, Jumbo 3rd, which Mr. Mouw later credited with doing more than any other sire to establish the great size in his herd. The names of the boars that succeeded Jumbo 3rd are now found in almost every Poland China pedigree. Included were such sires as Grand Chief, Grand Chief 3rd, Longfellow and Young Jones.

In 1901, the boar, Chief Price, bred and sold in dam by Mr. Mouw, was bought back to had the [illegible] This boar transmitted his extreme size and excellent finish and influenced the Mouw herd and big types in general to such an extent that he is commonly refered to as the "Father of the Big Types."

During the years from 1900 to 1920, Mr. Mouw used many other good boars, including Surprise Wonder 4th, Long Wonder, Chief Price 2nd, Longfellow, 119997 and Gerstdale Jones.

From the very start, Mr. Mouw clung to the idea that the practical type of hog was that which would attain large size and good finish at an early age. For many years he was almost alone in his preference for extreme size. Breeders of Polands then favored the "hot bloods" or smooth, fine-boned type. For early twenty years the Mouw hogs were ridiculed by breeders and received little consideration in the show ring. Often the only buyers at Mr. Mouw's sales were his farmer neighbors. A time or two the herd was nearly wiped out by cholera attacks.

In spite of all discouragement and opposition. Mr. Mouw clung to his ideal, and he lived to see his type revolutionize the breed, thus achieving one of the greatest triumphs ever attained by a breeder of animals. Peter Mouw's great contribution to the breed is reconized wherever Poland Chinas are bred. Breeders of Poland Chinas will forever be indebted to the man who bred Chief Price and the history-making sons and daughters of Jumbo 3rd and Longfellow.

MRS. ANDREW BOHNING DIES

Funeral services were held Wednesday at the house, and at the church east of town, for Mrs. Bohning, who died at her home in Belmond, Sunday afternoon. Deceased was 75 years of age, and death was caused by Brights disease. An obituary will be given next week.

WHAT ABOUT THAT BALL TEAM

The base ball team in Belmond, which had such a favorable start, seems to have slipped on a banana peel, or something, for it has died very suddenly in interest. If there is any possible chance of having a home team here this year, it would seem that every effort should be made to put it thru. The town needs a little something to keep it breathing. What can you suggest?

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP FARM BUREAU PICNIC

A picnic of the Pleasant Township Farm Bureau will be held June 5th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jake Henn, in the evening. All are invited, whether members of the Bureau or not The usual program will be given. Ladies are requested to please bring home made candy.

RAMSAY HAS PLAN FOR REDUCTION OF AUTO LICENSE

A thirty-three and a third per cent reduction in the cost of licensing motor vehicles in the state of Iowa in the year 1928 is advocated by Walter C. Ramsay Republican, who is running for re-election to the secretary of state berth.

Automobile owners, who in the past three years have paid double the amount of former times for licenses to operate their machines, paid over seven milion dollars into the state treasury this year.

Of that amount, ninety-four per cent is for the building and maintenance of highways in the state at the direction of the various counties from whence it is derived, at the approval of the state highway commission.

Secretary of State Ramsay is now working on several plans whereby fees will be reduced a third. That amount of reduction would virtually meanthat fees would be reduced to what they were in former years.

Mr. Ramsay declared in a recent statement that he would go before the legislature this winter with his plan for a reduction fees.

That the present way of levying license fees is unjust to some extent and is burdensome to the owners of lower priced vehicles has been evidenced for sometime from letters received by Secretary Ramsay from motorists from virtually every part of the state.

ADVERTISING THE POLITICIAN.

Every newspaper expects to find its mail full of candidate solicitations these days, but there was recently sprung on the newspapers of Iowa a joke that will live several years.

Some lady in the east sent a lengthy letter in the interest of a certain candidate for the United States Senate from Iowa, ordering the publication of the letter and stating that she would remit promptly on receipt of bill for publication. Some of the boys "fell" for it, and ran the matter, and others forwarded their bills and held the article pending receipt of cash for the work. This paper was among the latter.

Last week came a letter from the lady expressing her indignation that anyone should think of charging for such work, and declaring that she did not have enough money to meet the bills, so would not meet any of them.

The above from the Humboldt Republican hits us where we live. In the past two months the Independent has dumped enough paper into the waste basket, which the political candidates would "appreciate having published" to fill the Independent three times over. Every week we have received bulletins from several campaign headquarters, " to be released immediately," and they were —in the waste. If the space-grafters had their way, the newspapers would be nothing else but political potporri from one week's end to the next.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex McGregor of Des Moines spent Memorial Day with Belmond relatives and friends.

COMMUNITY CLUB NOTES

The Community club held a splendid meeting last Friday afternoon. Mrs. Gowdy acted as chairman in the absence of Mrs. Rosecrans. A letter from Mrs. Mary Armstrong, president of the state federation of women's club, was read, she complimented the club on joining the federation.

The Tyrrell Park Committee reported having met with the town council and made plans for fixing the park up. The club will cooperate with the council, and many things have been planned. The dead wood and underbrush will be cleared out, two new entrances to the park made, a road clear around it perhaps, three or four brick ovens will be built, also tables, benches and many other things. There is some discussion of having a town picnic or opening day when Captain Tyrrell comes but nothing definite has been decided.

After the meeting, Mrs. Francis Whitley, from Webster City talked on the conservation of our national parks, not many of us perhaps realize that we might loose our beautiful national parks, but such is the case if we are not careful. Mrs. Whitley stated there were promoters and other who can't see anything so beautiful as silver and gold, always trying to have congress pass some sort of bill under which they can get control of the water resources of our national parks. If they ever succeed in doing that they will turn all the national beauty spots of our country into dollars and cents. the water resources will be used for commercial purposes.

Mrs. Whitley said every state should have a state park and there should be a park in every county for those who will never see the national parks. She said there were to her knowledge only two tracks of real prairie left in the state of Iowa and she would like to preserve one of them just as it is so todays children's children can see what Iowa prairie looked like. She said it was a shame the way wild flowers are so fast disappearing.

Mrs. Whitley has been in the work of park conservation a number of years and knows what she is talking about.

After the lecture the club enjoyed refreshments and a short social hour.

BELMOND GIRL MARRIES

Miss Hilda Madsen, of Belmond daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Madsen, was married at Glendale, Arizona, on May 22nd, to John Carlton Padelford, the wedding being performed by the Methodist minister at the parsonage at 8:00 o'clock in the evening.

The young couple will make their home for this summer in California, and have not definitely decided where they will locate for the future. The bride is well known by all Belmond people, being one of this city's most popular and fairest young ladies. She has been teaching at Glendale for the past year or two, where she became acquainted with the man who won her. Mr. Padelford is a homestead rancher, and while Belmond people are unacquainted with him they know he is a real man to have won so fair a bride.

The Independent takes pleasure in joining with this couple's many friends in wishing happiness and prosperity thruout their life together.

RETURNS FROM ARIZONA

Miss Ialeen Flynn arrived home the first of the week from Glendale, Arizona, where she has been teaching the past year in the Glendale schools. Miss Ialeen remained a few days after school was closed, to attend the wedding of Miss Hilda Madsen, her fellow teacher and townswoman.

AUXILIARY SELLS 600 POPPIES

The Womens Auxiliary of the American Legion were unusually successful with their poppy sale for Memorial Day, selling all they made, their total sales amounting to $63.76, the odd cents being from change which the purchasers would not take back.

Morse Lake is drawing a full quota of visitors now that the days are warming up, and many of the local anglers have brought home strings of fish. Matt Barry and Ben Blake hold the record so far as we can learn, with 45 bull heads at one time. The fish are of good sige and make a savory meal that beats any other kind of fish, in our estimation. With some more cottages at the Lake, improved bathing facilities, a few public boats, or boats to rent, and the lake will begin to loom up. The cottages at Lake Cornelia make a small town of their own, and Morse Lake has Cornelia beaten seven ways in every respect nearly. A little community effort will do wonders; can it be developed?

Remains Caught In Gears Three Hours

While Running Engine Alone On Farm Becomes Caught—Family Away Fishing

HE IS STILL UNCONSCIOUS

Francis Klinefelter, a young man about 23 years of age, residing with his brother one-half mile west of Alexander, lies in the Steele Hospital in Belmond unconscious with doubts of his recovery, as the result of becoming caught in a gasoline engine yesterday.

Young Klinefelder remained at home on the farm, while his brother and some friends came over to Morse Lake to fish. He was running the engine, a big seven horse power stationary engine mounted on a truck, in chopping up feed for the stock. The brother and party, due to the rain, came home early, arriving at the farm about a quarter to three in the afternoon, and found Klinefelder caught in the gears of the engine. His clothing was torn almost completely from his body, his head and face were cut and torn to ribbons, the nose being split wide open. One shoulder was broken, and Dr. Steele states there is a possible fracture of the skull, and probable internal injuries. As this is written the young man had not regained consciousness, and his recovery is doubtful.

Neighbors heard the engine running between 11 and 12 in the forenoon, and then it was still. Lunch on the table in the kitchen had been undisturbed, so that the presumption is the young farmer was caught in the engine come three hours before he was discovered. His parents are both dead, and he with his brother work the farm west of Alexander.

At 8:00 o'clock Thursday morning, Mr. Klinefelter had not yet regained consciousness. His condition is very critical.

AID MAKES NEARLY $100

The Cemetery Aid Society at their food sale held last Saturday were very successful, realizing between $97 and $100 thru the sale of many good things to eat which they offered. The money will be used for beautifying the Silent City.

MEMORIAL DAY OBSERVED

Observation of Memorial Day was carried thru in Belmond in very nice shape, and the program was among the best that has ever been given. All exercises were in the morning, and despite the weather, which turned into rain about 11 o'clock, they were carried thru as planned.

The program, under the direction of the American Legion Post here, began at 9, when the Legion men, in uniform, met at the Legion hall, and at 9:30 headed by the band, marched to the library, where, after remarks by Post Commander Skovlin, Invocation by Rev. Lienbach, and music by the quartette Rev. J. R. O'Connor, of LuVerne, delivered an excellent address. Rev. O'Connor has a powerful, compelling voice, and he thrilled his audience with the patriotism of his remarks. The program at the library was closed by the Star Spangled Banner and the Benediction.

Headed by the Colors, the Legion, G. A. R. and other patriotic bodies and citizen's marched to the cemetery, where appropriate exercises were carried thru as announced in the program.

Considerable comment was heard regarding the exercises, the general opinion being that they were excellent and well carried out.

Katherine Blake, who has been ill with tonsil trouble is much improved.

Geo. Elder and family will leave Monday for Idaho, they will go by auto and take a tent and camping outfit.

Mrs. J. M. Comb from Iowa City has been visiting friends and relatives here the past few days.

Henry Brater from Meservey was operated on for gall bladder at the hospital here Wednesday evening. He is getting along as well as can be expected.

A LITTLE LATE

Owing to an extra heavy rush of work, the Independent is half a day late this week. Time was too limited to get things done and get into the mails at the usual hour. It happens in the best regulated families."

Good Business

Everybody we talk to about it agrees with us that it's good business:

To diagnose battery troubles as carefully as a doctor diagnoses his cases.

To advise and make repairs only when we know repairs will pay.

To recommend the purchase of a new battery only when repairs on the old one would not be a good investment.

To speak frankly, plainly, and with a thought of the best interests of the battery owner whether his is a Willard Battery or not.

FARMERS ENDORSE McFARLANE'S RECORD

Arch W. McFarlane, Candidate for Congress in the Primary Monday June 5th, record endorsed by J. W. Coverdale, Secy of Iowa Farm Bureau Federation. The following letter speaks for itself.

IOWA
FARM BUREAU FEDERATION
Ames, Iowa.
April 23, 1919

Hon. Arch W. McFarlane,
Waterloo, Iowa.
Dear Mr. McFarlane:

In the name of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation I wish to express to you our appreciateion of the excellent manner in which you have presided over the House of the Thirty-Eighth General Assembly during the past session, and we wish to commend you for the excellent measures that have been adopted at this session, especially along the lines of educational and agricultural development.

I want to assure you that the Federation has been back of you during the entire session, and will be glad to have such suggestions from you from time to time as may pertain to our development.

Very truly yours,
J. W. COVERDALE.
Secretary.

The fact however causes no surprise that voters realize McFarlane's interest in their problems, and their supporting him for congress.

Advertisment.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

BELMOND'S COUNTY ATTORNEY

J. M. Jensen, Belmond's representative in the race for the County Attorneyship, is deserving of the consideration and support of every Belmond citizen, of every voter in this locality as well as the whole county. He has been in the law business eight years, has made good, and by rights ought to win out in the nomination Monday. If elected, he will give Belmond representation in the county councils, something we have not had for lo, these many moons. J. M. is competent, capable, a hustler, and knows his business; put a cross in his square Monday.

ROBINSON FOR CONGRESS

Next week Monday comes the Big Day for the whole slough of political candidates, and many a brow will be sweating thruout the day waiting the judgment. This year's candidates have been numerous for most offices, and among them that of U. S. Representative. Of the lot, the Independent favors T. J. B. Robinson, of Hampton, and we hope that Monday will return him the nomination.

T. J. B. is a man thoroly capable of holding down the job and fullfilling the duties of the office. He has mixed with the " Big Time," both in financial and political circles; he has a reputation of square dealing and trust fulfilled; his word has proven as good as his bond. And T. J. B. is a neighbor to Wright county folks. Franklin came to our help in times past, and it is only just, when Franklin has as good a man as T. J. B. up, that Wright return the compliment. Here's to him, may he come thru the race unruffled, with the prize he seeks tendered him by his own people.

Wolf hunting is the latest sport enjoyed by the people living south and east of Garner. Arthur Abel has been very successful in capturing these animals, Friday's catch making him a total of four. Art has claimed bounty on two of them, while the other two are on exhibition at his farm. Hounds assisted in the hunt Sunday, but to no avail. The neighbors are assured that there are four less to enjoy the chicken feast they are accustomed to participate in every spring and summer—Signal.

We have to take our hats off to young Donald Turgeson for catching the most peculiar variety at Clear Lake this season. "Turgy" was with Grandpa Kluckhohn at the lake Saturday afternoon and was throwing out a minnow on his line when one of those little lake gulls made a swoop for the bait and got tangled up in the boy's line. It was a few exciting minutes for Donald reeling in a "flying fish." We don't know who was the most scared, "Turgy" or the bird.—Times.

OSCAR ULSTED

Holmes, Iowa,
May 29, 1922.

To The Voters of Wright County:

I have been busy on the farm this spring and have not had time to canvas the county as thoroughly as I would like to have done so I am taking this method of calling the attention of the people to my candidacy for the office of representative from this county. The coming session of the legislature will be one of the most important held in many years. Among the vital questions to be passed upon will be Code revision, Taxation and many others. It seems to me that time and events have justified my position on many of the questions that have come up for consideration during my term of service as your representative if you have approved my record in the past I would appreciate your support at the primaries, Monday, June 5th, 1922.

Respectfully,
OSCAR ULSTED

Vote Yes--Keep the County Fair Going

Wright County News Is Sure Fair Is For Good

In answering an attack on the proposed Fairgrounds levy, the Wright County News denies nothing can be said in favor of a fair and points out a few of the benefits which a county realizes thru the operation of a good live county fair. The News said:

Agriculture and live stock have developed mainly thru the friendly rivalry and interest created by exhibits of better agriculture products and pure bred stock at fairs, exhibitions, and stock shows. To see a better animal, to the progressive, wide awake farmer, is to want better animals on his own farm. To know that a choicer variety of corn, or wheat, or oats, or potatoes, is being grown by a neighbor, increases the desire to grow choicer varieties by the individual farmer.

If this were not so, there would be no interest taken in fairs and stock shows and grain shows. 12,000 saw the Wright county fair last year. Several hundred people travel each year to Des Moines to see the state fair exhibits. A hundred or more travel to Minneapolis to the Minnesota state fair. A dozen or more go to Chicago to see the International Live Stock Show.

Why? To see and learn more about their business, to add to the pleasure of living.

The farmer will progress and become more prosperous as he increases production of grain and feeds it to a better class of live stock. To make four bushels of corn fatten a quality hog or steer where it takes five to fatten a scrub.

If a fair or a grain and stock show does not stimulate interest in better farming and stockraising, then it is a vain effort. But the News does not believe this.

Comparatively, the fair grounds at $14,000 is a safe investment. The farmers of Wright county alone are paying around $10,000 yearly for Farm Bureau work.

Why?

To increase production, stimulate the interest in agriculture and livestock raising, and create a closer fellowship and co-operation.

And the individual farmer each year pays MORE for Farm Bureau work than he will pay ONE YEAR for the fair.

Surely our objector does not vision a "road to progress and uplift" that only leads nowhere from his farm. Progress is advancement; better churches; better roads; better homes—grow better hogs; better oats and more of them. We progress as we add to the enjoyment of living. The fair is a progressive thing—vote yes June 5th.

Farm Bureau Directors Realize Value of Fair

The Wright County Farm Bureau Directors, at a meeting held Saturday, voted to send a letter endorsing the fair to every Farm Bureau member in the county. The Farm Bureau Directors realize that a good live county-wide fair is an institution worthy of support.

Shipping Association Meetings

A series of livestock shipping association meetings were held in Wright county last week under the direction of Martin E. Sar, director of the livestock department of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation. Meetsings were held at Dows, Belmond, Clarion and Eagle Grove with the result that Belmond, Clarion and Dows took out membership in the National Livestock Producers' association.

Mr. Sar's object in holding these meetings throughout the state is to urge the local shipping associations to join hands with the National Livestock Producers' association, a branch of the American Farm Bureau Federation. The National Livestock Producers' association, has established cooperative livestock marketing centers at St. Louis and Chicago and they are now open to business to local livestock shipping associations from all parts of Iowa and other states which use these centers as concentration points.

The livestock shipping association of Wright county which signed for membership in the National Livestock Producers' association did not hesitate to align themselves with this organization because they realized the great advantage to be given by joining forces with other livestock shipping associations throughout the middle-west in organizating a cooperative livestock marketing agency which will, no doubt, be a great factor in effecting better prices for livestock at the livestock marketing centers.

Norway Picnic a Success

In spite of the threatening weather on Thursday, May 25th, the farmers of Norway township turned out in full force to enjoy the annual Norway Township Farm Bureau picnic which was held at the W. E. Buvk home, east of Center school house.

People of Norway township have demonstrated their ability to entertain themselves by using the talent from within their own borders. The selections by the male quartette and the duets by Misses Baldridge and Peterson are evidences of the musical talent which they have found in Norway township. The short address by Mrs. L. E. Evans directed to the graduating class was outstanding in its expression of high ideals and hopefullness to the boys and girls in the eighth grade graduating class, each of which was presented with a rose from the Norway township farm bureau. The success of this picnic was due in a large measure to the efforts of Mrs. E. E. Evans and Harold Holm and the willing workers of their community.

A short talk was given by the county agent in which he told briefly of some of the activities of the farm bureau and urged that all farmers inform themselves on the two issues which are coming up at the June Primaries. This was followed by a short address by Miss Kate Liddle, the county health nurse, in which she gave interesting facts and figures to show what has been done during the past year through her office in carrying on the health nurse activities. The next number on the program was the principal address of the day, by Martin L. Soeth, representing the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation. Mr. Soeth delivered one of the best farm bureau addresses which has ever been given in Wright county and the farmers of Norway feel that they were greatly benefited by unlimited information which Mr. Soeth brought forth. The most interesting part of the day's entertainment was the athletic program which consisted of a pillow fight, shoe race, tug-of-war and several foot races and then the base ball game between the married and single men, resulting in a score of 6 to 1 in favor of the the married men.

U. S. Grain Growers Incorporated

Those who have the impression that the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc. has gone up the spout will probably be interested in what was said in this connection by Martin Soeth, representing the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, in his speech at the Norway township farm bureau picnic on Thursday afternoon, May 25th.

According to Mr. Soeth, the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., has about 120,000,000 bushels of grain already in the organization totals 59,459 and of this number 6,947 are members of the Iowa branch. Mr. Soeth happens to be president of the Farmers' Cooperative Elevator af Wallingford and knows the facts concerning the U. S. Grain Growers. Mr. Soeth also stated that about half million dollars had been contributed by the Chicago Board of Trade and a number of the Chicago papers to be used as a slush fund in a publicity campaign for spreading propaganda against the American Farm Bureau Federation which organization has had a great deal to do with the organization of the U. S. Grain Growers since the original committee of Seventeen was appointed by J. R. Howard, President of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Some time ago this paper mentioned the fact that Clarion was asking the county of Wright to vote a bond with which to buy the Wright county fair grounds there. We predicted that objection would be made because the grounds would be located at Clarion, and the county asked to meet the bill. That is just what happened. Certain writers in other portions of the county have stated plainly that Clarion is asking the county to buy her fair grounds.

This thing should be settled on the basis of whether or not the county wants a fair. If the county feels that it should maintain the fair, then the grounds should be bought. It makes no difference that the grounds are located at Clarion. That is the most central location, and if the fair is to be continued, the present grounds should be used. But if the fair is not wanted, that is a different matter.—Humboldt Republican.

Mrs. C. J. Papousek of Belmond was the subject of an operation for appendicitis at a Mason City hospital last Saturday. At last reports she was getting along nicely and should make a rapid recovery.—Signal.

Lang for Sheriff

To The Voters of Wright County:

The undersigned is sérving the unexpired term of the late Bert Fisher, as sheriff of Wright County, and now seeks the office in his own behalf.

During the past few months the duties of the office have been unusaly heavy and for that reason we have been unable to call on as many of the voters as we would like, we believe the work of the office should have our first attention and our personal desires afterward.

We will appreciate your vote on Monday next June 5th,

Herny Lang.

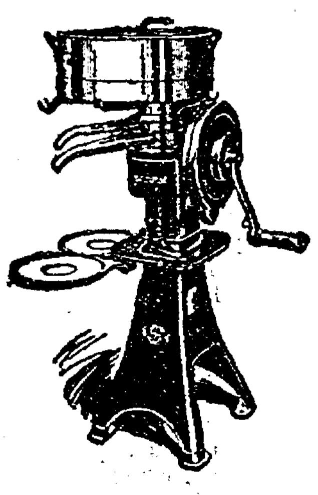
Griesy's Store News

Vol. 1 BELMOND, IOWA, JUNE 1, 1922. NO. 13.

How much does your cream test? Mr. J. S. White has just given us some interesting information regarding a new Primrose Separator owned by Mr. George Norris, Sr.

HERE IT IS—

This Separator was purchased a week ago last Saturday and on the first separation, he delivered to Mr. White 32 lbs. of cream. This tested 38 per cent and contained 12.1 lbs. butter fat which sold at 30 cents a pound, a total of $3.63.



If you are using any other type of separator we would be very glad at any time to place a Primrose on the floor beside of your machine, and let you test machine against machine.

At any time you would permit this demonstration, kindly advise and we will deliver the new separator at your place.

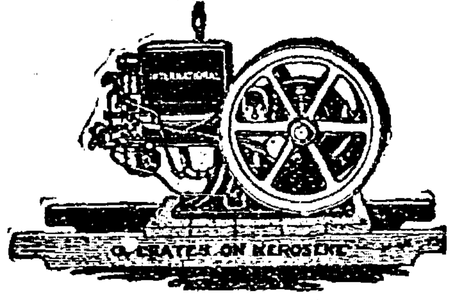
Saving Hours

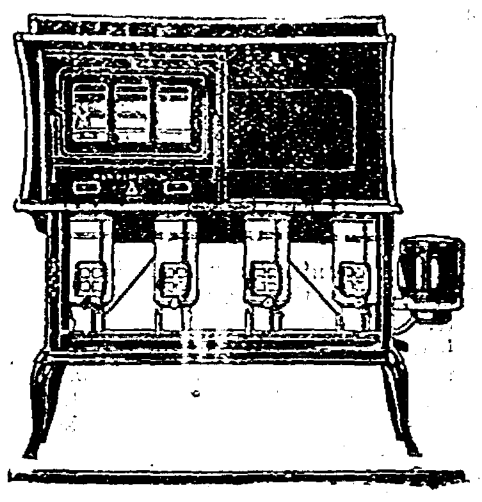
Scientists say the world is losing time in its revolution at the rate of 22 seconds every million years. This does not worry us much, but we wonder how much time is being lost every day by farmers who use old, worn-out farm machinery. Hours saved means dollars earned. This is especially true during haying and harvesting time. Good machines are the best insurance against expensive breakdowns and costly delays. Now is the time to start thinking about your haying and harvesting tools. The McCormick-Deering line is complete. Come in and look 'em over—mowers, binders, stackers, tedders, rakes, etc. Our prices are right.

Merit—that's the sign over our door. You may not see it, but it's there. It's in the goods we sell.

A Little Helper

Have you a little engine at your house? Mother, father, brother—yes, and the hired help—all are benefited when an International Engine is on the job. It lightens the burden of the family. It's a mighty handy thing to have around the farm. In fact, it's so handy that no up-to-date farm is really complete without one. Gives you much more time for important field work and other things.





The next time you are down town step in and see the New Perfection Superfex.

Cold cash is often the means of expressing warm symparty. We need lots of "coldness" by June first.

Hard times are good times to work hard.

If more prettey girls would sit on juries, it might not be so hard to induce some men to act in that capacity.

McFARLANE

For Congress

The people of the Third district have an opportunity to put in congress a man of ripe legislative experience and standing---one who has been elected speaker of the Iowa House of Representatives and who has the distinction of having been re-elected to that exalted position by acclamation. Arch W. McFarlane of Waterloo has been a loyal and active republican all his life, and has given freely of his time and means to the support of the party and its principles. He commands the confidence and esteem of those who know him.

Experience United With Character

United with experience of the most valuable kind, Mr. McFarlane possesses the character of a sturdy, dependable and successful business man,

Vitally concerned in all problems of interest to every person in the Third district and if nominated and elected he can be relied upon to vote for the best interests of his constituency. On this basis he solicits the votes and support of the people of Wright county, assuring them of his hearty sympathy with their problems and realizing that no greater honor could come to any man than to represent them in the halls of congress.

Vote for McFarlane

At the Primary

A vote for Arch W. McFarlane at the primary is a vote for progressive government, economy in expenditures of public money, intelligent administration of the nation's laws and courageous solution of its problems. McFarlane has the ability and experience to make the district one of the best representatives it has ever had. Vote for him on primary day, Monday, June 5.

HERE IS THE MAN!

TOM ROBINSON

of Hampton

Republican Candidate for Congress from the Third District

He is essentially the Farmers' Candidate. He owns and operates several farms on a share basis. He knows the farmers' problems. He favors long term credit faculities, better marketing conditions and a seaway canal as being helpful to the farmers of Iowa. He has the endorsement of the President of the Farm Bureau and the farmers of his home count.

Mr. Robinson is a firm believer in the rights of ex-service men and in adjusted compensation for soldiers. He was active in war work and has been a friend of the soldier boys. Having two sons who served in France, he knows intimately what our boys went through and feels very keenly the obligation we as a nation owe them.

He has always had the interest of labor at heart, has the endorsement of different labor leaders as being a fair employer and fair minded in dealing with labor questions. Was a supporter of the Workmen's Compensation Act while he was in the Iowa Senate and is still interested in the welfare of workers generally.

For four years he served as Senator in the Iowa Legislature with credit to his district and with honor to thestate. He supported women suffrage, workmen compensation, and other measures which are now laws of Iowa and is withal a man of experience, ability and an intimate knowledge of our people and their needs, is four-square and true blue, a man you can depend on and who will be a credit to us as our congressman and to the government of which he would be a part.

And for Those Reasons We Ask You to

MESERVEY SECTION

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1922

TO THE VOTERS OF CERRO GORDO COUNTY

In presenting my candidacy for reelection to the House of Representatives of the General Assembly ot Iowa, one of my opponents has seen fit to attack my record upon three main propositions. In order that my record and position upon these matters may be fully understood by the voters, I take the liberty of presenting this article to you.

First: It is stated that I supported the Public Utilities Bill and my vote thereon has been shown and talked of while as a matter of fact I consistently opposed the bill when before the House in the 39th General Assembly. In support of this statement I offer below this article a lettr written to me by Hon. H. W. Byers, former Attorney General of the State of Iowa, and who was attorney for the City of Des Moines when the bill was under consideration, and who worked with the opposition of the bill in the House for its defeat, and who presented arguments before the Governor asking that it be voted. I want to say that I have always been and am now opposed to any public utility bill that does not properly safeguard, protect and conserve the rights and interests of the public.

Second: My position upon the adjusted compensation bill for the soldiers of the World War. and my loyality to the interests of these men has been questioned. I therefor offer a letter written by Captain Ray Yenter who was Chairman of the Committee of the Military Affairs in the House.

Third: I have been critisised for my position upon Senate File No. 124 by Shafter introduced in the 28th General Assembly which is known as the County Officials' Bill providing for increase of salaries. I take the liberty of presenting with the other letters one written by a member of the House of Representatives of the 38th General Assembly who was active in the opposition of this bill and who of his personal knowledge informs you fully as to where I stood in this matter.

Fourth: I am being opposed on account of my opposition to a bill which was drafted by the Legislative Committee of the Supervisors of the State of Iowa, and presented to the Committee on roads and highways of the House of Representatives. This bill provided for taking from the Township Trustees and turning over to the Supervisors of the various Counties jurisdiction of all township roads, and provided for grading, draining, graveling, or hard surfacing. Fifty per cent of the costs to be charged to the abutting property and fifty per cent to be spread over the township. In my judgement such a bill was highly improper and dangerous, as by it an immense burden of debt could be placed upon each farm in the township and heavy assessments lodged on the township generally without regard to the real desires of the people of the township. I therefore opposed the bill.

In closing I desire to say to the women voters of Cerro Gordo county that in the event of my election I stand now, as I have always stood heretofore, ever ready, willing and anxious to receive your suggestions and recommendations with regard to the things which are of importance to the women of this county. Particularly do I desire to have your advice and suggestions in regard to matters of child labor, the management and conduct of schools and the betterment of civic conditions.

I will greatly appreciate your support.

Respectfully submitted,
J. H. McGHEE.

Des Moines, Iowa, May 23, 1922.

Hon. J. H. McGee,
Mason City, Iowa.
Dear Sir:

In response to your suggestion that some criticism is being made of your record on what was known as the Public Utilities Bill in the last session of the General Assembly, No. 623, by Springer, I have to say that it was well known among the friends of the public who were opposing this measure that you were not in favor of it and that your vote on the Bill was cast in the affirmative in order that you might move to reconsider, a parli mentary action necessarily resorted to to secure another vote on the measure. The rule being that only a member voting with the majority may move to reconsider and in this way secure further time and opportunity to gather the forces for the defeat of the Bill.

I knew myself that you were right on this proposition and if there is any question about your being in good faith against the measure, further proof of your attitude may be found on page 1585 of the bound House Journal, 1921, where on a motion made by Anderson of Winnebago County for a recall of the Bill from the Senate your name is found among the names of the seventy-nine members of the House who voted for the return of the Bill for the express purpose of defeating it.

Yours very truly,
H. W. BYERS.

To all Ex-Service Men and whom it may concern:

The writer hereof was a member of the 39th General Assembly of the State of Iowa and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which Committee J. H. McGhee was a member.

I was well acquainted with his views on legislation affecting ex-service men and appointed him a member of the sub-committee which had the Adjusted Compensation bill in charge, knowing that the best interests of all ex-service men would be furthered by him. His stand on that committee is now a matter of record showing that he possessed a complete understanding of and sympathy with the wishes and needs of the ex-service man. On my own personal knowledge, I always found him to be advancing their cause on all questions effecting them.

It was due in no small degree to his efforts that the contemplated provision of the adjusted compensation bill barring all men with less than sixty days' service was defeated and I have no hesitancy in stating that his attitude on matters pertaining to ex-service men was all that could be desired.

Very respectfully,
RAY YENTER,
Formerly Capt. F. A. U. S. A.
Chairman Military Affairs Committee
39th G. A. Iowa.

As a member of the House of Representatives of the 38th General Assembly of Iowa, I became personally acquainted with J. H. McGhee.

There was a bill pending in the House, Senate File No. 124 by Schafter, known as the County Officers' Bill providing for an increase of salaries. I know of my own personal knowledge that Mr. McGhee opposed the bill from the beginning. The bill was finally passed by the House on April 17th, 1920, by a arge majority. Under the House Parlimentary rules in order to be in a position to file a motion for re-consideration of any bill it is necessary that the member desiring to file such motion shall have voted with the majority, which McGhee did. I was opposed to this bill myself and I worked with Mr. McGhee in its opposition and after its passage Mr. McGhee and I conferred about accomplished its defeat by o motion for reconsideration and concluded that the majority for the bill was so large that it would be impossible to obtain a negative vote.

J. M. SLOSSON.

Ackey, Iowa,
May 29, 1922.

To the voters of the Thirty-seventh Senatorial District of Iowa comprising the counties of Hamilton, Hardin and Wright:

I have already announced my candidacy for the State Senate and early in the campaign, had published over my signature, some of the things for which I stood; which, I have every reason to believe has been quite generally accepted as expressing the views of the majority of the voters of this district, specially the agricultural interests; however, quite recently I have received letters annd questionaires from various organizations of the state.

To answer all of these in detail might defeat the very praiseworthy purpose of those who sincerely ask them. For instance, certain principles are well settled Republican doctrine. With these, I am and always have been in hearty accord. To express myself on them in detail, would be to make an issue or a controversy where none exists, or should exist. I am and always have been a republican.

Many of the questions asked of me, might properly be presented to a republican convention, where platforms are made, or to legislative bodies, if not touched on in the platform. If elected, I shall fairly and impartially, with a view to the greatest good to the greatest number in this our great agricultural state, where we are all either directly or indirectly dependent on the agricultural interests, give due and careful consideration to views of various organizations seeking improvement in our laws. More especially shall I stand upon those priciples which have been or shall have been approved by the republican party and endorsed by the people.

I am not the candidate of any special interests, or corporations, but believe in a "SQUARE DEAL" for all.

On these issues and on those already made public by me, I ask your support and vote for the office of State Senator from this district at the primary Election to be held next Monday, June the fifth.

THE POLLS WILL BE OPEN AT THE USUAL PLACE OF VOTING IN YOUR PRECINCT FROM 9 o'clock a. m. to 8 o'clock p. m.

Very respectfully yours,
W. T. S. RATH,
Candidate for State Senator,
Thirty-seventh Sentatorial District,
Counties of Hamilton, Hardin and Wright.

Here are three good reasons why W. R. Hayes should be elected for a second term in Cerro Cordo County

We the undersigned, District Judges of the 12th Judicial District of Iowa, to which Cerro Cordo County belongs, believing that the Clerk of the District Court should have legal training in order to properly conduct the duties of said office, and whereas, W. R. Hayes has had such training, together with the experience of conducting the office, for one term, by election, now fully understands the business and duties connected therewith.

Now, Therefore, we do hereby endorse and recommed W. R. Hayes for a second term.

WOMEN VOTERS SUPPORT MC-FARLANE.

The women of the Third Congressional District, of the State of Iowa are very much interested in the coming Primary, Monday, June 5th. Owing to the fact of Arch W. McFarlane being a candidate for Congress, as it is well known that McFarlane not only voted for the Sufferage Amendment but by the additional fact of his signing the bill as Speaker of the Iowa House of Representatives, making it posible for over five hundred thousand women in the state of Iowa to vote, and of course it is only natural that the women are taking great interest in McFarlane—doing all they can in the way of promoting his candidacy, and by taking this opportunity of remembering his assistance to them.

EX-SERVICE MEN ENDORSE McFARLANE'S RECORD

Arch W. McFarlane, Candidate for Congress in the coming Primary, which is Monday June the 5th, record endorsed, by exservice men and among numerous letters of endorsement McFarlane prizes the following very highly. James F. Barton, Dept. Adj. and Casper Schenk Chairman of the Legislative Committe of the American Legion.

THE AMERICAN LEGION OF IOWA
March 29th, 1921.

Hon. Arch W. McFarlane,
State House,
Des Moines, Iowa.
My Dear Mr. McFarlane:

The American Legion is very grateful for what you have done for the ex-service men and women of Iowa. While the benefit of the Bonus Bill, under the provisions of our constitution, must necessarily be contingent and deferred, every veteran deeply appreciates the generous support you gave it to secure its submission to the people.

On behalf of over one hundred and ten thousand veterans who are not here to speak for themselves, we wish to thank you

Very sincerely yours,
JAMES F. BARTON.
Dept. Adjutant.

Des Moines, Iowa.
March 29th, 1921

Hon. Arch McFarlane, Speaker,
House of Representatives,
State House,
Des Moines, Iowa.
My dear Mr. Speakers:

May I not, even at this late day, expreſs my earnest gratitude for your generous co-operation in assisting the ex-service men of Iowa to put the Bonus Bill accross.

As Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the American Legion, I can assure you that the boys are very grateful, indeed to you for your effective assistance.

With kindest personal regards, I remain very sincerely.
CASPER SCHENK.
510 Crocker Building.

It is of course no surprise that the ex-service men over the District are greatly interested in McFarlane's candidacy, because of his assistance, and are now doing what they can for him in supporting him for congress.

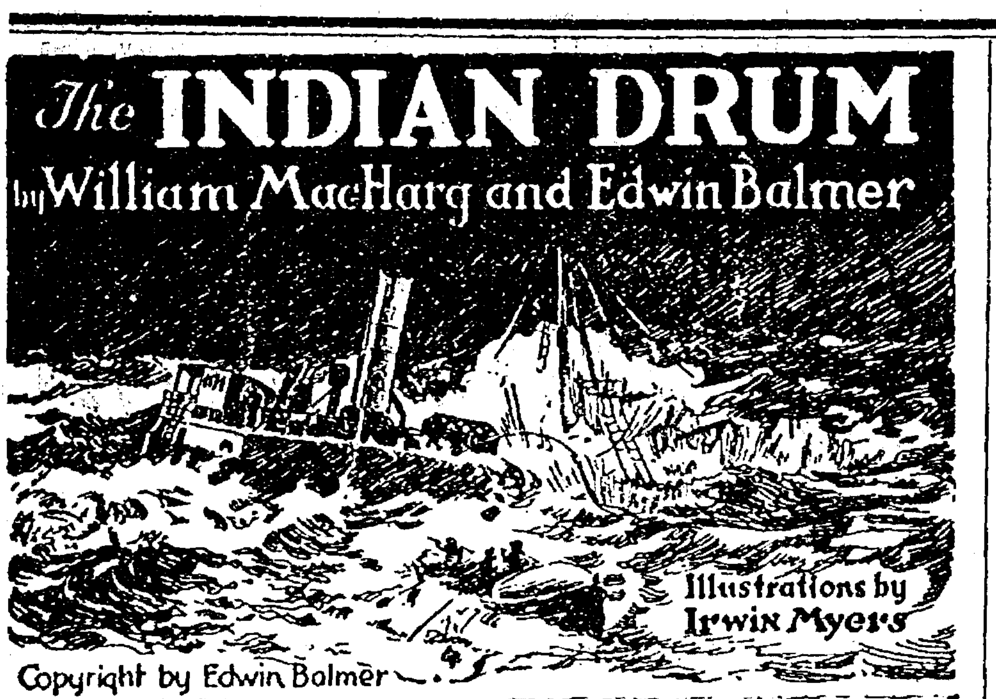
The INDIAN DRUM

by William MacHarg and Edwin Balmer



SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

He was silent for a few moments.

"The transfer of Mr. Corvet's properties to me for you," he said suddenly, "includes, as you have seen, Corvet's interest in the firm of 'Corvet, Sherrill & Spearman.' I went very carefully through the deeds and transfers in the deposit box, and it was plain that, while he had taken great care with the forms of transfer for all the properties, he had taken particular pains with whatever related to his holdings in this company and to his shipping interests. If I make over the properties to you, Alan, I shall begin with those; for it seems to me that your father was particularly anxious that you should take a personal as well as a financial place among the men who control the traffic of the lakes. I have told Spearman that this is my intention. He has not been able to see it my way as yet; but he may change his views, I think, after meeting you."

Sherrill got up. Alan arose a little unsteadily. The list of properties he had read and the letter and Sherrill's statement portended so much that its meaning could not all come to him at once. He followed Sherrill through a short private corridor, flanked with files lettered "Corvet, Sherrill, and Spearman," into the large room he had seen when he came in with Constance. They crossed this, and Sherrill, without knocking, opened the door of the office marked, "Mr. Spearman." Alan, looking on past Sherrill as the door opened, saw that there were some half dozen men in the room, smoking and talking. His gaze went swiftly on past these men to the one who, half seated on the top of the flat desk, had been talking to them; and his pulse closed upon his heart with a shock; he started, choked with astonishment, then swiftly forced himself under control. For this was the man whom he had met and whom he had fought in Benjamin Corvet's house the night before—the big man surprised in his blasphemy of Corvet and of souls "in h—l" who, at sight of an apparition with a bullet hole above its eye, had cried out in his fright, "You got Ben! But you won't get me—d—n you! D—n you!"

Alan's shoulders drew up slightly, and the muscles of his hands tightened, as Sherrill led him to this man. Sherrill put his hand on the man's shoulder; his other hand was still on Alan's arm.

"Henry," he said to the man, "this is Alan Conrad. Alan, I want you to know my partner, Mr. Spearman."

Spearman nodded an acknowledgment, but did not put out his hand; his eyes—steady, bold, watchful eyes—seemed measuring Alan attentively; and in return Alan, with his gaze, was measuring him.

CHAPTER VII.

Mr. Corvet's Partner.

The instant of meeting, when Alan recognized in Sherrill's partner, the man with whom he had fought in Corvet's house, was one of swift readjustment of all his thought—adjustment to a situation of which he could not even have dreamed, and which left him breathless. But for Spearman, obviously, it was not that. Following his noncommittal nod of acknowledgment of Sherrill's introduction and his first steady scrutiny of Alan, the big, handsome man swung himself off from the desk on which he sat and leaned against it, facing them more directly.

"Oh, yes—Conrad," he said. His tone was hearty; in it Alan could recognize only so much of reserve as might be expected from Sherrill's partner who had taken an attitude of opposition. The shipmasters, looking on, could see, no doubt, not even that; except for the excitement which Alan himself could not conceal it must appear to them only an ordinary introduction.

Alan fought sharply down the swift rush of his blood and the tightening of his muscles.

"I can say truly that I'm glad to meet you, Mr. Spearman," he managed.

There was no recognition of anything beyond the mere surface meaning of the words in Spearman's slow smile of acknowledgment, as he turned from Alan to Sherrill.

"I'm afraid you've taken rather a bad time, Lawrence. Can't we get together later—this afternoon? You'll be about here this afternoon?"

"I think I can be here this afternoon," Alan said.

"Let's say two-thirty, then." Spearman turned and noted the hour almost solicitously among the scrawled appointments on his desk pad; straightening, after this act of dismissal, he walked with them to the door, his hand on Sherrill's shoulder.

"Circumstances have put us—Mr. Sherrill and myself—in a very difficult position, Conrad," he remarked. "We want much to be fair to all concerned—"

He did not finish the sentence, but halted at the door. Sherrill went out, and Alan followed him; exasperation—half outrage yet half admiration—at Spearman's bearing, held Alan speechless. If every movement of Spearman's great, handsome body had not recalled to him their struggle of the night before—if, as Spearman's hand rested cordially on Sherrill's shoulder, Alan had not seemed to feel again that big hand at his throat—he would almost have been ready to believe that this was not the man whom he had fought. But he could not doubt that; he had recognized Spearman beyond question. And Spearman had recognized him—he was sure of that; he could not for an instant doubt it; Spearman had known it was Alan whom he had fought in Corvet's house even before Sherrill had brought them together. Was there not further proof of that in Spearman's subsequent manner toward him? For what was all this cordiality except defiance?

Power and possession—both far exceeding Alan's most extravagant dream—were promised him by those papers which Sherrill had shown him. When he had read down the list of those properties, he had had no more feeling that such things could be his than he had had at first that Corvet's house could be his—until he had heard the intruder moving in that house. And now it was the sense that another was going to make him fight for those properties that was bringing to him the realization of his new power. He "had" something on that man—on Spearman. He did not know what that thing was; no stretch of his thought, nothing that he knew about himself or others, could tell him; but, at sight of him, in the dark of Corvet's house, Spearman had cried out in horror, he had screamed at him the name of a sunken ship, and in terror had hurled his electric torch. It was true, Spearman's terror had not been at Alan Conrad; it had been because Spearman had mistaken him for some one else—for a ghost. But, after learning that Alan was not a ghost, Spearman's attitude had not very greatly changed; he had fought, he had been willing to kill rather than to be caught there.

Alan thought an instant; he would make sure he still "had" that something on Spearman and would learn how far it went. He took up the receiver and asked for Spearman.

A voice answered—"Yes."

Alan said, evenly: "I think you and I had better have a talk before we meet with Mr. Sherrill this afternoon. I am here in Mr. Corvet's office now and will be here for half an hour. then I'm going out."

Spearman made no reply, but hung up the receiver. Alan sat waiting, his watch upon the desk before him—tense, expectant, with flushes of hot and cold passing over him. Ten minutes passed; then twenty. The telephone under Corvet's desk buzzed.

"Mr. Spearman says he will give you five minutes now," the switchboard girl said.

Alan breathed deep with relief; Spearman had wanted to refuse to see him—but he had not refused; he had sent for him within the time Alan had appointed and after waiting until just before it expired.

Alan put his watch back into his pocket and, crossing to the other office, found Spearman alone. There was no pretense of courtesy now in Spearman's manner; he sat motionless at his desk, his bold eyes fixed on Alan intently. Alan closed the door behind him and advanced toward the desk.

"I thought we'd better have some explanation," he said, "about our meeting last night."

"Our meeting?" Spearman repeated; his eyes had narrowed watchfully.

"You told Mr. Sherrill that you were in Duluth and that you arrived home in Chicago only this morning. Of course you don't mean to stick to that story with me?"

"What are you talking about?" Spearman demanded.

"Of course, I know exactly where you were a part of last evening; and you know that I know. I only want to know what explanation you have to offer."

Spearman leaned forward. "Talk sense and talk it quick, if you have anything to say to me!"

"I haven't told Mr. Sherrill that I found you at Corvet's house last night; but I don't want you to doubt for a minute that I know you—and about your d—g of Benjamin Corvet and your cry about saving the Miwaka!"

A flash of blood came to Spearman's face; Alan, in his excitement, was sure of it; but there was just that flash, no more. He turned, while Spearman sat chewing his cigar and staring at him, and went out and partly closed the door. Then, suddenly, he reopened it, looked in, reclosed it sharply, and went on his way, shaking a little. For, as he looked back this second time at the dominant, determined, able man seated at his desk, what he had seen in Spearman's face was fear; fear of himself, of Alan Conrad of Blue Rapids—yet it was not fear of that sort which weakens or dismays; it was of that sort which, merely warning of danger close at hand, determines one to use every means within his power to save himself.

Alan, still trembling excitedly, crossed to Corvet's office to await Sherrill. It was not, he felt sure now, Alan Conrad that Spearman was opposing; it was not even the apparent successor to the controlling stock of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. That Alan resembled some one—some one whose ghost had seemed to come to Spearman and might, perhaps, have come to Corvet—was only incidental to what was going on now; for in Alan's presence Spearman found a threat—an active, present threat against himself. Alan could not imagine what the nature of that threat could be. Was it because there was something still concealed in Corvet's house which Spearman feared Alan would find? Or was it connected only with that some one whom Alan resembled?

• • • • • • •

Constance Sherrill's most active thought that day was about Henry Spearman, for she had a luncheon engagement with him at one o'clock.

The tea room of a department store offers to young people opportunities for dining together without furnishing reason for even innocently connecting their names too intimately, if a girl is not seen there with the same man too often. There is something essentially casual and unpremeditated about it—as though the man and the girl, both shopping and both hungry, had just happened to meet and go to lunch together. As Constance recently had drawn closer to Henry Spearman in her thought, and particularly since she had been seriously considering marrying him, she had clung deliberately to this unplanned appearance about their meetings.

She glanced across at him, when she had settled herself, and the first little trivialities of their being together were over.

"I took a visitor down to your office this morning," she said.

"Yes," he answered.

Constance was aware that it was only formally that she had taken Alan Conrad down to confer with her father; since Henry was there, she knew her father would not act without his agreement, and that whatever disposition had been made regarding Alan had been made by him.

• • • • • • •

"Did you like him, Henry? I hoped you would."

He did not answer at once. The waitress brought their order, and he served her; then, as the waitress moved away, he looked across at Constance with a long scrutiny.

Last week was the closing week of the Rowan school year. It was a very full week.

On Tuesday evening the graduating exercises were held. At this time Dr. Mossman, president of Morning Side College delivered one of the best address ever given in Rowan.

On Thursday evening a class of eleven girls and five boys from the eighth grade held their graduating exercises. They gave an excellent program of readings, class songs etc. Also a short play entitled, "Our Aunt from California."

Elinor Martin was valedictorian of the class.

The final event was the school picnic on Friday, the closing day. They had all planned to go to the woods but on account of the rainy weather it was decided to hold the picnic in the school building, all except the high school pupils who drove to Abraham Heights.

Each teacher treated her pupils with ice cream.

The past year's school work has been very successful. Supt. Holliday and his corp of teachers are to be commended for their excellent work.

There will be regular services in each of the churches next Sunday.

What might have proved to be a very serious accident occured last Monday evening, when G. R. Stumph was driving along a high grade south of Hampton. In attempting to pass a car ahead, his car slid, slipping over the embarkment and plunged into a creek 35 feet below. In falling Guy became unconscious and was found in this condition face downward in four feet of water underneath the roadster. He was rescued by the imates of the car ahead, and taken to Hampton to be fixed up. He was pretty badly shaken up and bruised, but his condition is not thought to be serious. He was brought home later.

Ransom Aldrich's team hitched to his wagon ran away Monday afternoon near the mill bridge. In some way Mr. Aldrich fell, between the wagon and the whiffle trees, and he was dragged considerable distance. A box of matches in the wagon, ignite and set fire to the wagon, and almost totally destroyed it.

The neighbors near by came to his rescue and brought him into town. Dr. Maker was called to examiine him and decided to take him to Belmond for X-ray examination. The bone in the arm was found to be fractured and several bad bruises about his face. He is being cared for at the Friend Aldrich home.

Memorial Day services were fairly well attended despite the rain. The services were held in the Congregational church instead of out doors. The Legion members marched to the church where Captain Van Metre gave a splendid address. Then they marched to the cemetery, and decorated the soldiers graves, from there to the river to cast flowers on the water to the memory of the unknown sailors.

Political candidates this year are hitting the advertising game hard in their efforts to secure nomination to their respective offices. If advertising doesn't pay, then our governing officials are certainly a set of spendthrifts and fools. Whatever a man may do with government money, when it comes to his own he is pretty apt to be careful that he gets value received. Evidently they expect to obtain results from their advertising money.

BELMOND'S TWO CANDIDATES WIN BY 2 TO 1 MAJORITY

Do You Know the Iowa Fish Laws?

Deputy Game Warden Visits Lake And Gets One Fisher man For License

ONE HOOK ON ONE LINE!

R. P. Monplasure of Clear Lake, deputy fish and game warden, was in Belmond Tuesday and while here took a little visit to Morse Lake, where he picked up one Roy Johnson of North Dakota, for fishing without a license. The state laws of Iowa require that anyone residing outside the state must take out a license to fish, and Mr. Johnson was required to hand over two dollars.

There are several little kinks in the law which most people do not know. The following taken from the law will interest many:

Sec. 5. Two lines. No person shall use more htan two lines with one hook upon each line, in still fishing or otherwise, except that a trot line as above provided, or in trolling, or in trolling a spoon hook cmposed of three hooks fastened together may be used, and no fish may be taken by trolling from any gasoline oil or electric launch or steamboat propelled by such power, from any of the lakes of the State.

Sec. 1 License for non-resident. It shall be unlawful for any male over 16 years of age, who is a non-resident of this state, to fih in any manner in the water of this state without first securing from the county auditor a fishing license.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP

Many farmers of this vicinity are taking a day's vacation to go fishing.

The Farm Bureau Social held at the J. F. Henn home last Tuesday evening was well attended and an enjoyable evening was spent, although the threatening weather broke up the crowd shortly after the program.

Mrs. Ben Dorenkamp and two daughters are spending the week at the H. B. Dorenkamp home.

Mr. W. Dziewanowski and Miss Kate Finn accompanied Mrs. W. Dziewanowski to Rochester last Tuesday, where the latter will receive medical aid.

Frank McGuire of Clear Lake spent last Sunday at the Frank Barry home.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Lieuwen and little Elizabeth were Sunday visitors at the Geo. Thompson home.

James and Gerald Barry and the Misses Beatrice and Loretta Barry were Mason City callers Saturday.

Mr. Fol Mennenga and children attended the birthday party at the Jno. Greenlander home last Sunday afternoon.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Next Sunday is children's Day and the children would like to see a large turn out at Sunday school at 10:00. At the 11:00 o'clock service the children will give their children's day program and you will be interested to hear them. The offering goes to the board of Sabbath school extension and we hope to have at least $25.00 offering. This will start a sabbath school in some needy place in our country.

The young peoples meeting begins at 7:30 in the evening and the second of the series on Saul of Tarsus will be given at the 8:00 o'clock service.

There was a good attendance at the service last Sabbath evening and all enjoyed the pictures and were helped by the service. Come and bring your friends with you.

The Ladies Aid Society will hold their monthly business meeting on Thursday afternoon and serve a picic supper in the basement of the church. The supper will cost 25c.

MRS. ANDREW BOHNING

Mrs. A. Bohning, nee Berg, was born at Pilsum, Eastfriesland, Germany on the 8th of March, 1846. When only 11 years old she came to this country, and lived for a time in the vicinity of Freeport, Ill.

In 1862 she was united in marriage to Andrew Bohning, Sr. who preceeded her in death 26 years ago. The Bohning family lived for a time in the vicinity of Ackley, Iowa. In 1882 the family moved to our vicinity and had since that time made their home. Since the death of her husband the deceased had made her home in Belmond. For many years she had been a silent and patient sufferer from diabetes. About a year and a half ago, she was suddenly taken into a strong grip by this dreadful disease, and her condition appeared very serious. But she rallied sufficiently to arise from her bed of sickness and assume the duties of her little home. But it seemed that her strength failed gradually until a few weeks ago she became so weak that she could not walk without assitance It then became apparent that she was nearing the end of her days. Kind and loving hands attended to her wants, and without great suffering, she passed to her eternal reward Sunday afternoon, May 28. She thus attained the age of 76 years, 2 months and 20 days. There remain to mourn her departure her 6 children, Simon, Mrs. Sarah Zook, Mrs. Ida Steenblock, George Paul Wilhelm, and John. Besides these children are the grandchildren etc. and two sisters, Mrs. Sophia Bohning of So. Dak., and Mrs. John Lieuwen of Belmond.

In the passing away of Mrs. Bohning the Immanuel Reformed church looses one of its charter members. The Immanuel church was organized in the year 1884, and since that time she proved a faithful member in the work of this church. She sought and found her Saviour in her youth and she confessed in her declining days that she was happy that she had done so. It must be satifaction indeed to be able to look back upon a life of years in the service of the Master. But that moment when the Master of all good workman shall say to his servant; "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of the Lord" must fill the cup of blessedness to overflowing. The earthly remains of the deceased were laid to rest in the Immanul cemetery Wendesday afternoon, May 31. Rev. A. H. Waalkes her pastor had charge of the services.

COUNTY FEDERATION MEETING

The Wright County Federation of Women's Clubs will meet Tuesday June 13th at 10 a. m. at the Baptist church, Eagle Grove.

Each Club is entitled to 2 voting delegates and all members are urged to be present. We want this to be an exceptionally good meeting. Each lady is asked to bring cake and sandwiches for two.

Town Clubs are asked to prepare a brief report of their years work.

A splendid program is being prepared with Mrs. Max Mayer of Iowa City, as the main speaker of the day.

All Club Ladies welcome.

Secretary.

LEAVE FOR IDAHO

Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Elder and children left this week Monday on their trip to Idaho. They are making the trip by auto, and are stopping at Fort Dodge for a short visit at the H. C. Thompson home. They expect to spend the summer in Idaho, where Mrs. Elder has relatives, and may decide to locate permanently in that state.

Alexander Farmer Dies From Injuries

Alexander Youth Never Regains Consciousness After Accident With Engine

FUNERAL HELD SUNDAY

Francis Klinefelter, the young Alexander farmer who was injured Memorial Day, died in the local hospital Friday afternoon from his injuries. He never regained consciousness after the accident. While his brother and family were away fishing Memorial day, Klinefelter, in using a seven horse power gasoline engine for cutting feed, became caught in the gears and was found there three hours later when the brother returned. Everything possible was done to save him, but intenal injuries caused his death. The remains were taken to Alexander Saturday, funeral services being held Sunday at that place. The obituary may be found on page six of this issue. Relatives have the sympathy of the community in this shocking death of this young man.

FYLER GOES TO SHEFFIELD

Prof. and Mrs. E. S. Fyler will go to Sheffield for this next year, where he has been offered and has accepted the Superintendency of the Sheffield schools at a salary of $2,500 per year. Mr. Fyler was elected at three different places, but chose Sheffield as his next year's residence. He and his wife left yesterday for Iowa City where he will spend several weeks attending summer school before going to the new home. Belmond friends of Mr. and Mrs. Fyler regret to lose them, but wish them the very best of success in their new location. Sheffield is getting a good man for the head of their school.

HOW MANY'VE YOU GOT?

Morse Lake drew its usual quoto of fisherman—and fisherwomen—Sunday, the lake being lined with cars and anglers. Many from other towns were there, a number of cars from Franklin and Hancock counties being noticed. But if there were very many fish caught we failed to see them. For two hours we tried desperately to get a bite, but only succeeded in putting in our time. Too windy, or something—mostly the latter probably. Lots of 'em there, because they are being caught.

Mr. and Mrs. Fuller Bailey left yesterday for Minnesota where they will spend a couple of weeks. They made the trip by auto Mr. Bailey having his vacation from the Route.

Harry Webb is home from Morningside college for the summer vacation.

High School Walks On Alumni's Neck

High School Lads Just Everlastingly Wallop Well Known Once-Wuzzers

THE SAD TALE WAS 8 TO 0

The annual battle between them as is and who was, occured last Friday afternoon when the high school base ball team took the Alumni outfit into camp with the whitewashing score of 8 to 0.

Madsen, pitching for the school lads, stood the Alumni once-wasers on their heads, and had them swinging at the atmosphere like a barn door in a gale. Three hits were secured off his delivery, while the boys garnered a total of —. Only once did the Alumni have a chance to score, when in one inning they had three men on base with two out. But Madsen caught Wenzel napping off third, and with a snappy throw made the third out. This was the only time the old men got to third.

It was a beautiful trimming for the former stars but they were up against the strongest high school team in northern Iowa so their chances from the start were slim. The Belmond school team claims the championship of northern Iowa, and it looks like they are entitled to it.

THEY VOTE THE BAND TAX

According to the article appearing in Musical America 100 Iowa towns with population ranging from 200 to 36,000 took advantage of the new band law at the spring elections and voted in favor of a tax levy for the support of a municipal band. Such towns as Clarion, Havelock, Forest City, Leland, Nashua, Brisco, Council Bluffs, Keokuk, Corydon, Iowa Falls, Gowrie, Dyersville, Laurens, Allison, Northwood, voted to support the new measure by a decided majority. Leland, which boasts a population of 180, was the smallest town voting in favor of the tax. Here the vote was 20 to 4 for the support of the band. The largest city favoring the law was Council Bluffs, with a population of between 35,000 and 40,000.

PINKHAM BRINGS BAND

Pinkham, of Goldfield, candidate in the Primary for Representative, came to town Friday with a brass band and gave Belmond folks a concert and talk. There were some two dozen cars in his parade. The Goldfield band is certainly a crack organization and gave some excellent selections.

CLARION, IA., 6-7-22.

Dear Editor:

I have been requested to present to you for publication in the forthcoming isue of your paper the accompanying communication from a friend of the Red Cross. I trust you can give it a place.

Sincerely,

J. F. JAMIESON, Pastor United Prsbyterian Church.

Dear Editor:

Believing that there are 299 other families who feel as we do about the Public Health Nurse question, we have deposited with the treasurer of our chapter of the Wright County Red Cross the sum of ten dollars subject to like action by 299 other families of Wright County, in order that such activities may continue. Surely it is as laudable and necessary to give the children a chance to become normal boys and girls as to save one more pig per litter.

GRANDFATHER AND GRANDMOTHER.

BELMOND GIRL HELD UP

Glendale, Ariz., May 26—A thrilling story of an attempted hold-up, a dash past an armed desperado, shots fired, an a 16-mile chase across the desert was brought to Glendale yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Padelford, who have a homestead 20 miles north of Peoria.

Mr. and Mrs. Padelford who were married last Monday evening, in the home of Rev. Roberts left immediately after the ceremony for their homestead. Reaching New River, the young couple were surprised by an armed man who stepped before their car, brandishing two guns and calling upon the occupants of the car to halt. Without heeding the challenge Mr. Padelford stepped on the gas, a number of shots were fired, and five cars which were hiding in the brush gave chase, the newly weds keeping the lead until the homestead was reached, after which the "desperado" and his companions forced their victims to "set up a feed" of coffee and sandwiches.

Mrs. Padelford was formerly Miss Hilda Madsen, and has taught in the local grammer school for the past two years, coming from Belmond, Iowa. Mr. Padelford hails from Glendale, Calif., coming here immediately after his discharge from the army to develope a homestead. After visiting the Grand Canyon and other points in northern Arizona they will make their home at Glendale, Calif., where Mr. Padelford will enter the real estate and insurance business.

LAKE VIEW PARK HOLDS OPENING SUNDAY

Lake View Park, three miles west of Kanawha, was formally opened Sunday of this week with an immense crowd and a variety of attractions. The Clarion band had been secured to deliver music for the occasion, and gave excellent entertainment thruout the afternoon. A ball game between Eagle Grove and Kanawha was one feature, the latter team winning 8 to 3, Kanawha getting three home runs. A variety of concessions were on the grounds, boating was to be had on the lake, and local people attending report a fine time enjoyed. A large number of Belmond people attended the opening, a large crowd being present from the surrounding territory.

IOWA LEADS IN HOGS

Iowa farmers enumerated 7,864,304 head of swine in 1920, according to the fourteenth U. S. Census report, which is 3,225,122 head more than were enumerated in Illinois, the next state in point of numbers.

Iowa also is first as regards pure bred swine. In 1920, Iowa reported 289,042 head, all breeds included, and Illinois reported 215,965.

The number of pure bred animals of each breed in Iowa, according to figures of the Department of Agriculture are: Berkshire, 950; Chester White, 35,761; Duroc Jersey, 107,133; Hampshire 18,740; Poland China, 113,869; Spotted Poland China, 4,370; Tamworth, 1,074; Yorkshire, 173; and all others, 6,982.

The liberal prizes offered at the State Fair and the cooperation of the breeders individually and collectively through their organization has done more than anything else to push Iowa to the prominent position she holds in the swine world. The State Fair purses have been large because the breed organizations have supplemented the state money.

According to A. R. Corey of Des Moines, State Fair secretary, the following purses will be offered for the respective breeds: Berkshire $400, Chester White $1,050, Hampshire, $1,610. Spotted Poland China $1,600, Yorkshire $400, Tamworth $400, Duroc Jersey $850, and Poland China $850. The two latter breeds although most prevalent in Iowa have relatvely small purses. Each offered to put up fifty per cent of a $1,000 futurity purse, as has been the custom in the past, but the state fair board decided that such classifications draw too many swine to the fair and the offer was rejected. These two breeds however are spending similar sums for Iowa breeders by cooperating with the Mississippi Valley Fair at Davenport.

According to Mr. Corey, these two breeds, Duroc Jersey and Poland China, have guaranteed fifty per cent each, of a $325 purse for a pig club show at the Iowa fair. The purse for each breed will be awarded as follows: $125 on spring boar pigs, the same on spring gilts, and $75 on spring litters. The first two purses will be divided into 15 prizes each, and the litter purse into five prizes.

IMPROVEMENTS AT CEMETERY

The Cemetery Aid Society will meet owner of a new power mower, for mowing gress. Wm. Dempsey, the very capable sexton, is keeping the Silent City in excellent shape, and with the aid of the new mower is able to cover a great deal more ground than before. The mower, run by gasoline engine, needs only to be steered, and makes a large difference in the work.

Win Home Towns Of Their Opponents

Voting Is Not As Heavy As Expected—Light Vote Is Cast In Belmond

FAIR AND NURSE LOSE

Belmond's two candidates, J. M. Jensen for county attorney, and J. D. Baker for Supervisor, came thru battle Moday with colors flying J. M. carried every township in the county but three and Baker winning in all three towships of the First District.

Brookhart carried the county for Senator, Ulstad won heavily over Pinkham, Robinson carried the county for Representative, and the fair and county nurse both lost by heavy majorities.

Voting was light. It had been expected that the feminine vote would swell the total, but this proved to be mistaken. Things were exceedingly quiet. Jensen and Baker surprised with their heavy votes, both men carring the home towns of their opponents.

As the Independent goes to press the vote of Wright county, practically completed in count, was as follows:

OLAF NEWS

We neglected to mention in last weeks items the dinner given by Mrs. Clarence Scott, in honor of her mother's 60th birthday, on May 27. About 20 guests were present. They presented Mrs. Snyder with a lovely umbrella.

Mrs. Herman Johnson entertained the Ladies Aid Society last Wednesday. She served to nearly sixty, the next society meets with Mrs. Ole Hanson.

Margaret Hinkle is helping Mrs. Anton Olson, with housecleaning.

Mr. and Mrs. Orphia Anderson spent Sunday at the W. Morse home in Belmod, helping celebrate Mrs. Morse's birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Scott entertained the 500 club at their home Thursday evening.

Mr. Tresdahl is staying with his daughter, Mrs. Henry Lien.

The men at the elevator have been kept busy, lately, taking in shelled corn as well as many oats.

Golda Hall is staying with her aunt, Mr. S. O. Windecker.

Agnes Rikenshrud visited at the Herman Johnson home last Wednesday.

The choir from the Eagle Grove Luthern church sang at the St. Olaf church last Sunday evening. Rev. Severson spoke. Rev. Severson is a brother of Mrs. Torrence Scott and Mrs. Andrew Scott. Both singing and speaking were enjoyed by all.

S. O. Windecker and wife visited in Iowa Falls Sunday, at the Simon Swarts home.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Baxter attended a class reunion at the Mrs. Mildred Hardcastle Jacobson home, in Dows last Wednesday evening. Mrs. Jacobson served supper to all the guests after which they attended the Class Play given by the Dows High school. This same play, "The Hoodoo" was given in Iowa Falls by the 1917 class which held the reunion. This class had 36 members but not quite half were able to attend the reunion. All who did attend had a very pleasant time and surely appreciated the hospitality extended to them by Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Stadtlander of Meservey visited Sunday at the home of his brother Ernest and family.

Be Sure About Your Battery

No matter what kind of a car you drive or what kind of a battery there is on it you have to keep posted on certain battery facts.

You have to know whether your battery is charged to the proper point—whether it has enough water in it—whether each of the cells works properly.

Our most important job as a Battery Station is to tell you these things. It doesn't make a bit of difference what make your battery is. Here at Battery Headquarters we give every make exactly the same attention.

That Goldfield band certainly gave us some nice music, and brought back to Belmonders a vision of "the glory that was Rome's"

We just heard the other day that some friendly souls had been establishing a club house under the walk in front of the hole where the Sheffield building stood. Wonder how many members belong?

A lot of candidates Tuesday morning were trying to figure how it all happened, and declaring that there is certainly a lot of liars in this country.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

BELMOND'S SUMMER RESORT

We are going to propose something gentlemen of Belmond, which we have no idea will be carried thru, because you won't work together. It can be done; it should be done; with a little cooperation, time, work and coin, it is easy. It would mean much to Belmond people and to the entire community; it would mean much to people for twenty miles around.

We refer to Morse Lake.

In Morse Lake, without disrespect to other neighboring towns, Belmond has the finest little summer resort and outing spot this side of Clear Lake, a lake that in our estimation, has any other neighboring lake beaten seven ways. It's scenic beauty is greater, it's bathing facilities finer than that of any other. And with co-operation and push it can be vastly improved. Clarion, adopting Cornelia Lake, is making a little city out of the place, with cottages boating, bathing, fishing. Kanawha, with the West Twin Lake, has in Lake View Park developed a fine little recreation spot.

Belmond can do the same with Morse Lake, and make it better than the rest. But it needs several things The road from town to the lake needs graveling in some places; can this be arranged, by co-operating with the Belmond township trustees? Why not? The road around the lake should be fixed, elimating that dip on the south side, and cutting to a level on the hill on the west. If possible, a road should be made entirely around the lake. Some trees should be planted alongside this road; they will grow in a few years to make such a drive one of unusual beauty and pleasure. There should be boats to rent, as at Cornelia. A better bathing house, with walk to a diving platform, would help. In fact, there are a score of little things that should be done—with cooperation time and a little money.

Why not do it? Why not utilize the natural gift that is ours? The Independent will donate anything that it can to the "cause," if somebody will start the wheels turning. Certainly, gentlemen, Belmond can do as well as Kanawha or Clarion. But nothng will be done no one has enough enthusiasm, initiative or push to start it. And meanwhile we will continue to let the others reap the harvest. Are there enough real live wires in Belmond to do something?

THIS GAME OF GOLF

Sunday, in our wanderings around the country trying to catch a fish, we paid the thriving little city of Cornelia a visit, and while there watched—again—the ancient and honorable game of golf.

This game of golluf is one funny proposition, and we can hardly make it out. Those who have been biten by the golf bug seem to become rabid on the subject; they contract golfaphobia like a dog does hydrophobia whenever warm weather comes. There is something about it that seems incurable; and yet, to the onlooker, all in the world the player is doing is chasing a little round white pill across the country.

We watched 'em Sunday. (We don't know who they were, so this won't hurt their feelings.) They scoop up a small round handful of sand, make a nice little patty cake out of it, like you and we used to do when we were kids, and place carefully upon the peak of this little cake a small, round white pill. Then they select a certain stick from a sack, said stick having a craak on the end like our old shinny clubs, you remember, which we cut from a willow tree alog the river bank; why they select this one individual club from a dozen is known only by those who have the golf disease; the whole raft of them have crooks on the end. (We mean the clubs are crooked at one end, if you get us.)

Then they square themselves beside this innocent little pill and begin going thru a set of calesthenics. They dig around with each foot until they are securely planted; they raise the club, firmly grasped in each hand and take what the call "practice swings" half a dozen times. One eyebrow, the left we think, is raised, and the other depressed; the top of the right ear is wiggled gently; the left elbow is bent to an angle of exactly 45 degrees (it is very important that they get the exact degree here), the right elbow is kept straight, while at the same time the left knee is slight crooked and the right foot toed in. Then the patient draws a full breath, and raising his club brings it down against the little pill with all his might, sending it out over the course, that is, the field, as far as he can towards a hole in the ground. Then he gathers up his clubs and goes chasing over the hill to hunt for the little pill, and, when he finds it, goes through the same ceremony again. And repeats at every little hole in the ground he finds.

When he gets to the end he's at the beginning again, and starts bragging how he "made it in 73." and begins all over again to see if he can make it in 72. The numbers indicate the number of times he soaked the little pill in getting back to where he commenced.

RADIO

HOW AMATEUR CAN BUILD A RECEIVER

Instructions for Setting Up the Antenna and for Assembling the Tuner.

In order to pick up sufficient energy with the simple radio receiving set it is necessary to connect one terminal to an antenna consisting of one or more wires suspended in the air and insulated from all grounded material and the other terminal to a ground, usually the water supply pipe. The height of an antenna used with a small receiver should not be less than 80 feet. As the received energy varies directly as the height of an antenna, the higher the antenna the louder will be the signals or voice produced. The length of an antenna for short wave reception should not be less than 60 feet nor should it be longer than 200 feet. The minimum wave length to which a simple receiver can be adjusted for electrical resonance will be above that used by amateurs if the receiver be connected to an antenna 200 feet or more in length.

A simple radiophone receiver capable of picking up radiophone stations similar to KDKA at East Pittsburgh, can be assembled by a novice for from $4 to $15, depending upon the builder's ability to use his hands. If the builder will construct most of his apparatus he will appreciate it much more and probably will understand more about its operation than if he buys a set already made. However, for those who have not the ability or the time to spend constructing their own apparatus the following description will not only give the details as to the construction of each component part of a receiver but also what standard ready-made parts can be purchased and used in its stead.

The material can be purchased at any electrical supply store.

In erecting a simple antenna for use with the receiver shown in the diagram, the antenna proper and the lead-in are of stranded hard-drawn copper wire, strand No. 22, costing about 1 cent per foot. The two insulators are of molded material and can be purchased for about 25 cents each. The antenna shown is supported between a house and a pole. It may be found more convenient to support it between a tree and a house, two houses or even between two chimneys on the same house. In bringing down the lead-in care should be taken that it is kept as far away from grounded material as possible and when bringing through the wall or under the window into the house it should be brought through some sort of an insulating tube, such as rubber or bakelite.

In making the ground connection the same kind of wire can be used as was purchased for the antenna. You can clean a section of the waterpipe thoroughly and solder the ground wire to it.

MAKING THE TUNER

To make a tuner for this receiver, the following raw material will be required:

Piece of cardboard tubing three inches outside diameter and five inches long, costing about 10 cents.

100 feet No. 22 double cotton-covered magnet wire costing 25 cents.

Standard slider (see sketch) for ¼ by ¼ brass rod, 40 cents.

1 six-inch length of ¼ by ¼ brass rod (square) 20 cents.

2 binding posts (see sketch) 20 cents.

2 circular blocks of wood whose diameter is just equal to the inside diameter of the piece of cardboard tubing and between 3-8 and 1-2 inch thick.

Some shellac or varnish is also required.

Starting one-half inch from one end of the cardboard tube wind on the No. 22 D. C. C. wire within one-half inch of the other end of the tube. Fasten one end of the winding to the tube but allow some surplus wire on the other end for making a connection. After the winding is in place give it a coat of shellac or varnish to hold the turns in place. Assemble the circular-cut pieces of wood in the geometrical center of the square blocks and then shellac or varnish them for the appearance's sake.

When thoroughly dry slip the two end blocks into the wound tube and by means of a few finishing brads driven through the cardboard tube, fasten the end blocks to the wound tube. The slider is to be mounted on top of the coil and should be capable of making contact with any turn of the wire on the tube. In order to remove the insulation from the wire just under the rod where the slider moves back and forth, wrap a piece of sandpaper around a thin piece of wood and using another piece of wood as a guide, sandpaper the insulation from the winding. Drill a hole one-eighth inch in diameter through the slider rod about one-fourth inch in from each end so that the rod can be fastened by screws to the end blocks. After the slider rod is fastened in place see that the contact finger on the bottom of the slider can at all times make good contact with the winding. Mount a binding post on either end of the coil, attaching one by means of a wire to the slider rod and the other to the end of the wire wound on the tube and the tuner is complete. A tuner can be purchased already assembled for about $3.50 to $4.00.

LINKING MOVIE AND RADIO

British Scientists Have Some Success in Wireless Transmission of Motion Pictures.

British scientists are reported to have met with more or less success in developing a method of transferring motion pictures by radio. Some months ago a photograph was transferred by wireless from the Copenhagen newspaper, the Politiken, to England, and later from England to a ship in mid Atlantic, so that the possibility of linking the movies with the new art is not remote.

If perfected the new development of the already versatile art will make it possible for one to see on his own receiving instrument things that are happening at a great distance. For instance, a ship is sinking at sea. The transmitting station of the vessel, instead of sending a message of the disaster, sends a picture that anyone with a receiving set will be able to see just as the present broadcasting programs are heard.

That all sounds remote now, but the telephone was considered even more so, and the wireless, even after Marconi's immortal message had bridged the Atlantic, was generally believed to be akin to the idea of perpetual motion.

TIPS TO THE RADIOIST

A crystal detector cannot be satisfactorily amplified.

Insulate ends of aerial wires with several small insulators.

Wherever possible run aerial wires at right angles to electric light wires.

The lead wire should be the size of the combined number of wires in the aerial.

Gas piping makes a poor ground, but the cold water pipe ground is excellent.

A crystal detector is never as efficient as a vacuum tube detector no matter what instruments are connected to it.

Within three to five miles from a broadcasting station indoor one wire aerials about 40 feet long stretched from room to room, are generally satisfactory with crystal detectors.

Specialist Checks Corn Plots

M. A. Hauser, farm crops and soils specialist, from Ames, spent Friday and Saturday checking up on the corn yield experiement plots. Mr. Hauser states that the corn yield plots in Wright county are above average when compared with plots in other parts of the state.

The county agent and Mr. Hauser spent a few hours at each experiment field checking up on the stand of corn and the general condition of same. The general condition of the corn was found to be very thrifty although the stand was not perfect in all cases. It will be remembered that the four corn yield experiment plots are located on the farms of A. E. Martin, Belmond; H. A. Flett, Vernon; Harry Inners, Liberty, and Al Watkins, Dayton.

"Hubam" Growing Nicely

The twenty acre patch which was sown on the Al Watkins' farm three miles east af Eagle Grove, is coming nicely and looks as though it were going to develop into a good thick stand.

M. A. Hauser the farm crop specialist, visited this particular patch of hubam last Friday and said that the crop looked very fine, in fact, much better than other patches he had seen over the state. Mr. Hauser says that the hubam usually makes its most rapid growth after the small grain has been harvested and the clover plants have a better chance to grow. Farmers in the vicinity of Eagle Grove are watching this crop with great interest and are wondering whether or not this newly discovered plant will live up to expections as a green manure crop.

Hauser Addresses Lincoln Farmers

Farmers of Lincoln township farm bureau gathered at the Lincoln church Friday evening for their regular monthly meeting.

Frank Mechem, chairman of the township farm bureau, presided at the meeting and presented two important issues for discussion: first, the county wide picnic and second, the purchase of the "movie" machine.

Farmers of Lincoln township have authorized their township chairman to vote at the next regular meeting for the purchase of the moving picture machine. The sentiment as expressed by these people was the "movie" will be a valueable addition to the farm bureau equipment especially from the standpoint of the information which it will bring to the people. They also endorsed the county wide picnic proposition and voted $25.00 toward the financial support of this affair.

This part of the program was followed by several numbers by the Meekers' orchestra and a few numbers by local talent. The next number on the program was a splendid address by Mr. Hauser, who held his listeners spellbound for an hour or more. He complimented the Lincoln people very highly on the social organization they have developed and spoke especially of the splendid orchestra which they have in their own community.

Lake Holds Live Meeting

A lively farm bureau meeting was held at Lake township Center school Wednesday evening, May 31st.

The meeting was opened by a short talk from Clarence McBride, chairman. This was followed by a dialogue and short talks from various members of the farm bureau. This was followed by a discussion of the county wide picnic, purchase of moving picture machine and the county fair. Lake township farmers decided in favor of the purchase of the "movie" and have instructed their chairman to cast his vote for the purchase of the machine. They also voted $25.00 toward the county wide picnic which is to be held July 4th.

The last umber on the program was a short address by Miss Kate Liddle, county health nurse, who gave interesting facts and figures showing what has been done during the past year in the health nurse activities. She also gave a short survey of the plans for the future work of the county nurse during the coming year.

Congressman Dickinson Will Address Farm Bureau Picnic

Arrangements have been made with Congressman L. J. Dickinson of Algona to address the farm bureau picnic July 4th. Mr. Dickinson has been secured to give the partriotic address of the day. It will be remembered that Representative Dickinson acted as chairman of the farm bloc in the house of representatives in our national congress and we are all proud of this man because he is an Iowa product. He will, no doubt, have lots of valuable information concerning the agricultural bloc and other blocs at Washington

Mrs. Ellsworth Richardson of Pella will also appear on the program and will deliver the farm bureau addree of the day. Mrs Richardson, who is employed by the Farm Bureau Federation as a speaker, is considered one of the best farm bureau speakers in the state and those who are interested in hearing a real honest to goodness farm bureau address should not miss the opportunity of hearing this lady, who comes to us a farmer's wife, who actually keeps up a farm home and who goes out on speaking dates between times.

President Harry Sumners has appointed an executive committee of five to plan and organize the picnic and this committee will be authorized to appoint such sub-committees as they deem necessary to carry out the plans of the county wide affair. The members on the executive committee; J. E. Lamb, chairman, Mrs. E. E. Evans, Mrs. Harry Woodley. M. L. Clark and Will Tillman. Other committees will be announced later.

At a meeting of the board of directors Saturday, May 27th, representatives from the various towns of the county met with the directors of the farm bureau and it was decided that the farm bureau should raise about $400.00 and the towns of the county have agreed to contribute enough to match this amount. With this amount raised the committee should be able to put on a regular get-together picnic on July 4th.

Remember that new ice box you promised the wife last year? The next time down town come in, and see our line. If we haven't what you want in stock we will order for you.

And speaking of heat, a New Perfection oil stove is mighty convenient.

Don't forget—Minnesota Paints and oils with Red Seal White lead for that job of painting.

In order to make good, you must be good for something.

Pitchfork Farmers

Why is it that some farmers own automobiles and not manure spreaders? Why does a farmer buy one or more automobiles and yet hesitate to invest an insignificant sum in a spreader especially when he needs one? Strange, isn't it? And yet the spreader will help make the extra money necessary to pay for the gas used in the auto. Did you ever stop to think of this? If you did; and really considered it from every point, you are not a pitchfork farmer. You use a manure spreader—probably a good International.

Smile often, laugh a little, and give a word of cheer to someone each day.

Repairs Service

We are ready to serve you in obtaining repair parts for any machines you may wish to put into use. We urge you to place your orders early While we keep the most common parts on hand yet there is a chance that you may be disappointed or inconvenienced if you neglect ordering. Help us make our service just a little better than ever before. Order your repairs now.

Our "Red Truck" has two speeds—one standing still long enough to load and unload, the other getting there quick. Do you appreciate our "Red Truck?" Those who have been served by it do. What do you need? If it is in the McCormick-Deering Line, we have it.

Mowers of Merit

Haying time will be here before you know it. Why not drag out that old mower the first spare moment you have and go over it thoroughly? Order your repairs NOW and be ready for the busy season just ahead. If your mower is so old that you can't rely on it, you would do well to come in and see the new McCormick and Deering mowers. Many improvements have been made and McCormick and Deering mowers are better than ever—they are mowers of real merit.

Full Length Twine

That's Deering twine for you. It's guaranteed to be full 500 feet long for each pound in weight. Besides it's uniformly strong throughout its entire length. Suppose you buy twine—any old brand—and it runs short of the advertised length per pound. Then what? Twines are not full length even though they sell for a cent a pound less than Deering twine, often cost more because you have to buy more pounds to bind your crops. There are many twines on the market that do not average the advertised or standard lengths. Play safe—buy Deering twine. We sell it.

DICKINSON TO SPEAK AT FARM BUREAU PICNIC JULY 4TH

At a meeting of the Farm Bureau directors and representatives from the various towns of the county, plans were discussed for holding a county wide Farm Bureau picnic July 4th, at Pike's timber which is located about 5½ miles northeast of Clarion. The plan as finally decided upon is to have each township Farm Bureau contribute $25.00 towards the general picnic fund and the towns of the county have agreed to match whatever amount is raised by the county Farm Bureau. According to the proposed plan a fund of $800.00 will be raised for financing the county wide Fourth of July celebration picnic.

Two speakers of unusual ability have been secured for this picnic. Hon. L. J. Dickinson of Algona, Iowa, has been secured to give the patriotic address of the day. It will be remembered that Rep. Dickinson has been and is at present Chairman of the Farm Bloc in the House of Representatives at Washington and we are all proud of the fact that Mr. Dickinson is an Iowa product. He has made a thorough study of Agricultural conditions and has shown himself to be a champion of the farmers' interests and he will, no doubt, have a lot of information concerning the Agricultural Bloc and other blocs in Washington D. C.

Mrs. Ellsworth Richardson of Pella, Iowa, will also appear on the program and will deliver the Farm Bureau address of the day. Mrs. Richardson who is employed by the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation as a speaker is considered one of the best Farm Bureau speakers in the state and those who are interested in hearing a real honest to goodness Farm Bureau address should not miss the opportunity of hearing this lady speaker who comes to us as a farmer's wife who actually keeps up a farm home and who goes out on speaking dates between times.

The appointment of the various committees and complete plans for the Farm Bureau picnic have boen left in the hands of Harry Sumners, President of the county Farm Bureau and announcement of the different committees and detailed plans will be announced later through the various county papers. It is hoped that each individual who is appointed on a committee or who is asked to assist in any way will do his bit by cooperating to the utmost in making this a successful county Farm Bureau picnic. Remember that it is a Farm Bureau picnic and that means it is our picnic, your picnic and it is up to each and everyone of us to see that it goes over big. An executive committee was appointed to have full charge of all plans and arrangements for the picnic. J. E. Lamb, Chr., Mrs. E. E. Evans, M. L. Cark, Mrs. Harry Woodley, and Will Tillman.

CLOTHING SPECIALIST COMING

Miss Martha Foster, clothing specialist from the Ext. Dept. at Ames will spend three days in Wright County July 5, 6, and 7 in giving lectures and demonstrations on "Use and Alteration of Commercial Patterns."

The ladies of the Farm Bureau are urged to be thinking about this work and making their plans so as to get the most out of the work while Miss Foster is in the county.

RAT KILLING CONTEST CLOSED

The county wide rat killing contest which closed Saturday May 20th, showed a total of 1,096 rats which had been killed during the campaign, and it is a noticeable fact that all killings were made by boys living in Wall Lake township. There is no doubt but that the extermination of this number of rats in Wright County will be a great benefit not only in eliminating the danger of spread of disease but also the actual loss of grain and other farm products which are distroyed annually by rats.

The boys entering the rat killing crusade and the number of killings in each case are as follows:

Joseph Keller, 520; Lee Keller, 312; Stanley Howieson, 256; Harold Hillpipre, 8.

FARM BUREAU MAY PURCHASE "MOVIE" LATER

At a meeting of the Board of Directors Saturday, May 27th, the matter of purchasing a motion picture machine to be used by the county agent in conducting the regular township Farm Bureau meetings, was discussed. It was the sentiment of the Board that the "Movie" machine would be a valuable addition to the Farm Bureau equipment, and that it would be a great help to the county agent in getting members to the meetings. However it was voted that the proposition should be presented to each township Farm Bureau and the sentiment of the membership as a whole should be determined before the Board authorize the purchase of the machine.

The aim in buying the moving picture machine is not to supplant the Farm Bureau work at the regular meetings with moving pictures but simply to mix a little fun and entertainment with the business part of each meeting. The plan is to conduct the Farm Bureau meetings in the usual manner by having short programs prepared by local talent then close the meeting by showing two or three reels of moving pictures.

Mr. Chas. Roach of the Visual Instruction Department, at Ames was present at this meeting and gave a very interesting talk on the use and advantages of the motion picture machine. Mr. Roach told the Board of the wonderful results which are being obtained by other county agents who have used the "movie" for the past two years.

In the case Board decides to purchase the machine the moving pictures will be shown at the regular township Farm Bureau meetings and every farm bureau member is urged to attend the township meetings so as to have a voice in deciding upon the purchase of the machine.

Lake township has endorsed the purchase of the Movie and the township chairman has been instructed to vote in favor of the proposition at the next regular Board meeting. They have decided that the moving picture machine will be worth what it costs in the information which it will bring to the members.

1922 WOOL CONSIGNMENT

Wool growers who are planning to consign their 1922 crop of wool to the National Wool Warehouse & Storage Co., at Chicago, should get in touch with M. L. Clark, Pres., or Ralph P. Smith, Sec., of the Wright County Wool Growers' Association, who will have charge of the shipment of wool from the county this year.

Wool sacks can be bought at 35c each, and wool twine at 32c per pound at the County Agent's office. Those who are in need of wool sacks or twine should place their orders as soon as possible and not wait until the day you need the sacks and twine.

POULTRY CULLING WORK

It will be remembered that announcement was made in the Farm Bureau Exchange some time ago that the culling would be done this year on a commercial basis. The time is drawing near when the poultry culling can be done to the best advantage.

Arrangements have been made with a poultry expert who will do culling work on a commercial basis and will charge at the rate of two cents per bird for those having 100 or more birds in the flock or three cents per bird for those having less than 100 birds in the flock and five cents per bird for non-members of the Farm Bureau.

It has been planned to hold two poultry culling demonstrations in each township and these two demonstrations will be held at the farms of the first two who ask for this service. Individual flocks will be culled in each township after the two demonstration meetings are held. Those who are interested in having the culling work done on this basis should send their application to the county agent at once.

TO HAVE DEMONSTRATION AGENT

Arrangements have been made with Miss Neale S. Knowles, State Leader of Home Demonstration agents to have a Home Demonstration Agent for one month's work during next fall.

Miss Knowles writes that she has arranged for Miss Bertha Huber to spend the month of November in Wright County to carry on the Home Demonstration Agent work. Miss Huber has had considerable experience in Home Demonstration agent work and will come to Wright County as an authority in this line of work. It is hoped that the Farm Bureau ladies of the county will give their most hearty cooperation at all times in order to make the month's work by Miss Huber most beneficial to the home-makers of the county.

YOU BE THE JUDGE

A farmer recently remarked that he had heard other farmers kick on the money spent at Ames for agricultural education, but that he had never heard one object to the money spent at the State University. Apparently they were willing to be taxed to educate doctors, lawyers and business men, but not to educate farmers.

Possibly these fellows do not know that the State University receives a larger appropriation than the college at Ames, nor do they realize that scarcely one-fourth of the funds expended on the state schools goes to instruction along agricultural lines.

Most of the kicking and complaining that we hear is based on lack of information or misunderstanding. Things never look so bad when we know the facts.—Cherokee County Farm Bureau Exchange.

CLUB WORK PROGRESSING

Judging from the interest which has been taken in the past few weeks by boys and girls in the club work it would seem that club work in Wright County is becoming more popular than ever before.

Over fifty boys and girls of the county have enrolled in the county wide poultry club and great interest is shown in this particular project. Most of the boys and girls who entered this club have already hatched their chicks and are now giving their closest attention to the proper feeding, care and management of their birds. According to instructions which are sent to them through the extension department, a county wide poultry show will be held some time during the latter part of August and the winning birds at this show will be taken to the State Fair at Des Moines and shown in competition with exhibits from other counties in the state.

Miss Josephine Arnquist, State leader of girls' club work, spent two days in the county last month in organizing work with the garment clubs of the county. Miss Arnquist assisted the club leaders in making plans for this year's work and made valuable suggestions regarding the subject matter which should be given by the club leaders during the year. She spoke very highly of work which is being done by the garment clubs and complimented the leaders for their efforts in carrying forth this splendid work.

It should be remembered that the success of the garment clubs in the county rests with the leaders and due credit should be given the unselfish leaders who have so willingly volunteered their time and energy in this great work of directing the club girls in their sewing work. Following is a list of the Garment Clubs of Wright County and the leaders of the various clubs.

Lincoln Learning Lassies, Miss Edith Waddell.

Pans are being made for a county wide Club Rally to be held some time this summer probably during the latter part of June or the middle of July. This Rally will be a club picnic for all club members both of the poultry clubs and Garment clubs and will probably be held at some central point in the county so as to accomodate all members.

LEST WE FORGET

What has the Bureau Done for Me?

Repealed the Daylight Saving Law.

Defeated the Nolan Bill.

Defeated the Sales Tax bill.

Organized the Farm Bloc and furnished it with a constructive program consisting of what agriculture needs.

Supported successfully Packer Control bill.

Helped revive War Finance corporation.

Supported Emergency Tariff to head off importation of cheap agricultural products.

Reduced railroad valuation for purposes of computing guaranteed earnings, $1,700,000 making an annual saving of $30 for every farmer.

Assisted in putting a representative of agriculture on the Federal Reserve board.

Supported a bill to tax grain futures.

Plugged at all times for long time credit for agriculture with cheaper money.

Reduced freight rates on agricultural products which saved forty million dollars a year.

Appointed and financed committees to work out plans for marketing grain, livestock and wool.

Appeared before Interstate Commerce Commission with cost accounting records to show that agriculture cannot stand excessive freight rates.

Investigated Merchant Marine to get United States to export more food products.

Investigated Muscle Shoals prospect in regard to fertilizer.

Supported rural credits bill.

Wrote and supported a bill legalizing cooperative marketing.

Supported the establishing of Farm Credit Department in Federal Farm Loan system. Long time farm loans fostered by the government.

Working for legislation to regulate grain exchanges.

Assisted in congressional committee with hearings from farmers themselves on the subject, "What is the matter with farming?"

Fighting "Pittsburg Plus" freight rate on steel.

Represented agriculture at Disarmament conference.

Established research department to study world's supply and demands of agricultural products.

Working to increase Federal Farm loan limit from $10,000 to $25,000.

Plead for agriculture in legislative halls, asking for some farm minded men to be appointed to high places in councils of the nation.

Established a Washington office where the farmers assisted by experts, draft bills for agriculture, and watch all legislation.

Gained confidence of the public and in legislative halls showing that the farmer has ability through his organization to handle his business in a manner that best serves the farmer and to the best interests of the nation.

Fostering farm finance corporation to finance marketing organizations on a large scale with cheap money.

Backed the plan of marketing livestock which has put the commission firm in St. Louis in top place.

Backed inland waterways for cheap transportation.

Is making a nation-wide survey of cooperative marketing organizations to determine the most successful methods used.

Appointed a tax committee to make a study and work out a plan for a proper adjustment of taxes among all industries concerned.

The State Federation by appealing to the Federal Reserve to not call loans, saved thousands of farmers and hundreds of farmer's banks from bankruptcy.

Wrote twenty-two bills and secured the passage of eighteen in the last session of Iowa legislature.

These bills legalized cooperative organizations in Iowa, helped cooperative elevators, finance organizations, bonded warehouses, gave tracks to elevator sites, in fact paved the way for forming commodity marketing organizations.

The Farm Bureau has done much towards getting the sympathy of the public. It is now up to the farmer working through his organization to secure better conditions for himself.

LIVESTOCK INSURANCE

It should be thoroughly understood that neither the county agent nor any officer of the Wright County Farm Bureau is recommending any livestock insurance company nor are they advising that any man should insure his livestock. Indirect information has come to the county agent to the effect that certain representatives of livestock insurance companies have given the impression that the county agent or the Farm Bureau is endorsing livestock insurance and certain companies. Livestock insurance companies selling this stock in any community should stand on their own merits and farmers should judge for themseives as to the financial standing of the company and the quality of insurance.

U. S. GRAIN GROWERS INCORPORATED

Those who have the impression that the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., has gone up the spout will probably be interested in what was said in this connection by Martin Soeth, representing the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, in his speech at the Norway towship Farm Bureau picnic on Thursday afternoon, May 25th.

According to Mr. Soeth, the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., has about 120,000,000 bushels of grain already contracted for and the membership in the organization totals 59,459 and of this number 6,947 are members of the Iowa Branch. Mr. Soeth happens to be president of the Farmers' Cooperative Elevator at Wallingford and knows the facts concerning the U. S. Grain Growers. Mr. Soeth also stated that about half a million dollars had been contributed by the Chicago Board of Trade and a number of the Chicago packers to be used as a slush fund in a publicity campaign for spreading propaganda against the American Farm Bureau Federation which organization has had a great deal to do with the organization of the U. S. Grain Growers since the original committee of Seventeen was appointed by J. R. Howard, Pres., of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

COMMON CAUSES OF DEATHS AMONG LITTLE CHICKS

MOLDY FEED. Very often heavy losses among little chicks are due to feeding chicks feed or mash which is moldy. If there is the least doubt as to the freshness and wholesomeness of the feed on hand, do not use it. It is easier to detect the moldy odor if a sample of the feed is heated.

MOLDY OR EXCESSIVELY DUSTY LITTER. It is abvisable to use extreme care in choice of litter. Unwholesome litter has even been known to kill laying hens. Finely cut alfalfa or clover is probably the most practical litter for chicks.

LACK OF SANITATION. Frenquent cleaning insures greater health. Do not wait until disease gets in the flock before using sanitation.

UNSANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS. Very frequently chick losses can be traced directly to infected drinking vessels. It is advisable to wash and disinfect drinking vessels very frequently, once a day when milk is being used.

CONTAMINATED GROUND. Chicks will do better if raised on ground which have not run on for a year or more. This is particularly true if there has been disease in the flock recently.

LICE AND MITES. It is easier to control lice and mites when all the chicks are hatched and reared in incubators and brooders, and kept in a brooder house away from the old fowls. Where this cannot be done extra precaution must be taken to keep them under control.

Hens can be freed of lice by the use of sodium fluoride. This powder can be applied to the hens before setting them and once during the time they are setting.

Head lice on little chicks can be controlled by applying a little lard, vaseline or mixture of one-third blue ointment and two-thirds vaseline to the top of the chicks' heads. Apply very sparingly as there is danger of the chicks becoming chilled, particul-

HOW TO LET CHICKS DIE

By feeding them before they are forty-eight hours old.

By feeding them too much at a time for the first ten days.

By keeping them too hot or too cold.

By keeping them too many in a bunch.

By keeping them in foul smelling quarters.

By letting them breathe stale air.

By neglecting to keep their litter clean.

By keeping them in foul smelling yards.

By neglecting to give them pure, clean water.

By letting cats or rats eat them.

By not washing the slime out of their drinking dishes.

By keeping their coops in a wet place.

By feeding them.

By letting them eat their food from dirty dishes.

By letting their dirty dishes set in the sun.

By feeding them sloppy or sour feed.

By keeping them on filthy runs.

By not letting pure air into their brooders and coops.

By not giving them lots of green foods daily.

By neglecting to shelter them from the sun and rain.

arly if they run in the wet grass afterwards.

Where different aged chicks are brooded together the young ones usually weakened; some will die and the remainer will be stunted.

OVERHEATING OR CHILLING INCUBATORS OR BROODERS often causes heavy losses. When this happens there is little that can be done to save the chicks. They usually continue to die in large numbers for several days afterwards.

BACILLARY WHITE DIARRHOEA. This disease is transmitted by the hens through the eggs. The disease is usually spread by the infected chicks during the first two or three days of their lives. By the time the chicks begin to die, the danger is done, that is, most of the chicks which are going to die already have been infected. To overcome this disease buy eggs from healthy flocks.

FRANCIS KLINEFELTER DIES FROM INJURIES AFTER THREE DAYS

Edward Francis Klinefelter, son of Mary and Edward Klinefelter was born in Franklin County, Iowa, May 4th 1899 ad died on June 2nd 1922 at the age of 23 years and 29 days. On May 30th at the home place one half mile west of Alexander occured the accident which caused the death of Francis. His brother, Clay and family had gone away to spend the day. No one will ever know just how the accident occurred. But it seems that he had started a large seven horse power engine, probably to do some grinding. Neighbors heard the engine running and saw Francis walking about the yard some time after, this was near eleven o'clock. In the afternoon it began to rain a cold drizzle and the folks came home earlier than they had planned; after coming into the yard they found their brother's body hanging limp beside the engine where his clothing had caught and was nearly torn from his body. How long he had hung in this condition no one will ever know; with serious cuts and bruises about the head, arm broken in several places and unconscious. Help was summoned and he was taken to the hospital at Belmond where he lingered for three days never gaining consciousness.

Thus ends the life of one of Alexander's young men. Francis was a boy whom all loved. He has always lived here, a quiet, good-natured home boy always finding something to do about the place, never getting into trouble with anyone; and always doing good to all, wherever an opportunity presented itself.

His mother passed away on March 5th 1919 and his father on October 29th 1920.

He leaves to mourn his death two brothers, Glenn of Garner, and Clay of Alexander, and three sisters, Miss Lelia Klinefelter and Mrs. Luchia Meyers of Dows, and Mrs. Inez Whitten of Thornton. One sister, Ruth, died in infancy.

Besides his relatives, a host of friends mourn over the death of the departed and extend their hearty sympathy to them.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, conducted by Rev. A. D. Mohr, pastor of the Conregational church and burial was made in the Alexander cemetery.

GRAETTINGER GOLD MACHINE OPERATES SATISFACTORY

Humboldt Republican: Mr. Harke, of near Graettinger, who has the machine purchased to separate the gold from the gravel on his farm, ran it ten hours one day recently and cleaned up $10 in gold from eight tons of gravel. At that his machine was not properly adjusted, and considerable of the gold got away. He considers the showing very satisfactory, and believes that his gravel will prove valueable.

The amalgamating machine ordered by the other firm at Graettinger, is not yet in operation.

J. J. Kelly also owns land in the gold belt. He sent samples of his gravel to Denver, and it run more than $2 to the ton.

It seems to be an assured fact that the gravel deposit at Graettinger will make the people who own it a lot of money.

MERCHANT-PAPER FIGHT

Humboldt Republican: In a town in southeast Iowa the newspapers and the merchants are having a financial fight. The merchants decided that advertising did not pay, and agreed among themselves not to advertise. The newspaper had space to sell, and being unable to sell it at home, sold it to nearby towns that wanted to get bargains before the people of the town where the newspapers were published. Trade slumped off to the extent that the merchants that had been boycotting the newspapers found that they had to advertise, so they hired an outside printer to locate in their town and publish a purely advertising sheet so that they could get their bargains before the people. The idea of the merchants was to punish the newspapers for selling the space they had refused to buy. In the mean time the newspapers are going right along taking the outside advertising, and the people of their town and community are sticking for the newspapers, and are against the merchants. The imported printer is barely making expenses, and when the merchants stop their patronage, which they will in a few months, he will also go to the wall. All the papers have to do is to keep their heads and do business. If the local merchants want the space, sell it to them; if they don't, sell it to others who do. A paper conducted on such principles will have the sympathy of the people, and will succeed.

DON'T LET YOUR WIFE SEE THIS

An employee of the Marathon, Paper Mills company, tired of hearing men boast of their importance, dug up the fact that, according to scientifc investigation, the ingredients of a man, plus water, are as follows:

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

"You've seen a good deal of him, yesterday and today, your father tells me," he observed.

"Yes."

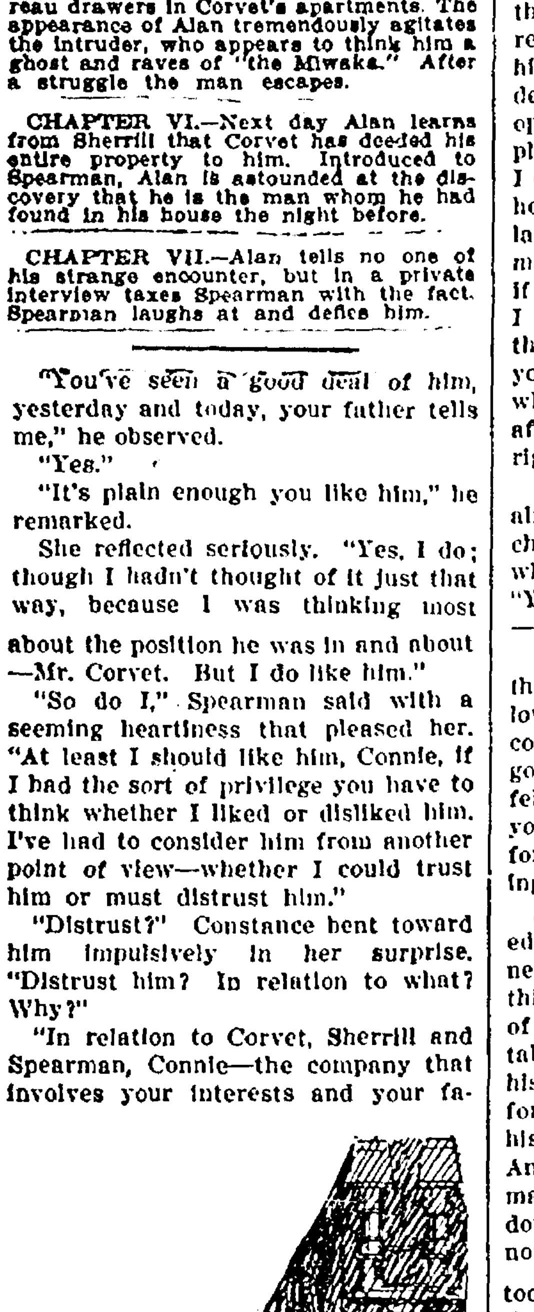
"It's plain enough you like him," he remarked.

She reflected seriously. "Yes, I do; though I hadn't thought of it just that way, because I was thinking most about the position he was in and about—Mr. Corvet. But I do like him."

"So do I," Spearman said with a seeming heartiness that pleased her. "At least I should like him, Connie, if I had the sort of privilege you have to think whether I liked or disliked him. I've had to consider him from another point of view—whether I could trust him or must distrust him."

"Distrust?" Constance bent toward him impulsively in her surprise. "Distrust him? In relation to what? Why?"

"In relation to Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman, Connie—the company that involves your interests and your father's and mine and the interests of many other people—small stockholders who have no influence in its management, and whose interests I have to look after for them."



"You've Seen a Good Deal of Him, Yesterday and Today, Your Father Tells Me," He Observed.

"I don't understand, Henry."

"I've had to think of Conrad this morning in the same way as I've had to think of Ben Corvet of recent years—as a threat against the interests of those people."

Her color rose, and her pulse quickened. Henry never had talked to her, except in the merest commonplaces, about his relations with Uncle Benny; it was a matter in which, she had recognized, they had been opposed; and since the quarrels between the old friend whom she had loved from childhood and he, who wished to become now more than a mere friend to her, had grown more violent, she had purposely avoided mentioning Uncle Benny to Henry, and he, quite as consciously, had avoided mentioning Mr. Corvet to her.

"I've known for a good many years," Spearman went on, reluctantly, "that Ben Corvet's brain was seriously affected. He recognized that himself even earlier, and admitted it to himself when he took me off my ship to take charge of the company. I might have gone with other people then, or it wouldn't have been very long before I could have started in as a ship owner myself; but, in view of his condition, Ben made me promises that offered me most. Afterward his malady progressed so that he couldn't know himself to be untrustworthy; his judgment was impaired, and he planned and would have tried to carry out many things that would have been disastrous for the company. I had to fight him—for the company's sake and for my own sake and that of the others, whose interests were at stake. Your father came to see that what I was doing was for the company's good and has learned to trust me. But you—you couldn't see that quite so directly, of course, and you thought I didn't—like Ben, and there was some lack in me which made me fail to appreciate him."

"No; not that," Constance denied quickly. "Not that, Henry."

"What was it then, Connie? You thought me ungrateful to him? I realize that I owed a great debt to him; but the only way I could pay that debt was to do exactly what I did—oppose him and seem to push into his place and be an ingrate; for, because I did that, Ben's been a respected and honored man in this town all these last years, which he couldn't have remained if I'd let him have his way, or if I told others why I had to do what I did. I didn't care what others thought about me; but I did care what you thought; yet if you couldn't see what I was up against because of your affection for him, why—that was all right too."

"No, it wasn't all right," she denied almost fiercely, the flush flooding her cheeks; a throbbing was in her throat which, for an instant, stopped her. "You should have told me, Henry; or—I should have been able to see."

"I couldn't tell you—dear," he said the last word very distinctly, but so low that she could scarcely hear. "I couldn't tell you now—if Ben hadn't gone away as he has and this other fellow come. I couldn't tell you when you wanted to keep caring so much for your Uncle Benny, and he was trying to hurt me with you."

She bent toward him, her lips parted; but now she did not speak. She never had really known Henry until this moment, she felt; she had thought of him always as strong, almost brutal, fighting down fiercely, mercilessly, his opponents and welcoming contest for the joy of overwhelming others by his own decisive strength and power. And she had been almost ready to marry that man for his strength and dominance from those qualities; and now she knew that he was merciful too—indeed, more than merciful. In the very contest where she had thought of him as most selfish and regardless of another, she had most completely misapprehended.

"I ought to have seen!" she rebuked herself to him. "Surely, I should have seen that was it!"

"How could you see?" he defended her. "He never showed to you the side he showed to me and—in these last years, anyway—never to me the side he showed to you. But after what has happened this week, can you understand now; and you can see why I have to distrust the young fellow who's come to claim Ben Covert's place."

"Claim!" Constance repeated. "Why, Henry, I did not know he claimed anything; he didn't even know when he came here—"

"He seems, like Ben Corvet," Henry said slowly, "to have the characteristic of showing one side to you, another to me, Connie. With you, of course, he claimed nothing; but at the office—Your father showed him this morning the instruments of transfer that Ben, seems to have left conveying to him all Ben had—his other properties and his interest in Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. I very naturally objected to the execution of those transfers, without considerable examination, in view of Corvet's mental condition and of the fact that they put the controlling stock of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman in the hands of a youth no one ever had heard of—and one who, by his own story, never had seen a ship until yesterday. And when I didn't dismiss my business with a dozen men this morning to take him into the company, he claimed occasion to see me alone to threaten me."

"Threaten you, Henry? How? With what?"

"I couldn't quite make out myself, but that was his tone; he demanded an 'explanation,' of exactly what, he didn't make clear. He has been given by Ben, apparently, the technical control of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. His idea, if I oppose him, evidently is to turn me out and take the management himself."

Constance leaned back, confused. "He—Alan Conrad?" she questioned. "He can't have done that, Henry! Oh, he can't have meant that!"

"Maybe he didn't; I said I couldn't make out what he did mean," Spearman said. "Things have come upon him with rather a rush, of course; and you couldn't expect a country boy to get so many things straight. He's acting, I suppose, only in the way one might expect a boy to act who had been brought up in poverty on a Kansas prairie and was suddenly handed the possible possession of a good many millions of dollars. It's better to believe that he's only lost his head. I haven't had opportunity to tell your father these things yet; but I wanted you to understand why Conrad will hardly consider me a friend."

"I'll understand you now, Henry," she promised.

CHAPTER VIII.

Violence.

At half-past three, Alan left the office. Sherrill had told him an hour earlier that Spearman had telephoned be would not be able to get back for a conference that afternoon; and Alan was certain now that in Spearman's absence Sherrill would do nothing further with respect to his affairs.

Was there no one whom Alan could tell of his encounter with Spearman in Corvet's house, with probability of receiving belief? Alan had not been thinking directly of Constance Sherrill, as he walked swiftly north to the Drive; but she was, in a way, present in all his thoughts. As he approached the Sherrill house, he saw standing at the curb an open roadster with a liveried chauffeur; he had seen that roadster, he recognized with a little start, in front of the office building that morning when Constance had taken him downtown. He turned into the walk and rang the bell.

The servant who opened the door knew him and seemed to accept his right of entry to the house, for he drew back for Alan to enter. Alan went into the hall and waited for the servant to follow. "Is Miss Sherrill in?" he asked.

"I'll see, sir." The man disappeared. Alan, waiting, did not hear Constance's voice in reply to the announcement of the servant, but Spearman's vigorous tones. The servant returned. "Miss Sherrill will see you in a minute, sir."

Through the wide doorway to the drawing room, Alan could see the smaller, portiered entrance to the room beyond—Sherrill's study. The curtains parted, and Constance and Spearman came into this inner doorway; they stood an instant there in talk. As Constance started away, Spearman suddenly drew her back to him and kissed her. Alan's shoulders spontaneously jerked back and his hands clenched; he did not look away and, as she approached, she became aware that he had seen.

She came to him, very quiet and very flushed; then she was quite pale as she asked him, "You wanted me?"

He was white as she, and could not speak at once. "You told me last night, Miss Sherrill," he said, "that the last thing that Mr. Corvet did—the last that you know of—was to warn you against one of your friends. Who was that?"

She flushed uneasily. "You mustn't attach any importance to that; I didn't mean you to. There was no reason for what Mr. Corvet said, except in Mr. Corvet's own mind. He had a quite unreasonable animosity—"

"Against Mr. Spearman, you mean."

She did not answer.

"His animosity was against Mr. Spearman, Miss Sherrill, wasn't it? That is the only animosity of Mr. Corvet's that anyone has told me about."

"Yes."

"It was against Mr. Spearman that he warned you, then?"

"Yes."

"Thank you." He turned and, not waiting for the man, let himself out. He should have known it when he had seen that Spearman, after announcing himself as unable to get back to the office, was with Constance.

He went swiftly around the block to his own house and let himself in at the front door with his key. The house was warm; a shaded lamp on the table in the larger library was lighted, a fire was burning in the open grate, and the rooms had been swept and dusted. The Indian came into the hall to take his coat and hat.

"Dinner is at seven," Wassaquam announced. "You want some change about that?"

"No; seven is all right."

Alan went upstairs to the room next to Corvet's which he had appropriated for his own use the night before, and found it now prepared for his occupancy. When he came down again to the first floor, Wassaquam was nowhere about, but he heard sounds in the service rooms on the basement floor. He went part way down the service stairs and saw the Indian in the kitchen, preparing dinner. Wassaquam had not heard his approach, and Alan stood an instant watching the Indian's tall, thin figure and the quick movements of his disproportionately small, well-shaped hands, almost like a woman's; then he scuffed his foot upon the stair, and Wassaquam turned swiftly about.

"Anybody been here today, Judah?" Alan asked.

"No, Alan. I called tradesmen; they came. There were young men from the newspapers."

"What did you tell them?"

"Nothing."

"Why not?"

"Henry telephoned I was to tell them nothing."

"You mean Henry Spearman?"

"Yes."

"Do you take orders from him, Judah?"

"I took that order, Alan."

Alan hesitated. "You've been here in the house all day?"

"Yes, Alan."

BELMOND PEOPLE ARE IN SERIOUS ACCIDENT

Many Succumb To Cupid Past Week

Three Happy Young Couples Joined In Wedlock During Past Few Days

RUMOR OF OTHERS TOO

SORENSON—HEDGES

On Saturday evening, June 10th at 8:00 o'clock occured the marriage of Mrs. Alice Sorenson to Mr. Charles Hedges, the ceremony taking place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. N. Davenport. Rev. Wilkinson, pastor of the Methodist church, officiated. About 24 relatives and friends were present.

The rooms were very prettily decorated in white and green and pink. To the strains of the wedding march, played by Miss May Rosenow of Clear Lake, the happy pair, with Mrs. Wm. Dempsey as bridesmaid and Ernest Davenport as best man, took their places while Rev. Wilkinson in a brief and impressive ceremony tied the knot that made them one.

Following the congratulations, a three-course wedding supper was served.

The bride is one of Belmond's best loved and respected young ladies. Mr. Hedges is an industrious, capable citizen, with many friends. The happy couple will go to housekeeping on the Davenport farm south of town. The many friends of the newly weds, with whom the Independent takes pleasure in joining, extend their congratulations and best wishes for a prosperous and happy life together.

QUIGLEY— NELSON

Miss Nellie Quigley, daughter of Mrs. Pat Quigley, was united in marriage yesterday morning at the St. Francis church, by Rev. Father Eardley, pastor, to Mr. John A. Nelson, of Fort Dodge.

Only the immediate relatives were present. Miss Mahoney, of Fort Dodge, rendered the solo, "Ave Maria."

Following the ceremony the happy couple left for Denver on a snort wedding trip, and will be at home in Fort Dodge after July 1.

The bride is among the communities most charming young ladies and has a host of friends who unite in wishing them happiness and prosperity. Mr. Nelson is an accountant with the International Harvestor Co., a young man of ability and capable of making the bride a happy home.

The Independent joins with their many friends in extending congratulations.

McGUIRE—FOSTER

Cyril C. McGuire, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. McGuire, was married last Tuesday to Miss Mary Foster of Britt, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Father Eardley at the St. Francis Rectory. A few of the close relatives were present. After the cememony the happy couple left for a short trip to the Twin Cities and Dubuque, coming home by auto the first of the week.

They will reside in a cottage on Third street which they have rented.

The bride is well known in Belmond where she acted as stenographer in the State Bank. Mr. McGuire is connected with his father in the clothing business. The happy pair have many friends with whom the Independent joins in extending best wishes.

BELMOND TOWNSHIP

Miss Gladys Gunderson who had been staying at the A. W. Martin home since the first of March, left the fourth of this month to spend the summer at the S. Samson home.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Martin were in Clarion last Thursday on business. They were accompanied by their daughter, Harriet.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Anderson and Mr. and Mrs. Malven Thompson and their daughter of Kanawha were visiting friends in Belmond last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Royal and family of Des Moines passed through Belmond Monday morning on their way to Des Moines after having spent a few days at Clear Lake, opening their cottage for the summer. They called at the A. W. Martin home.

Mr. Will Brooks of Waverrly was calling on Belmond friends Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Brooks and family were Clarion visitors Monday afternoon.

Mrs. A. E. Martinand Mrs. W. I. Rosecrans left Saturday for Garner where they were joined by Mrs. Clarence Barnes and daughter and Miss Mary Kair of Algona. The ladies left Garner Sunday morning driving to Prairie Du Cien. They expect to return the latter part of the week.

IOWA STATE COLLEGE TAKING LEAD IN RADIO

The Belmond Battery Station and Independent Radio receiving set has been working with exceptional strength and clarity since the addition of a new high power storage battery and we have been following the tests made by the Iowa State College at Ames with particular interest, as of late they seem to be outstripping all other middle west Broadcasting Stations in the strength and modulation of their sending.

In tests conducted Sunday afternoon, to which we listened with interest, it was plainly apparent that the engineers at Ames have succeeded in making adjustments that would be of great benefit to the outfits of any of the broadcasting stations which we have heard to date. They are using both direct and alternating current in their work. To us it seems that the direct current is giving the best results in strength and clarity as it seems to do away with voice vibrations which tend to make speech unintelligable in other stations.

A number of stations were heard Sunday, among them the Kansas City Star, Davenport, St. Paul and some closer to home,, of the latter Fort Dodge sending some very fine musical selections. While it was not possible to receive these stations as clearly as Ames their programs were enjoyable. Judging from the activities of our people at Ames, Iowa is destined to lead in Radio development and those having the work in charge are entitled to the commendation of all for their untiring and through efforts to improve the latest great instrument of scientific progress.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

(From the Monitor)

Miss Mae Odland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nels Odland of Liberty township, is the new deputy in the county superintendent's office. Miss Odland is a former teacher and is fully qualified for the position.

Marriage licenses were issued the past week to John Westin and Gertie Delger of Fort Dodge, Cyril Charles McGuire of Belmond and Mary Agnes Foster of Britt, Geo. Milton Boyington of Dows and Maude Erickson of Rowan.

The $2000 appeal bond of Oscar W. Brown was withdrawn last week and on Thursday Deputy Denger took the defendant to Anamosa to serve a five year sentence for larceny of clothing from the residence of Robert Starner at Dows last fall.

Eugene Allen of Clarion has filed suit against William and Willard Parks to recover $3150. Plaintiff alleges he sold defendant 3000 oil tube attachments at $1.20 each and received the sum of $450 on contract hence suit to collect balance.

James Mehl of Norway township has begun a $5000 damage suit against Byron Oberton of Clarion. The petition alleges that defendant maliciously spoke of and concerning plaintiff in the presence and hearing of G. H. Lee and other persons unknown false and defamatory words to-wit "That —— Mehl look what kind of a man he is for supervisor. His children had some trouble in school and he went to the school house and started to give the teacher a licking and we had to stand him off with a six shooter."

New School Head

Geo. D. Eaton of Cedar Falls was last week elected superintendent of the Clarion schools. The new school head comes highly recommended and has excellent qualifications for the position. He is a graduate of the State Teacher's College and holds both a B. A. and Master's degree from that institution. Between the years 1909 and 1918 he was connected with the State School for the blind at Vinton. In 1918 he did Y. M. C. A. work in England. Later he was superintendent of the Lorenz schools. During 1921 he traveled in the interests of the Russell Sage Foundation fund. At present he is teaching in the department of government and economics at the State Teachers' college. He is a married man with one daughter six years of age. He expects to move to Clarion as soon as the summer term at the college closes, which will be about July 15, but plans on spending several week ends here previous to that time. There were around sixty-five applicants for the position, which speaks well for the standing of the Clarion schools.

Fined for Check Kiting.

A young fellow by the name of M. L. Stockdale of Goldfield was fined $25 and costs in Justice Triggs' court last week on the charge of kiting checks. He wrote checks on several banks where he had no funds. A. H. Worra of Holmes, his last victim, caused his undoing.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE PICNIC

Mrs. Ellery Purcell gave her husband an enjoyable surprise last Saturday evening by serving a delicious picnic dinner in honor of his birthday. Some 20 relatives were present, and with music and games a very enjoyable evening was spent. The out of town guest was Mrs. Bergsma, of Huron, S. D.

To Organize Fish And Game Clnb

Club To Be Organized And Morse Lake Stocked With More Game Fish

DUES DOLLAR A YEAR

Plans are underway to form a Fish and Game Club in Belmond, and the necessary steps leading to such are now being taken. It is proposed to form a club with 15 to 20 members at the start, with the stocking protection of Morse Lake as the object. With such a club, the lake can be stocked with a variety of fish, which will be furnished free by the state. All that will fall upon the members of the club will be to see to the transportation of the fish from the car to the lake, and with the aid of a few trucks and a little time and labor this will be done.

D. E. Packard and H. J. Bohning are leaders in the movement towards forming the club, and upon the return of Game Warden Monplasure, of Clear Lake, who will be in Belmond again in the near future, it will be expected to complete the organization of the club. Dues will be one dollar per year.

Such a club will be a fine thing for the lake and for those who enjoy fishing. The Independent will give details of the organization at a later date.

FORM GOLF ASSOCIATION

Eagle: Representatives of several golf clubs in this part of Iowa met in this city Saturday afternoon and decided to form an association. The suggested name for the association was Boone Valley Golf Association. The clubs to be represented are Webster City, Clarion, Belmond, Eagle Grove and Rolfe.

M. E. Hall of this City will serve as temporary president. Each club in the organization will play a match with a neighborig club and the latter part of September a tournament will be held here in which all the clubs will participate. A loving cup has already been purchased which will become the property of the club which wins it three times in succession.

W. C. Tyrrell represented Clarion and Belmond at the meeting and M. E. Hall represented Eagle Grove and Rolfe, Geo. Crossley was here from Webster City.

ROBINSON WINS

Hampton Man Wins Victory In Congressional Race

T. J. B. Robinson, candidate for congressman in the Third district, won in the republican primary by a big plurality. Mr. Robinson carried every county in the district except two, the home counties of the other two candidates, A. W. McFarlane, of Blackhawk county, and C. O. Ryan, of Hardin county, carrying their home counties respectively. Mr. Robinson carried each of the other seven counties in the district, most of them by a very substantial vote and wins by a plurality of over 3300. The vote by counties is as follows:

First Base Ball Game To Be Sunday

Newly Organized Team To Play First Game Sunday On The Home Ground

TO MEET EAGLE GROVE

Belmond has organized a team and will play the first game of the season next Sunday, June 18. The game will be against Eagle Grove and will be played on the Belmond diamond. The team will be composed of all home men, and will be strengthened by two new pitchers—whose heaving ability the fans will await with interest.

The game is to start at about 3 o'clock. Eagle Grove recently trimmed Clarion 6 to 1, and have a real team. The initial battle with the Belmond battlers ought to prove a good one.

The Belmond Independent,
Belmond, Iowa.

Dear Editor:

In your last weeks paper on your front page you had an article calling attention to a gentleman from No. Dakota who was fishing in Morse Lake with out a license. Just to enlighten some of your reader's minds in regard to this I wish to make plain just how it came about.

For about a week, Roy Johnson and family, relatives of mine, had been visiting with us, and as entertainment on the farm was lacking, we thought a fishing trip to the lake would be a half day well spent, so we all climbed into our cars with our families to go fishing. When passing thru town, my uncle thought of some articles he needed, besides he wanted to get some fruit for our lunches. He stopped in one of the leading stores, and while being waited upon, the conversation turned as to his home town state, and he also made a remark he was going to try his luck at fishing in Morse Lake.

After getting his various articles, we went to the lake, and after enjoying a few hours of holding the poles, a car drove up, and in the car were two of Belmond's leading citizens and a stranger. The stranger told us who he was and what he wanted, which was in reality two dollars for a Non-Resident Fisherman's license. This he got with very little argument but in the car sat the two men keenly enjoying the situation, but entirely ignorant of the humitation I was in. As is was the price of the license was nothing to us, but the idea of just taking a half a day for a fishing trip and having it ended in this manner, was enough to take the "Joy out of life" and the feeling which my uncle and family may hold in regard to the situation, deeply imprinted on them but never saying a word about it, will make one feel uneasy. I wonder if I can ever expect my uncle and family to come to see us again while we live in this "Welcome to Our City" of Belmond.

Now Mr. Editor, if any of your readers would have been in my predicament I wonder how they would have felt. And how easier the two gentlemen would possibly feel, if when they had the opportunity to warn my uncle in the store in regard to the license than to bring the game warden out after us, after the deed was done. I am writing this to let your readers know that it was not a joke to me, nor a case of square dealing.

Very truly yours
Geo. Hunst.

POPULAR GOODELL COUPLE MARRIED AT BELMOND

The marriage of Mr. Adrian Bielifild and Miss Leona Hood was solemnized at the Catholic church of Belmond at seven o'clock Saturday morning. Attending the happy parties to the union were a number of friends and relatives from Fort Dodge, Clare, Klemme, Goodell and Belmond. Mr. Tony Hood, a brother of the bride, acted as best man, and Helen Kirkwood, a sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was enjoyed at the Case Hotel of Belmond.

Mr. Walter L. Strait, a brother-in-law of the groom, added zest to the festivities by abducting the groom shortly after the breakfast and whisking him to parts unknown, leaving the bride and the rest of the party to wonder just what was taking place. At the time of writing the groom and his captors are still among the missing, and the bride is wondering if she is to play the role of "A Bride for an Hour." We trust that the groom will after due time succeed in making his escape and return to his wondering bride in time to start upon the honeymoon trip which they anticipate making. It is the intention of the newly weds to make an auto trip to Des Moines and parts unknown to others than themselves. They expect to return and be at home to their friends about July first. They will live upon the farm of the groom, about four miles northeast of Goodell.

The groom is one of the substantial farmers of the Goodell community while the bride comes from a family well known and esteemed in and around Goodell. The wedding is we understand, the result of a short and happy courtship. The numerous friends of the happy couple wish them happiness and lots of it.

WOULD AN OUTSIDE BAND GO?

The Independent was recently informed that the Britt band would come to Belmond for Saturday night concerts for $40 a week, making 12 concerts cost $480, if Belmond wanted it. Does Belmond want it? Will the town put up $480 for an outside band? The editor has "sounded out" a few business men, and those few are wiling; how about the rest? So far as the writer is concerned, we are plumb disgusted with the band proposition all around, but if there is evidenced a willingness on the part of the town to support a band, whether local or otherwise, the Independent will gladly act as agent or "go between" in getting concerts started and will come across with its proportionate share of the necessary coin. If anyone is interested enough to inquire, we shall be glad to furnish further details.

CHANGE LOCATION OF FARM BUREAU PICNIC

The annual Farm Bureau picnic this year on July 4th, has had a change made in location of the event. It had been planned to hold the affair at Pike timber, but this has been changed so that the picnic will be held on the Warner estate 6 miles east and one and one-half miles north of Clarion. This will give more room for parking the cars, and it is stated will accomodate the program better.

TO HOLD PICNIC

The Priscilla Club will hold a picnic next Wednesday, at the city park. The ladies will invite their husbands to the affair and show them what real entertainment is like. The club will hold no meetings during the month of July and August.

THAT $100,000 RAIN

Monday night this locality was visited by a good rain, the first in some time, which was worth thousands to the farmers of this vicinity Crops needed it badly, small grain and beets particularly. Corn is coming nicely, but small grain is not in very good shape according to reports.

ANNUAL MISSION FESTIVAL

The annual Mission Festival of the Immanuel Reformed church will be held on Wed. June 21. There will be three services on that day as is the custom. The forenoon service commences at 9:30 and will be especially adapted to Sunday school teachers and pupils. All scholars are earnestly requested to be present and bring their mission offering. At 10 a. m. the regular service will commence. This service is conducted in the German. The hour of the afternoon service will be announced in the morning. The evening service will commence at 7:30 and will consist in part of a sacred cantata rendered by the chorus of the church, and an address in the American language. At all of these services the customary mission offering will be received. We extend a hearty welcome to all.

Injured When Car Turns Over Twice

Car Turns Turtle From Pavement, Striking Tree—Trying To Turn Corner

INJURED ALL RECOVERING

Mildren Schultz of Belmond, and Len Huntley, of near Clarion, were both very badly injuried in an auto accident Sunday evening, in which four other Belmond young people were participants.

The six young people: Fred Finn and Max Finn, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Finn of Belmond, May and Genevieve Starnes and Mildren Schultz also of this place, and Len Huntley, residing near Clarion, were returning from Clear Lake, where they had spent the day. Traveling at a high rate of speed—estimated at 50 miles an hour—they failed to make the curve on the pavement four and one half miles northeast of Garner. Max. Finn, who was driving, says that he did not see the turn until upon it. The car went off the pavement, down a five-foot ditch, turned completely over twice and struck a tree, landing about 40 feet from the spot it left the paving.

Max Finn, driving, was uninjuried but suffered severely afterwards from shock. Mildren Schultz suffered numerous bruises, scratches and sprains and is injured internally, just how badly is not known at this writing. Len Huntley was injured the worst, suffering internal injuries and an injury to his back. His condition is very critical, Genevieve and May Starnes escaped without injury except a few minor scratches. Fred Finn was injured about the head, a gash being cut in the back of his head requiring 11 stitches to close.

The road was lined with cars, and the young people were at once picked up and rushed to Garner, where they were taken to the doctor's office and given treatment. Later in the evening Huntley was taken to the hotel and Miss Schultz to a private home. The rest of the party returned to Belmond. The accident occured at 10 o'clock Sunday night.

The car was badly dented and caved in, the top and windshield being demolished and one rear wheel smashed. Monday morning Ray Morris and the Finn boys went up after it, and found that the engine was uninjured. The car was driven home.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their many kind acts during our recent loss.

Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Hill and family.
F. C. Stanley.

CAR RUNS OFF RIVER BRIDGE

A tourist car ran off the bridge and into the river yesterday at the Barry bridge south of town. We were unable to find where the car was from or who was driving, the parties maintining a very discreet silence. According to reports, they were going at a pretty good gait and failed to make the curve at the approach, crashing thru the fence to the river below.

BELMOND STUDENTS AT COE WIN HONORS

The Coe College "Cosmos" for June 7 carried the announcement of the award to Miss Beatrice Leinbach the Delta Delta Delta sorority award of $25 as the most representative senior woman, judged by the faculty on scholarship, personality and participation in extra-academic activities Miss Leinback also received a diploma with "Magna Cum Laude", which meant that she earned 100 or more credit "A's" during the college course.

In the senior drama "Comedie" Philip McBurney took the part of "Hiram Hen de Peck," while Miss Leinbach was "Mrs. Crustacea Hen de Peck."

MRS. DZIEWANOWSKI DIES

Mrs. Win Dziewanowski died at the hospital in Rochester, Tuesday, the remains being brought home to the farm east of town Tuesday. She had been at the hospital taking treatment. An obituary will be published next week.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP FARM BUREAU SOCIAL

There will be a social held at the John Kessler home in Pleasant township on Friday evening of this week, June 16. The social will be a lawn affair, strawberries and ice cream served. The funds derived will go toward the short course. The evening will be spent in games and a social time, and everybody is invited. Come out and have a good time.

We Know Batteries!

Repairing batteries may look easy—but it isn't!

To be successful, a repair man has to know just how to handle the plates that hold the active material that keeps life in the battery. He has to know how to take care of the insulators that keep the plates apart. He has to know when it is cheaper for you to buy a new battery than to have the old one repaired.

Bring your battery in to Headquarters—no matter whether it's a Willard or not. We'll tell you what it needs, if anything, how much the cost will be—and whether repairs will pay or not.

FORD FOR PRESIDENT?

Much discussion has been caused by recent reports that Henry Ford, of automobile fame, might be drafted as Presidential candidate in the National election next year. We can think of many reasons why Ford would make good Presidential timber, and some other reasons why he might be a misfit. While administering the affairs of the government and the affairs of a huge industrial enterprize are similar from a business angle, they are two distinctly different matters when it comes to the question of diplomatic business relations between a man of Ford's strength and power on one hand and average business people upon the other.

Were it possible to place in the Presidential chair a man who takes office entirely free of party affiliations or obligations, a man who owes nothing to anyone and who need cotton to no individual or interest, it would without doubt be of wonderful benefit to the country at large. Henry Ford in the past gave positive evidence that he is not and never will be amendable to control of any kind. His freedom from entanglement is a point in his favor as he would be able, if elected, to concern himself only with determination of what course would produce the best results and would not be forced to dodge and side step in the filling of campaign pledges made in trading for political support. This could not but be of great value to the interests of the country at large.

Ford is a humanitarian and believes in a fair and just treatment of labor. In that respect his record is more notable than that of any other American Captain of industry. He would approach the gigantic problem of labor regulations with a fairness and understanding sympathy which could be expected from no other man in the advantage of a large percentage of our people.

Ford is a visionary and a dreamer, as evidenced by his effort to bring about peace during the early part of the world war. His visionary ideas would doubtless work to his detriment in the minds of many people, and might be his undoing as a President; yet on the other hand vision is what acuates big men to big things. Without vision there can be no great achievement; so in the case of Ford it would be a question of the amount of poise and balance used to temper his vision. He must have poise and balance with which to have built the mammoth, well corordinated organization which has been required to handle his business successfully.

It would be indeed a novel occurence in American politics if the people were for once to pick a man of their own choice and draft him for the Presidency. There would be chaos indeed in the camps of the political chieftains who wax fat throug making or unmaking the politicial heads of our government. Who can say but what such an occurence would be the means of ushering in a new era in American politics during which the people would do the hitherto unheard of thing and think for themselves instead of heeding the dictates of the powers that be? In these days of general unrest and dissatisfaction there are many worse things which the American public can turn to for relief than a Ford-for-President movement. A movement of this kind would have much to do in the combating of the various isms and colored movements with which we have been so thoroly pestered.—Contributed.

The Independent agrees with many of the ideas given in the foregoing, but not with all of them. Ford while practical minded in a business way, is impractical when he gets away from the one line. If seriously considered for the presidency, his "Peace Ship" and his bitter attacks on the Jews are most surely going to bob up as illustrating his impractical ideas along other than "Lizzie" lines. Ford is a big man—there is no question of that—but has he the necessary mental balance to handle the biggest job in the world?

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Last Sunday was a banner day starting out with the largest attendance that we have had during the past three years at Sunday School. The Children's Day exercises were of a high order and the service was greatly appreciated and helpful. The offering for the board of Sabbath School work amounted to a little over $30.00. There was a good attendance at the evening service.

The Ladies Aid Society will hold an all days quilting on Wednesday, in the parlors of the church. The ladies are asked to come and bring their lunches.

We hope to have six more next Sunday at Sunday school than we had last Sunday and we believe that they are going to be there. Will you be one of the six to come? Sabbath school at 10:00 a. m. and the morning worship at 11:00. The evening services begin at 7:30 with the young people's meeting. We have for next Sunday night the third in our series in he life of Paul. Those who come are being helped by this series which are very interesting and instructive. We have room for you so come.

Building for the Future

It its determination to continue rendering a maximum service to the customers of this community, the Iowa Falls Electric Co. is mindfull of the fact that its customers will need electricity in continually increasing quantities as the years go by.

The Iowa Falls Electric Co. interprets efficient service to this community to mean the generating of a vast amount of energy for the customer whenever and in as large a quantity as demanded. The comprehensive distribution system maintained by this company makes this possible. For the company has brought into play every unit of its entire organization, from the mammoth power plants and high tension lines to the distribution systems in each locality.

As the need for increased facilities becomes apparent, the general managers of this company expand its activities, not merely to meet the immediate need but always to keep a step ahead.

It is this anticipatory service which has made this company a leader in its field and service certain.

CRYSTAL DETECTOR EASY TO CONSTRUCT

Telephone Condenser and Receivers Can Better Be Purchased—Mounting the Set.

The material needed to construct a simple crystal detector is as follows:

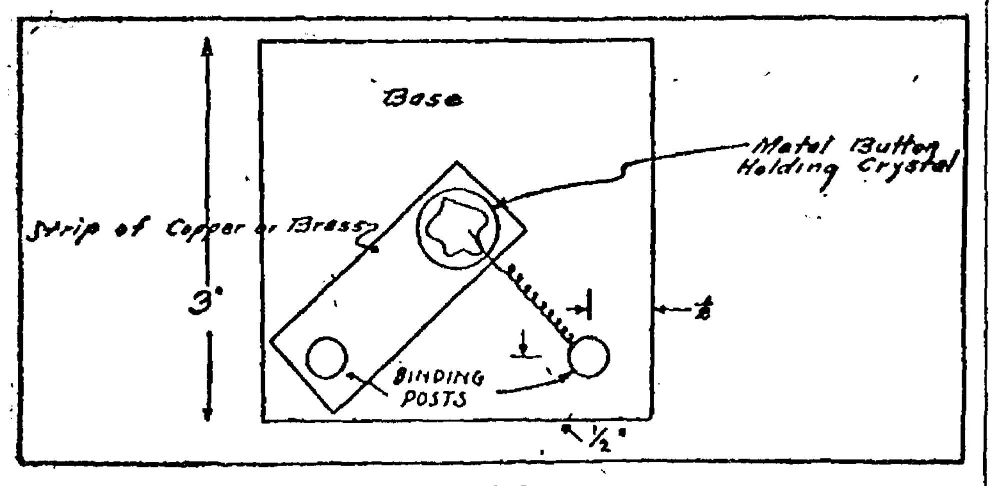
Piece of silicon or galena molded in a metal button, 25 cents.

Two binding posts, 20 cents.

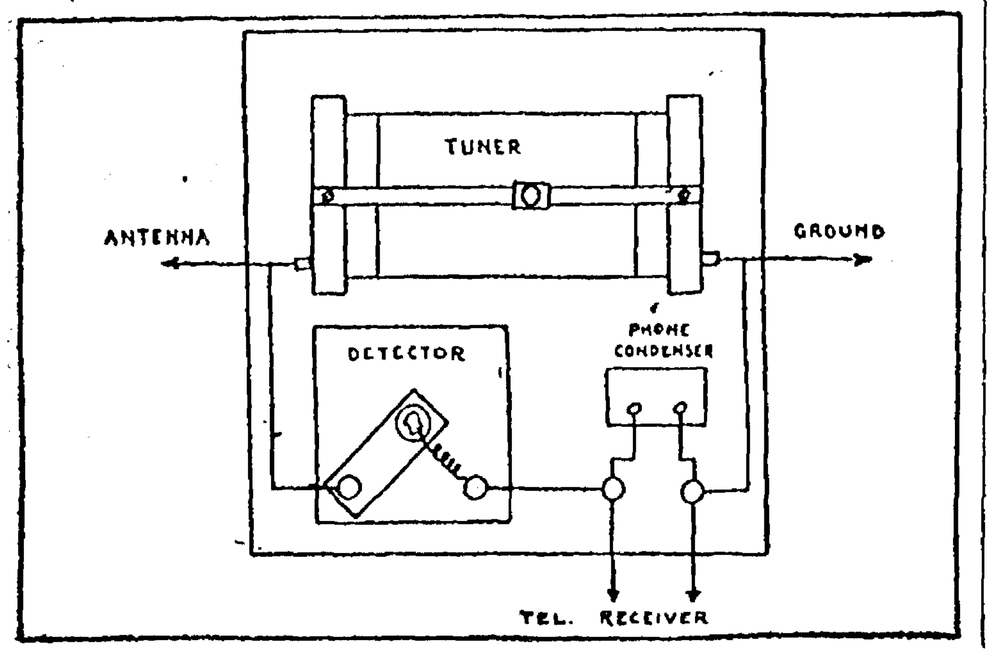
A block of shellacked or stained wood 3 by 8½ inches.

A thin strip of sheet copper or brass ¾ inches wide by two inches long.

Mount the two binding posts on the block of wood as shown, fastening under one binding post a strip of copper or brass—see sketch—and under the other binding post a coiled up spring of fine springy copper or brass wire. By placing the button of metal containing the crystal of silicon or galena on the strip of metal and allowing the spring to make contact with the surface of the crystal the detector is complete and ready for operation.



The Crystal Detector.



Set Mounted on Base, With Connections Shown.

A complete crystal detector can be purchased from 75 cents to $2, depending upon the type.

Two other pieces of apparatus are necessary that cannot be readily constructed—they are the telephone condenser and the receivers. A telephone condenser to be used in shunting across the phones can be purchased for about 50 cents.

For use with a radio receiver of this type it is recommended that a pair of 3,000-ohm, Murdoch type, No. 56 receivers, costing $6, be purchased.

These are all the necessary parts needed for the complete receiver.

If it is desired, the three instruments, the tuner, the crystal detector and the telephone condenser, can be mounted on a stained base of wood, say, eight inches square and one-half inch thick. This will keep the component parts of the set together, making a compact unit of the whole and also be advantageous in that it will hold the instruments while adjustments are being made.

The sketch shows how the instruments are connected with each other and to the ground. The condenser is connected to one side of the tuner and to the crystal detector. The ground is connected to the other side of the phones and the condenser and the tuner.

Lamp cord is excellent for connecting up small radio sets of this kind—it being a good conductor, well insulated and easy to handle.

HOW TO LISTEN IN

There are two variables in our radio receiver that require adjustment when it is desired to listen-in; first, the detector, and second, the slide position on the tuner. Once the slider position has been determined for any given transmitting station, it is only necessary to adjust the detector to pick up that same station again.

To operate the receiver for the first time it is best to wait until some station like KDKA is transmitting between 8:30 and 9:30 p. m. Then adjust the detector by changing the point at which the spring and crystal of the detector make contact until, when a nearby electric light is snapped on and off, a click is heard in the head phones. The detector is now adjusted on a sensitive spot on the crystal. By changing the slider position, the transmitting station should be picked up.

After a station is once picked up it is an easy matter to adjust the detector and slider position until maximum response is obtained in the telephone receiver. With a simple set of the kind described in this and preceding articles and a little practice one soon becomes adept at picking up a given station. The entertainment derived from listening-in is usually well worth the time spent and the money invested.

VAGARIES OF VACUUM TUBES

Peculiar Actions That Always Astonish and Sometimes Frighten the Amateur Radioist.

Everybody who has had anything to do with vacuum tubes has from time to time had them do unexpected things and give results that at the moment seem beyond explanation.

The explanation of several characteristics of these miniature giants which are met with in daily operation is sure to prove of great interest to the amateur. In cases where the actions of the tube are not understood these peculiarities have sometimes frightened people.

One instance of a newborn fan's fright was brought to attention in a letter of inquiry. The instrument had just been set up and was being operated for the first time. The tubes had been firmly adjusted and were just at the spilling point and—over they went, giving vent to the most unearthly sounds. The embryo enthusiast who looked upon the audion tube as an electric light, thought it was going to explode. He jumped away from the instrument and out of the room, and did not venture near it for several hours, and then only after reaching round the corner of the door with a long stick and pulling the battery switch off.

Similar instances have come to attention when bulbs generate vari-colored vapors in the vacuum chamber.

Moonshiners Using Radio.

Revenue officers seeking distillers of the far-famed and hardhitting "white lightnin'," in the mountains of Kentucky say that many raids made in the last few months have proven unsuccessful, due to the adoption of radiophone as a means of communication among the moonshiners.

TIPS TO THE RADIOIST

Fired .22 caliber rifle shells make good switch points for tuning coils and receiving transformers.

A single wire aerial 100 to 150 feet long is sufficient for local and long distance reception of broadcasting stations.

Do not string aerials across the street or across electric wires. Keep antenna wires off electric light and telephone poles.

Stranded copper or solid copper wire should be used. Phosphor bronze wire if obtainable is stronger but not superior to copper.

Good contact with a piece of mineral like galena can be had by wrapping it in tinfoil. Of course, the top of the crystal is left exposed.

The brass ends of large cartridge shells make splendid crystal detector cups. They should be cleaned out thoroughly before they are used.

The winding of cardboard tubes from oatmeal boxes may be improved greatly if the tube is first heated in an oven for about 15 minutes to take out the moisture and then wound; or better still shellac it while it is still warm and leave it to soak in.

In winding tuning coils with bare wire a thread should be wound on with the wire. This will separate each turn. When the coil is finished the thread can be taken off. Shellac should be applied immediately. When the shellac is dry the copper wire will hold its place.

STAR THEATRE
"PAYING THE PIPER"

An absorbing story of how a frivolous, money-loving girl, blind to the finer things of life is regenerated through a baby she finds in a park, and who awakens her maternal instinct, which comes to the Star theatre next Saturday.

"THE SHEIK"
JUNE 23 and 24

In the cast are several players of reputation. Supporting Agnes Ayres and Rudolph Valentino, the featured players are Adolph Menjou, who played a heavy role in "The Faith Healer." who is seen as the French novelist in this production. Lucien Littlefield, famous character and make-up artist, is Gaston, valet to the Sheik. George Waggner does a work of art as Youssef, the Sheik's first lieutenant and faithful aide. Ruth Miller, famous dancer and actress, is a slave girl; Walter Long, the heaviest of them all, is the grizzly old Arabian bandit and F. R. Butler is the English girl's brother.

The Y. P. S. C. E. held their monthly business meeting and social hour at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Duffy last Thursday night. About thirty young people were present at this meeting. Plans were made for sending the following delegates to Algona next Wednesday and Thursday to the Epworth League Convention: Mrs. W. R. McCallum, May Virden, Mrs. A. O. Pelly, Mrs. George Liming.

With summer upon us again and automobile traffic on the increase the spotlight of pitiless puuncity should be turned with full force upon the speed maniac—the most dangerous of all irresponsible animals. Fortunately, they are not so numerous as they were. Heavy fines and jail sentences have checked a portion of this ruthless terror. But even one is too many to be left at large. Not since the early days Indian butcheries has there been such a menace to public safety. Time and superior force have eliminated the Indian as a menace. The speeder's turn comes next, and action should be swift and with no greater mercy than he shows to his helpless victims.—Hampton Chronicle.

The Eagle Grove baseball team defeated a similar aggregation from Clarion at Greenwood Park Sunday afternoon, 6 to 1.—Eagle.

Mrs. C. J. Papousek came to the home of the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chris Jacobs, Friday. She had been at the Mason City hospital for over two weeks. She is recovering nicely from her operation for appendicitis, and after a few days here will go to her home at Belmond. Chas. was also here to spend Sunday.—Signal.

Guy Baker and family of Belmond, visited at the Ralph Elder home last Sunday.—Times.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Baldridge were Belmond visitors last Thursday. While there they visited with Mrs. Anderson, whom they knew several years ago before the Anderson's moved to near Redfield, S. Dak. After completing her visit in Iowa Mrs. Anderson will spend several months visiting with relatives and friends in the western states and they will then locate in the state of Washington.—Reporter.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Gruetzmacher who taught in the Belmond schools last year were week end visitors at the H. H. Harriman home and with other relatives and friends. When they left on Monday they had the misfortune to lose Mrs. Gruetzmacher's traveling bag off their car. They discovered their loss when they arrived at the Lakes and drove right back but were unable to find it.—Reporter.

Vol. 1 BELMOND, IOWA, JUNE 15, 1922. NO. 15

Keep cool! This isn't the time to get all "het up." It's hot enough the way it is.

A Big Hay Crop

Haying machines are ready now. Clip-clippity-clip, the call of the mower sounds in the distance, and it won't be long before a big hay crop will be ready for harvest. Are you ready with a trusty mower, a sturdy rake, and a reliable loader. Wouldn't you like o slip in some day and look at the McCormick or Deering mower, the International Side-Delivery rake and the International loader? You should have these three machines. McCormick and Deering mowers are famous for service over the whole round world—so are the rest of the International haying machines. Their long suit is light draft. Come in and look 'em over.

A real he-man is a little bit of everything that's good and still remains what he should be.

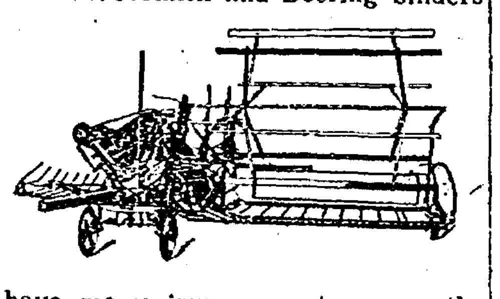
The mouth is a source of much trouble, and it's not altogether toothache of stomach trouble either.

It's hard to see what some women see in the men they marry, but it's harder still to see what some men see in the "hootch" they drink.

No flies mean a clean home. Cleanliness means efficiency, better health, better homes, and better humanity.

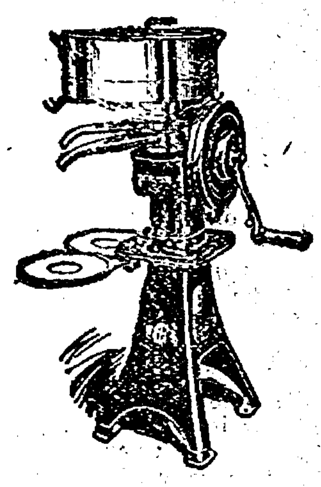
Improved Binders

Will your old binder stand the "gaff" for anoher season? Now's the time to find out. Not when you are ready to enter the field. The 1922 McCormick and Deering binders have many improvements over the binder of ten years ago. At your first chance come in and see some of these improvements—outside reel support, grain-saving floating elevator, quickly removed durable pitman, long wearing fabric canvas straps, modern bundle carrier, tongue truck and better bearings. With a new McCormick or Deering binder you'll be ready for all harvesting difficulties—including rough fields, and long ache or stomach trouble either.



Did You Know

That the Primrose is the only cream separator made with two wide-open cream outlets, giving it more than double the space any other separator has for cream to escape? It's a fact. Fat globules cannot be crushed or broken in passing through these openings. The density of the cream is regulated in the Primrose with a screw in the skimmilk outlet. It is easy to adjust because it works on the large volume of skimmilk instead of the small volume of cream.



There is no screw or other obstruction in the cream outlets to interfere with the free flow of all the cream out of the bowl. The two wide-open cream outlets and the milk screw are two big cream saving features not found in any other separator.

SEE "PASSION PLAY"

Monitor: Mrs. Clara Courson and daughters Nina and Louise, had the privilege of witnessing the famous Passion Play at Oberammergau, Germany. The play, which portrays the life of Christ and his teachings was inaugurated by the villagers in 1634 as a festival of thanksgiving for immunity from famine and disease. The "Christus Drama", the name the people of Oberammergau gave the play, is produced eveny ten years. The last performance however was held in 1910, the play not being repeated in 1920 because of the ravages of the war.

Determination to retain the centuries-old custom causd the Bavarian villagers to resume the performance after 12 years' time. This was not an easy thing to do because the theatre and scenery had greatly depreciated during the war and a vast expenditure was necessary to repair the damage.

The festival extends from May 14 to Sept. 24 and it is believed thousands from all parts of the world will attend. The role of the "Christus" is played by Anton Lang, who has acted the part on several previous occasions. The role is not an easy one by any means. A cross weighing one hundred and fifty pounds must be carried for fifteen minutes on the way to Gethsemane. In the crucifixion scene the Christ must remain fastened to the cross for 20 minutes. There is danger of heart failure every time an actor plays in scene and it is said that one false move during the Descent from the Cross, causing the blood to rush to the head, would cost him his life. All of the women's roles are taken by virgins.

Anton Lang is quoted as expressing the hope that "not only our friends but some of our enemies as well will come to Oberammergau to witness the most stirring tragedy the world has ever known—the fundemental thought of which is brotherly love and Christian forgiveness."

Mrs. Courson writes the following concering the witnessing of the famous pagant:

We came to Oberammergau the 15 of May and are spending a week here. We thought it would be interesting to see the village and people before the crowds got nere. While in Berlin we got reservations on the "Saxonia" sailing from Cherebourg the 15th of June.

Yesterday was beautiful and every one got up early. By 4 o'clock the people began to gather round the ticket office. By six there must have been two or three hundred in front of it. People from the surrounding country came in carriages or on bicycles or on foot, and many of those people had to stand. Every one that has a bed engaged in the village has a seat. Each householder is given a ticket for a seat, for each person that is staying inh is home.

The building seats 4500, with standing room for 500, and I think every foot of space was occupied. The doors opened about seven, and the play began at eight, there an intermission from 12 to 2 and it ended at six. The performance was continuous, and it was perfect, and it would be easy to picka grand opera company from the chorus.

The players are in the open unless it rains when a canvass is stretched over them. Our hostess has a granddaughter in the play. All the men and little boys in the families that take part have long hair and it is very becoming to most of them. One day we met Anton Lang. He certainly has a very fine personality and he speaks very good English.

Now is the time for you to SAFEGUARD the comfort and health of your family

The Round Oak Moistair Heating System

delivers pure, warm, ever-changing air, free from dust, gas, and smoke —properly humidified, year after year, for more than a generation, which helps safeguard the health and comfort of the family. Warm, moist, air at 68 degrees is more comfortable than the usual dry, parched air at 75 degrees. Certainly it is more healthful.

SAVES ONE TON IN EVERY NINE

Due to its improved construction, the Round Oak Moistair Heating System will save one ton of coal in nine. Burns economically, soft coal, coke, wood, and where available, hard coal. We invite the opportunity of proving from the system itself, that with its installation according to approved plans, you should order just two-thirds the amount of fuel demanded by other heating systems. It is hoped that every member and in fact everyone interested in farm organization will attempt to get to one of these picnics.

OBITUARY

John Henry Brater was born Nov. 16th 1868, Lancester Township, Keokuk County Iowa. Was united in marriage with Anna Hermann March 11, 1903; to this union were born two sons. He moved to a farm near Belmond 10 years ago. Four years later he moved to Meservey. He joined the church of the Evangelical Association February 1917 and by his presence and means supported to the best of his ability. He passed away in the hospital at Belmond (where he had undergone an operation for infection of the gall bladder) without knowing that his sister-in-law, Mrs. Carl Hermann had preceded him by about 18 hours on the same day, June 6th. He reached the age of 53 years, 6 months and 20 days. He leaves a widow, 2 sons 4 sisters and many other relatives and a large circle of friends.

OBITUARY

Gertrude Arlington Hermann daughter of Chris and Emma Siechti, was born Feburary 13 1892 at Sigourney, Iowa. Was married to Carl Hermann June 10th, 1918 moving to Meservey in the same year. Mrs. Hermann has been active in church work, having been Y. P. A. president, president of Y. W. M. C. and S. S. teacher and was loved by all. Her untimely end came on June 6th, aged 30 years 3 months and 23 days.

She passed away without fear death for her trust had been placed in Him who had been victorious over death and the grave and thus robbed death of its sting and the grave of its power.

Besides a great circle of friends and relatives who mourn her early departure she leaves her husband one brother, one sister and a father.

GREATEST BOYS' AND GIRLS' FAIR PLANNED FOR 1922

With cash prizes totaling over $8,952 offered in the various departments of the Junior Iowa State Fair, greater interest than ever before is being manifested by the boys and girls of the state in this branch of the 1922 exposition at Des Moines.

The boys' and girls' club classifications at the fair this year are the largest ever arranged. Premium offerings have been made so liberal and the advantages from the standpoint of education and experience to be obtained so numerous that indications are every progressive farmer in the state will endeavor to have at least one of his boys or girls enter some of the competitions.

As in former years, free dormitory privileges will be provided for all boys and girls entering competitions in the club departments. A separate dormitory for the boys ad one for the girls have been provided, completely equipped with conveniences, and will be turned over to these juniors during the entire period of the exposition. Boys and girls will be required to bring their own blankets, etc., but cots and housing will be given free of charge. Proper chaperonage will be provided by the State Fair management.

Another great feature of the boys and girls' department will be the big Club Pageant which will be held on Wednesday, August 30. It will pass before the grand stand in the following divisions: 1. Demonstration teams; 2. Judging teams; 3. Boys' Camp groups; 4. Girls' Camp groups; 5. County delegations; 6. Club delegations; 7. Special co-operative delegations.

Others in Pageant

COMMUNITY PAGEANT, ALDEN

Wednesday, June 21, is to be a great day in Alden, and will be of interest to all surrounding towns. About 200 citizens are to be put on the community Pageant, "American Yesterday and Today." The beautiful Alden Park is to be the scene of the event, and it is proposed to build a temporary bridge across the Iowa river by the park to add to the effective setting of the various Episodes. An experienced director has been engaged from away to drill and put on the Pageant, and the whole town is getting behind the affair to make it one of the most elaborate efforts ever attempted by its citizens. Alden will probably be the Mecca of pilgrams from every part of the county and beyond on that day. If the day should be rainy, the next fair day will be used.

THE KIND THAT COUNT

If you take a walk about town you will find men out of work because they are looking for something that does not exist—a soft job.

During the past few months we have read and heard a great deal about the unemployed. But it strikes us the unemployed off the pay roll is no menace compared with the unemployed on the pay roll. It is hard for some men to realize the war is over and the battle for success is on.

This is the "come-back year," and the fellow who will come back in 1922 is the fellow who will work for all he is worth. Looking for an easy berth, or a better job somewhere else is like looking for a whangdoodle. There is no such animal.

There are some men who are right making the biggest strides toward success that they have ever made. They are the men who are paying no attention to the complaining grouches and chronic seekers for soft snaps. They are pitching in and earning the confidence of the management, by the right kind of co-operation and the best kind of service.

The man who has the real desire to get ahead has greater opportunities today than when we were crazy with cash and insane with the idea of spending it.—Exchange.

THE $1,000,000,000 LOAN.

Chicago Tribune: Whatever we may think of the economic wisdom or error of the international bankers' prospective $1,000,000,000 loan to Germany, there is something to be said for it as indicating a tendency to solve the business problems of Europe by business methods rather than by political and diplomatic intrigue.

The idea of canceling European debts to America or of making new government loans to European countries with money obtained by force, which is to say by taxation, from American citizens has been thoroughly repudiated in this country. The idea of an American banking house such as J. P. Morgan & Co., selling bonds for a bankers' loan to Germany or any other European country is distinctly better than the idea of a government loan to be paid off when, and if, the borrower desiros. At least with the bankers' loan we can provide the money by purchase of bonds or not as we desire. That is a matter for the individual American investor to decide for himself.

The government loan would mean additional financial entanglements with Europe in spite of ourselves. The bankers' loan should mean no such entanglements and no governmental responsibility in this country for collection. The nature of the security on which such a loan should be made should be a matter for the bankekrs to determine. The value of such securities should be a matter for potential investors in this country to determine. If potential investors are satisfied and prefer to invest their money abroad through J. P. Morgan & Co., rather than to invest it in America, perhaps at lower interest, that is their affair.

Perhaps Mr. Morgan believes that by returning Germany to prosperity he will speed up all international trade and prosperity.

Whatever may be his reasons or motives he is on the way to making a loan based upon definite securities which he will insist upon being good before the money changes hands. Perhaps politics and diplomacy will enter into the task of defining these securities, but no Genoa or Hauge meeting will alter their value when once defined. European politics and diplomacy are now attempting to fix distribution of the loan, but that is about as far as they will go. Altogether the bankers' conference appears to have been much more an economic conference than that recently held at Genoa. It is probable that it will limit the use of money loaned to constructive purposes, that it will limit the European habit of printing new currency whenever it needs marks or francs or rubles. The prospect is undoubtedly improved. It may mean the beginning of a new epoch and prove the most significant development since the armistice.

FARM HOME ROBBED

Chronicle: Culprits entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Heuberger, who reside one mile west ot Chapin, last Monday, while they were at the polls casting their votes, and made away with a ring, two gold watches, a revolver and a small amount of money.

Mr. and Mrs. Heuberger met two young men on the road on their way home from Chapin, whom they believe were the men responsible for the robbery. They also report that the men answered to the description of two men who were arrested here a few days ago for jumping a board bill.

ACCIDENT CAUSES DEATH

A fatal auto accident occured one and one-half miles northwest of Forest City, Sunday afternoon last, when a rebuilt Ford car driven by Mae Lein turned turtle, catching Ione Cassell, who was riding with her under it, inflicting injuries from which she died two hours later. The driver Miss Lein, sustained a broken arm and several bad body injuries. The dead girl was a member of the Junior class of the Forest City High school and played a star game as guard on the girls basket ball team, the season past. MissLein was an inexperienced driver, and the supposition is that when she struck a high approach to a bridge, which swerved the car toward a ditch, in her confusion she cramped the wheels too far with the result that the auto was overturned.—Reporter.

DO YOU REMEMBER?

The prairies of southwestern Hancock and northwestern Wright are dotted all over with herds of cattle. Thousands of head from other parts of the state are being herded there. Herding cattle seems to be quite profitable business. One young man who had previously worked by the month and saved up about $100 a year, last year run a herd on his own hook and cleared $1000 with which he bought a quarter section. This year the same party has 1,800 head to care for. He receives $1,00 a head.—Garner Signal, May 31, 1882

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes his employer is dead. He also tells him the legend of the Indian Drum, which according to old superstition beats once for every life lost on the Great Lakes. Twenty years before, the great freighter Miwaka had gone down with twenty-five on board, but the Drum had sounded for only twenty-four, leaving the inference that one person had been saved, since it was general belief that the drum never erred. Pursuing a stranger who had made a disturbance at his house, Alan is slugged and rendered unconscious.

Alan went back to the first floor and into the smaller library. The room was dark with the early winter dusk, and he switched on the light; then he knelt and pulled out one of the drawers he had seen Spearman searching through the night before, and carefully examined the papers in it one by one, but found them only ordinary papers. He pulled the drawer completely out and sounded the wall behind it and the partitions on both sides but they appeared solid. He put the drawer back in and went on to examine the next one, and, after that, the others. The clocks in the house had been wound, for presently the clock in the library struck six, and another in the hall chimed slowly. An hour later, when the clocks chimed again, Alan looked up and saw Wassaquam's small black eyes, deep set in their large eye sockets, fixed on him intently through the door. How long the Indian had been there, Alan could not guess; he had not heard his step.

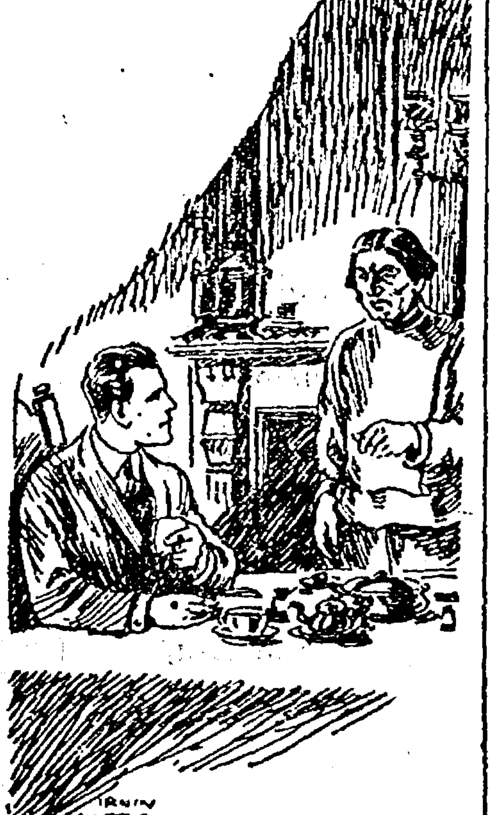
"What are you looking for, Alan?" the Indian asked.

Alan reflected a moment. "Mr. Sherrill thought that Mr. Corvet might have left a record of some sort here for me, Judah. Do you know of anything like that?"

"No. That is what you are looking for?"

"Yes. Do you know of any place where Mr. Corvet would have been likely to put away anything like that?"

"Ben put papers in all these drawers; he put them upstairs, too—where you have seen."



"You're a Chippewa, Aren't You, Judah?" Alan Asked.

"Nowhere else, Judah?"

"If he put things anywhere else, Alan, I have not seen. Dinner is served, Alan."

Alan went to the lavatory on the first floor and washed the dust from his hands and face; then he went into the dining room. Wassaquam, having served the dinner, took his place behind Alan's chair, ready to pass him what he needed; but the Indian's silent, watchful presence there behind him where he could not see his face, disturbed Alan, and he twisted himself about to look at him.

"Would you mind, Judah," he inquired, "if I asked you to stand over there instead of where you are?"

The Indian, without answering, moved around to the other side of the table, where he stood facing Alan.

"You're a Chippewa, aren't you, Judah?" Alan asked.

"Yes."

"Your people live at the other end of the lake, don't they?"

"Yes, Alan."

"Have you ever heard of the Indian Drum they talk about up there, that they say sounds when a ship goes down on the lake?"

The Indian's eyes sparkled excitedly. "Yes," he said.

"Do you believe in it?"

"Not just believe; I know. Everybody knows that it sounds for those who die on the lake. I have heard it. It sounded for my father."

"How was that?"

"Like this. My father sold some bullocks to a man on Beaver Island. The man kept store on Beaver Island, Alan. No Indian liked him. He would not hand anything to an Indian or wrap anything in paper for an Indian. Say it was like this: An Indian comes in to buy salt pork. First the man would get the money. Then, Alan, he would take his hook and pull the pork up out of the barrel and throw it on the dirty floor for the Indian to pick up. He said Indians must take their food off of the floor—like dogs.

"My father had to take the bullocks to the man, across to Beaver Island. At first the Indians did not know who the bullocks were for, so they helped him. When they found out the bullocks were for the man on Beaver Island, the Indians would not help him any longer. He had to take them across alone. Besides, it was bad weather, the beginning of a storm.

"He went away, and my mother went to pick berries—I was small then. Pretty soon I saw my mother coming back. She had no berries, and her hair was hanging down, and she was wailing. She took me in her arms and said my father was dead. Other Indians came around and asked her how she knew, and she said she heard the Drum. The Indians found my father's body."

"Did you ever hear of a ship called the Miwaka, Judah?"

"That was long ago," the Indian answered.

"They say that the Drum beat wrong when the Miwaka went down—that it was one beat short of the right number."

"That was long ago," Wassaquam merely repeated.

"Did Mr. Corvet ever speak to you about the Miwaka?"

"No; he asked me once if I had ever heard the Drum. I told him."

Wassaquam removed the dinner and brought Alan a dessert. He returned to stand in the place across the table that Alan had assigned to him, and stood looking down at Alan, steadily and thoughtfully.

"Do I look like any one you ever saw before, Judah?" Alan inquired of him.

"No."

"Is that what you are thinking?"

"That is what I was thinking. Will coffee be served in the library, Alan?"

Alan crossed to the library and seated himself in the chair where his father had been accustomed to sit. Wassaquam brought him the single small cup of coffee, lit the spirit lamp on the smoking stand and moved that over; then he went away. When he had finished his coffee, Alan went into the smaller connecting room and recommenced his examination of the drawers under the bookshelves. At ten o'clock, Alan stopped his search and went back to the chair in the library. He dozed; for he awoke with a start and a feeling that some one had been bending over him, and gazed up into Wassaquam's face. The Indian had been scrutinizing him with intent, anxious inquiry. He moved away, but Alan called him back.

"When Mr. Corvet disappeared, Judah, you went to look for him up at Manistique, where he was born—at least Mr. Sherrill said that was where you went. Why did you think you might find him there?" Alan asked.

"In the end, I think, a man maybe goes back to the place where he began. That's all, Alan."

"In the end! What do you mean by that? What do you think has become of Mr. Corvet?"

"I think now—Ben's dead."

"What makes you think that?"

"Nothing makes me think; I think it myself."

"I see. You mean you have no reason more than others for thinking it; but that is what you believe."

"Yes." Wassaquam went away, and Alan heard him on the back stairs, ascending to his room.

When Alan went up to his own room, after making the rounds to see that the house was locked, a droning chant came to him from the third floor. He paused in the hall and listened, then went up to the floor above. A flickering light came to him through the half-open door of a room at the front of the house; he went a little way toward it and looked in. Two thick candles were burning before a crucifix, below which the Indian knelt, prayer book in hand and rocking to and fro as he droned his supplications.

A word or two came to Alan, but without them Wassaquam's occupation was plain; he was praying for the repose of the dead—the Catholic chant taught to him, as it had been taught undoubtedly to his fathers, by the French Jesuits of the lakes. The intoned chant for Corvet's soul, by the man who had heard the Drum, followed and still came to Alan, as he returned to the second floor.

He had not been able to determine, during the evening, Wassaquam's attitude toward him. Having no one else to trust, Alan had been obliged to put a certain amount of trust in the Indian; so as he had explained to Wassaquam that morning that the desk and the drawers in the little room off Corvet's had been forced, and had warned him to see that no one, who had not proper business there, entered the house. Wassaquam had appeared to accept this order; but now Wassaquam had implied that it was not because of Alan's order that he had refused reporters admission to the house.

Alan started and went quickly to the open door of his room, as he heard voices now somewhere within the house. One of the voices he recognized as Wassaquam's; the other indistinct, thick, accusing—was unknown to him; it certainly was not Spearman's. He descended swiftly to the first floor, and found Wassaquam standing in the front hall, alone.

"Who was here, Judah?" Alan demanded.

"A man," the Indian answered stolidly. "He was drunk; I put him out."

"What did he come for?"

"He came to see Ben. I put him out; he is gone, Alan."

Alan flung open the front door and looked out, but he saw no one.

"What did he want of Mr. Corvet, Judah?"

"I do not know. I told him Ben was not here; he was angry, but he went away."

"Has he ever come here before?"

"Yes; he comes twice."

"He has been here twice?"

"More than that; every year he comes twice, Alan. Once he came oftener."

"How long has he been doing that?"

"Since I can remember."

"Is he a friend of Mr. Corvet?"

"No friend—no!"

"But Mr. Corvet saw him when he came here?"

"Always, Alan."

"And you don't know at all what he came about?"

"How should I know? No; I do not."

Alan got his coat and hat. The sudden disappearance of the man might mean only that he had hurried away, but it might mean, too, that he was still lurking near the house. Alan had decided to make the circuit of the house and determine that. But as he came out on to the porch, a figure more than a block away to the south strode with uncertain step out into the light of a street lamp, halted and faced about, and shook his fist back at the house. Alan dragged the Indian out on to the porch.

"Is that the man, Judah?" he demanded.

"Yes, Alan."

Alan ran down the steps and at full speed after the man. But when he reached the corner, he was nowhere in sight. Alan retraced his steps for several blocks, still looking; then he gave it up and returned east toward the Drive.

The side street leading to the Drive was not well lighted; dark entry ways and alleys opened on it; but the night was clear. Alan could see at the end of the street, beyond the yellow glow of the distant boulevard lights, the smooth, chill surface of the lake. A white light rode above it; now, below the white light, he saw a red speck—the masthead and port lanterns of a steamer northward bound. Farther out, a second white glow appeared from behind the obscuration of the buildings and below it a green speck—a starboard light. Information he had gained enabled him to recognize in these lights two steamers passing one another at the harbor mouth.

His thoughts turned to Constance Sherrill. Events since he had talked with her that morning had put them far apart once more; but, in another way, they were being drawn closer together. For he knew now that she was caught as well as he in the mesh of consequences of acts not their own.

He staggered, slipped, fell suddenly forward upon his knees, under a stunning, crushing blow upon his head from behind. Thought, consciousness almost lost, he struggled, twisting himself about to grasp at his assailant. He caught the man's clothing, trying to drag himself up; fighting blindly, dazedly, unable to see or think, he shouted aloud and then again, aloud. He seemed in the distance to hear answering cries; but the weight and strength of the other was bearing him down again to his knees; he tried to slip aside from it, to rise. Then another blow, crushing and sickening, descended on his head; even hearing left him and, unconscious, he fell forward on to the snow and lay still.

CHAPTER IX.

A Walk Beside the Lake.

"The name seems like Sherrill," the interne agreed. "He said it before when we had him on the table upstairs; and he has said it now twice distinctly—Sherrill."

"His name, do you think?"

"I shouldn't say so; he seems trying to speak to some one named Sherrill. There are only four Sherrills in the telephone book, two of them in Evanston and one way out in Minoota."

"The other?"

"They're only about six blocks from where he was picked up; but they're on the Drive—the Lawrence Sherrills."

The interne whistled softly and looked more interestedly at his patient's features. "He'll be conscious some time during the day, there's only a slight fracture, and—perhaps you'd better call the Sherrill house, anyway. If he's not known there, no harm done; and if he's one of their friends and he should . . ."

The nurse nodded and moved off.

Thus it was that at a quarter to five Constance Sherrill was awakened by the knocking of one of the servants at her father's door. Her father went down stairs to the telephone instrument where he might reply without disturbing Mrs. Sherrill. Constance, kimona over her shoulders, stood at the top of the stairs and waited. It became plain to her at once that whatever had happened had been to Alan Conrad.

"Yes. . . . Yes. . . . You are giving him every possible care? . . . At once."

She ran part way down the stairs and met her father as he came up. He told her of the situation briefly.

"He was attacked on the street late last night; he was unconscious when they found him and took him to the hospital, and has been unconscious ever since. No one can say yet how seriously he is injured."

She waited in the hall while her father dressed, after calling the garage on the house telephone for him and ordering the motor. When he had gone, she returned anxiously to her rooms; he had promised to call her after reaching the hospital and as soon as he had learned the particulars of Alan's condition. It was ridiculous, of course, to attach any responsibility to her father or herself for what had happened to Alan—a street attack such as might have happened to any one—yet she felt that they were in part responsible. They had let him go to live alone in the house in Astor street with no better adviser than Wassaquam. Now, and perhaps because they had not warned him, he had met injury and, it might be, more than mere injury; he might be dying.

Something which had disturbed and excited Alan had happened to him on the first night he had passed in that house; and now, it appeared, he had been prevented from passing a second night there. What had prevented him had been an attempted robbery upon the street, her father had said. But suppose it had been something else than robbery.

She could not formulate more definitely this thought, but it persisted; she could not deny it entirely and shake it off.

To Alan Conrad, in the late afternoon of that day, this same thought was coming far more definitely and far more persistently. He had been awake and sane since shortly after noonday. The pain of a head which ached throbbingly and of a body bruised and sore was beginning to give place to a feeling merely of lassitude—a languor which revisited incoherence upon him when he tried to think. The man who had assailed him had meant to kill; he had not been any ordinary robber. That purpose, blindly recognized and fought against by Alan in their struggle, had been unmistakable. Only the chance presence of passersby, who had heard Alan's shouts and responded to them, had prevented the execution of his purpose, and had driven the man to swift flight for his own safety.

A little before six Constance Sherrill and Spearman called to inquire after him and were admitted for a few moments to his room. She came to him, bent over him, while she spoke the few words of sympathy the nurse allowed to her; she stood back then while Spearman spoke to him. In the succeeding days he saw her nearly every day, accompanied always by her father or Spearman; it was the full two weeks the doctors had insisted on his remaining in the hospital before he saw her alone.

They had brought him home, the day before—she and her father, in the motor—to the house on Astor street. He had insisted on returning there, refusing the room in their house which they had offered; but the doctor had enjoined outdoors and moderate exercise for him, and she had made him promise to come and walk with her. He went to the Sherrill house about ten o'clock, and they walked northward toward the park.

"There is something I have been wanting to ask you," she said.

"Yes."

"That night when you were hurt—it was for robbery, they said. What do you think about it?" She watched him as he looked at her and then away; but his face was completely expressionless.

"The proceedings were a little too rapid for me to judge, Miss Sherrill."

"But there was no demand upon you to give over your money before you were attacked?"

"No."

She breathed a little more quickly. "It must be a strange sensation," she observed, "to know that some one has tried to kill you."

"It must, indeed."

"You mean you didn't think that he tried to kill you?"

"I was hardly in a condition, Miss Sherrill, to appreciate anything about the man at all. Why do you ask?"

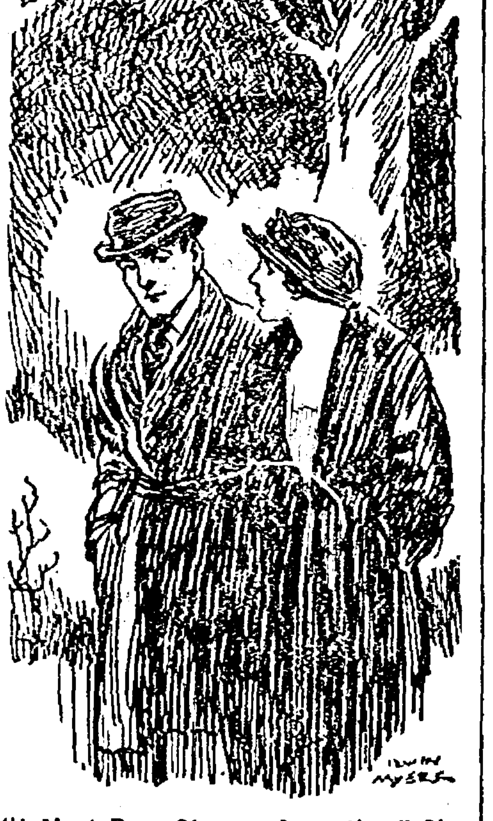
"Because—" She hesitated an instant. "If you were attacked to be killed, it meant that you must have been attacked as the son of—Mr. Corvet. Then that meant—at least it implied—that Mr. Corvet was killed, that he did not go away. You see that, of course."

"Were you the only one who thought that? Or did some one speak to you about it?"

"No one did; I spoke to father. He thought—"

"Yes."

"Well, if Mr. Corvet was murdered—I'm following what father thought, you understand—it involved something a good deal worse perhaps than anything that could have been involved if he had only gone away. The facts we had made it certain that—if what had happened to him was death at the hands of another—he must have foreseen that death and, seeking no protection for himself . . . it implied, that he preferred to die rather than to ask protection—that there was something whose concealment he thought mattered even more to him than life. It—it might have meant that he considered his life was . . . due to whomever took it." Her voice, which had become very low, now ceased. She was speaking to Alan of his father—a father whom he had never known, and whom he could not have recognized by sight until she showed him the picture a few weeks before; but she was speaking of his father.



"It Must Be a Strange Sensation," She Observed, "to Know That Someone Has Tried to Kill You."

"Mr. Sherrill didn't feel that it was necessary for him to do anything, even though he thought that?"

"If Mr. Corvet was dead, we could do him no good, surely, by telling this to the police; if the police succeeded in finding out all the facts, we would be doing only what Uncle Benny did not wish—what he preferred death to. We could not tell the police about it without telling them all about Mr. Corvet, too. So father would not let himself believe that you had been attacked to be killed. He had to believe the police theory was sufficient."

Alan made no comment at once. "Wassaquam believes Mr. Corvet is dead," he said finally. "He told me so. Does your father believe that?"

"I think he is beginning to believe it."

"I've not told any one," he said, now watching her, "how I happened to be out of the house that night. I followed a man who came there to the house. Wassaquam did not know his name. He did not know Mr. Corvet was gone; for he came there to see Mr. Corvet. He was not an ordinary friend of Mr. Corvet's; but he had come there often. Wassaquam did not know why. Wassaquam had sent the man away, and I ran out after him; but I could not find him."

He stopped an instant, studying her. "That was not the first man who came to the house," he went on quickly, as she was about to speak. "I found a man in Mr. Corvet's house the first night that I spent there. Wassaquam was away, you remember, and I was alone in the house."

"A man there in the house?" she repeated.

"He was going through Mr. Corvet's things—not the silver and all that, but through his desks and files and cases. He was looking for something—something which he seemed to want very much; when I interfered, it greatly excited him. I frightened him. He thought I was a ghost."

"A ghost. Whose ghost?"

He shrugged. "I don't know; some one whom he seemed to have known pretty well—and whom Mr. Corvet knew, he thought."

"Why didn't you tell us this before?"

"At least—I am telling you now, Miss Sherrill. I frightened him, and he got away. But I had seen him plainly. I can describe him. . . . You've talked with your father of the possibility that something might 'happen' to me such as, perhaps, happened to Mr. Corvet. If anything does happen to me, a description of the man may . . . prove useful."

Then clearly and definitely as he could, he described Spearman to her. She did not recognize the description; he had known she would not. Had not Spearman been in Duluth? Beyond that, was not connection of Spearman with the prowler in Corvet's house the one connection of all most difficult for her to make? But he saw her fixing and recording the description in her mind.

They were silent as they went on toward her home. He had said all he could, or dared to say; to tell her that the man had been Spearman would not merely have awakened her incredulity; it would have destroyed credence utterly. A definite change in their relation to one another had taken place during their walk. The fullness of the sympathy there had been between them almost from their first meeting, had gone; she was quite aware, he saw, that he had not frankly answered her questions; she was aware that in some way he had drawn back from her and shut her out from his thoughts about his own position here. But he had known that this must be so; it had been his first definite realization after his return to consciousness in the hospital when, knowing now her relation to Spearman, he had found all questions which concerned his relations with the people here made immeasurably more acute by the attack upon him.

She asked him to come in and stay for luncheon, as they reached her home, but she asked it without urging; at his refusal she moved slowly up the steps. Looking after him from the window after she had entered the house, she saw him turn the corner in the direction of Astor street.

CHAPTER X.

A Caller.

As the first of the month was approaching, Wassaquam had brought his household bills and budget to Alan that morning directly after breakfast. To furnish Alan with whatever sums he needed, Sherrill had made a considerable deposit in Alan's name in the bank where he carried his own account; and Alan had accompanied Sherrill to the bank to be introduced and had signed the necessary cards in order to check against the deposit.

Alan had required barely half of the hundred dollars which Benjamin Corvet had sent to Blue Rapids, for his expenses in Chicago; and he had brought with him from "home" a hundred dollars of his own.

The amount which Wassaquam now desired to pay the bills was much more than Alan had on hand; but that amount was also much less than the eleven hundred dollars which the servant listed as cash on hand. This, Wassaquam stated, was in currency and kept by him. Benjamin always had had him keep that much in the house; Wassaquam would not touch that sum now for the payment of current expenses.

On the first of the month, therefore, Alan drew upon his new bank account to Wassaquam's order, and in the early afternoon Wassaquam went to the bank to cash his check—one of the very few occasions when Alan had been left in the house alone; Wassaquam's habit, it appeared, was to go about on the first of the month and pay the tradesmen in person.

Some two hours later, and before Wassaquam could have been expected back, Alan, in the room which had become his, was startled by a sound of heavy pounding, which came suddenly to him from a floor below. Shouts—heavy, thick, and unintelligible—mingled with the pounding. He ran swiftly down the stairs, then on and down the service stairs into the basement. The door to the house from the areaway was shaking to irregular, heavy blows, which stopped as Alan reached the lower hallway; the shouts continued still a moment more. Now that the noise of pounding did not interfere, Alan could make out what the man was saying. "Ben Corvet!"—the name was almost unintelligible—"Ben Corvet! Ben!" Then the shouts stopped, too.

Alan sped to the door and turned back the latch. The door bore back upon him, not from a push, but from a weight without which had fallen against it. A big, heavy man, with a rough cap and mackinaw coat, would have fallen upon the floor if Alan had not caught him. His weight in Alan's arms was so dull, so inert, that, if violence had been his intention, there was nothing to be feared from him now. Alan looked up, therefore, to see if any one had come with him. The alley and the street were clear. The snow in the areaway showed that the man had come to the door alone and with great difficulty; he had fallen once upon the walk. Alan dragged the man into the house and went back and closed the door.

He returned and looked at him. The man was like, very like the one whom Alan had followed from the house on the night when he was attacked; certainty that this was the same man came quickly to him. He seized the fellow again and dragged him up the stairs and to the lounge in the library. He was, or had been, a very powerful man, broad and thick through with overdeveloped — almost distorting—muscles in his shoulders; but his body had become fat and soft, his face was puffed and his eyes watery and bright; his brown hair, which was shot all through with gray, was dirty and matted; he had three or four days' growth of beard. When he sat up and looked about it was plain that whisky was only one of the forces working upon him—the other was fever which burned up and sustained him intermittently.

"'Lo!" he greeted Alan. "Where's shat d—n Injin, hey? I knew Ben Corvet was shere—knew he was shere all time. 'Course he's shere; he got to be shere. That's shright. You go get 'im!"

"Who are you?" Alan asked.

"Say, who'r you? What t'hells syou doin' here? Never see you before . . . go—go get Ben Corvet. Jus' say Ben Corvet, Lu—luke's shere. Ben Corvet'll know Lu—luke all right; alwaysh, alwaysh knows me. . . ."

"What's the matter with you?"

MINISTERS ASSOCIATION

At the call of the ministers association of Clarion the ministers of Wright County met at Clarion on last Friday and spent the day in a discussion of some of the vital questions in the ministers life and work.

There were eleven ministers of the county present from all parts of the county. Rev. A. H. Waalkes discussed the question of the "Cultivation of the Ministers Devotional Life." Rev. Tomkinson of Rowan. the question of "The Preaching that Meets the Needs of the Times." Rev. Walker of Clarion, "The Practical Value of the Mid Week Church Night." There were other discussions and a good time was enjoyed by all present. We feel that we know our fellow workers better and that we will be the better able to accomplish the work we have to do.

A permanant organization was formed with Rev. Jamison as President and Rev. Viche as secretary. The next meeting will be held on the first Tuesday of September and it is hoped to have all the ministers of the county present at that time.

Mrs. Tom Cullinan returned the first of the week from Ames, where she went to attend the Commencement exercises at the Iowa State College, where her son, Chester, graduated. Chester will teach at Cedar Falls, having agriculture classes. Mrs. Cullinan reports the exercises as very injoyable, and as we heard them via Radio from the Engineering Department of the college, we can agree with her. Ames has an excellent broadcasting station and the addresses were very plain.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Tracy came last week from Sisseton, South Dakota, for a visit at the home of his father and sister, O. G. Tracy and Miss Maye, and with other relatives and friends. "Pete" who is in the milling and produce business at Sisseton, has been making a fine success and reports business as rushing in his line.

John Campbell has started the erection of a fine new modern home on his farm south of town, upon the site where the Campbell home was burned to the ground last winter.

Frank Walters has been making some improvements on his farm home, building an addition to the house and remodeling the old part.

Mrs. Eugene Kinney is still at the hospital in Rochester, and had not returned as reported last week in the Independent.

Kanawha will hold a big Creamery picnic at that town on June 29th. A big time is reported being prepared.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Steinlicht and children drove down from Kanawha last Saturday to spend the week end with Belmond relatives and friends They were formerly residents here, and are now farm six miles west of Knawaha. We can forgive Henry moving to Kanawha, but if he ruts for their ball team ———.

Found—Pocket book containing money. Owner can have same by calling at this office and proving property.

Mrs. Frank Christie was operated on at the hospital for acute appendicites last Saturday.

Mr. Chris Friesleben went to Manson Sunday where he will visit at the home of his daughter.

What might have been a very serious auto accident occured Saturday evening, upon east main street, when a Ford struck a rut and capsized. The upset took place about half way between the Rock Island tracks and north and south turn in the road. While the car was reported to have carried four or five persons we understand that no one was injured. We were unable to learn the name of the driver.

J. W. Scott and friends motored to Clear Lake Sunday in an effort to find respite from the torrid weather of the last few days. We surmise that they intend to try their hands at the sport made famous by Issac Walton and expect to receive reports of a record catch.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. McGuire and family motored to Waterloo on Monday of this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Obrecht of Thornton were guests of friends here on Monday evening.

Alex McGregor of Des Moines came up Monday of this week to look after some business interests in this locality.

Henry Christ returned the first of the week from his trip to points in the east.

Randall Klemme, who has been visiting his aunt, Mrs. Stanley Stanberry at Mason City, returned Tuesday, Mrs. Stanberry returning with him for a short visit at the R. H. Klemme home.

REWARD will be given for the return of "Toodles," a Boston Bull dog, black with white ring around her neck.—T. L. Finn, Belmond.

Lost—Between Ventura and Meservey, auto camping tent and bed. Finder notify D. C. Petheran, Kanawha, for reward.

Rev. Wilkinson autoed to Algona, Wednesday, to the Epworth League convention being held there. He took a load of young people with him.

Miss Cloe Jenison, who has been attending Iowa State College came home Saturday for her summer vacation. She was accompanied by Prof. W. M. Dunlap, who came for a few days visit.

Mrs. J. H. Fetrow left last week for Rochester, where she will receive treatment at the hospital there. She was accompanied by Mrs. C. C. Landon, who will also take treatment. Mrs. Landon is effected with a peculiar ailment, in that she sneezes incessantly.

Mrs. Frank Baldridge was a caller at Mason City on Tuesday doing some shopping.

Mrs. Frank Snyder was at Thornton on Tuesday, looking after some business matters.

Anna Massman, who has been visiting relatives here for several weeks, started Monday on her return trip to her home in California.

Mrs. W. A. Parsons and daughter, Mildred, went to Algona Tuesday where they attended a Rebekah convention held at that place on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Chris Kragh were Clear Lake visitors Sunday, driving up in their car.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Johnson and family of Latimer were recent visitors at the home of relatives here.

Harry Webb, who came home from Morningside College last week for a few days' visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edd Webb, left last Thursday for Ottosen, Iowa, where he will have charge of a church during the summer. Harry, in his studies for the ministery, is making splendid progress.

Mrs. Otto Tegland and son from Clarion, both underwent minor operations at the local hospital yesterday, both having their tonsils removed.

Herman Frohling is improving one of his farms by the erection of a big, new modern corn crib.

The regular monthly meeting of the M. E. Aid society will be held today at the home of Mrs. Peter Stacy, the hostesses being Mesdames Stacy, Wolle and Mac Thompson.

Beatrice Strieby underwent a minor operation at the local hospital Tuesday, for removal of her tonsils.

Lud Johnson has been on the list of ailing the past week or so, suffering from rheumatism.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Guest are rejoicing over the arrival of a baby girl, Doris June, last Tuesday.

Last Friday afternoon about 25 friends and relatives of Mrs. Alice Sorenson gathered at her home, where they held a shower in her honor. Mrs. Sorenson received many pretty and useful gifts.

Mrs. E. J. Schneider of Goodell had an operation for acute appendicitis at the Steel hospital last Saturday, she is recovering nicely.

VOL. 3 BELMOND, IOWA, THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1922 NO. 31

OVERHAULING OF SUGAR FACTORY GOING ON

Endeavoring To Save Co. Nurse Activities

Recent Unfavorable Vote On Nurse Believed Due To Other Circumstances

RED CROSS TO SUPPORT

At a meeting of the County Federation of Women's Clubs at Eagle Grove last week the County Nurse question was discussed very earnestly and thoroly. It was felt that a great many the county over especially among the women, had not fully understood the importance of this matter as it was presented at the June primaries, and definite action was taken, authorizing a house to house canvass.

Following the meeting of the Eagle Grove, Belmond and Clarion Red Cross Chapters on Wednesday, the women of the county organized, with a chairman in each town and township, purposing to circulate a petition asking the Board of Supervisors to re-submit the county nurse proposition at the fall election. The friends of the measure are urged to give every possible aid in individual action and in getting the truth before the people.

The followng facts have been compiled from the public records in the office of the County Nurse, the County Treasurer's office and from other sources and are absolutely authentic:

The salary of Miss Liddle is $2,000 per year.

The salary of her assistant was $1,500 a year.

The county paid Miss Liddle's salary and $1,000 toward the salary of the assistant. The Red Cross Chapters paid all other expenses.

The levy covering this appropriation of $3,000 by the county is .000232 on the dollar, or about 15c on the average town lot. 75c on a quarter section of land, $1.50 on a half section.

There are 127 schools in the county with about 4,882 pupils. During the past two years four inspections have been given in most of these schools. As a result of these inspections, 465 corrections of defects found have been made as follows: Tonsils and adenoids removed 143; deafness treated, 7; eyes treated 85; teeth repaired 230.

1,171 homes have been visited.

The percentage of children 7 per cent or more underweight has been reduced from 37 to 32 per cent.

Under the Perkins law, children who are unable to pay, by filling out certain papers are sent to the big new children's hospital for free treatment. In 21 cases, the Perkins law papers have been prepared and six of the children taken to Iowa City personally.

The work of the County Nurse is to help stamp out epedemics, to discover the sick and the afflicted and to help them to a cure thru the family physician. But more than this, her great aim is Prevention. Thru her efforts parents and children are helped to so build the bodies that they will be brought to the highest possible degree of perfection which means a maximum of ability and happiness, and a minimum of public expense, suffering and mental and physical inefficiency. It is only good citizenship to see that such a specialist is provided for Young America.

Someone asks: "What does the county nurse do?" We give below just a part of her program. Can you beat it!

She visits the schools in the county, trying to make the rounds twice a year.

She follows up special cases discovered thru the school inspections, giving help thru the homes.

She visits homes in response to calls—maternity, tuberculosis, mental hygiene, etc. giving actual bedside care whenever possible.

She encourages hot lunches in the school and all other measures for the benefit of the children.

Conducts home hygiene classes and talks before mothers' clubs whenever asked.

Holds Baby Conferences with mothers at the school houses and helps with the children of pre-school age.

Helps stamp out epedemics.

Follows up all cases discharged from Oakdale, also all Perkins cases who come home from hospital but must return for further treatment..

Each day brings a new and varied call.

The district chairmen are as follows:

Troy—Mrs. Fred Allen.
Eagle Grove—Mrs. Tobias Paulson.
Boone—Mrs. Edith Eastman.

"NURSE"

News: The Wright County Red Cross is going to continue Miss Liddle as county nurse, at least until January first, and that meeting held Wednesday afternoon, at the courthouse also voted to again present the matter to the people at the November elections, petitions for the special election to be circulated in the meantime and the supervisors asked to call the special election.

Friends of the Health Nurse believe that a new election will see a reversal of the popular vote of the June 5th primary, and feel assured that the people will return a majority for county funds for the work.

Miss Eddy, who has been assisting Miss Liddle in the work, will be released. She is now enjoying a month's vacation, and will be given pay for this month, after which her services will not be required under the new plan.

Around a hundred and twenty-five were present at the Wednesday meeting. Most of these were women. Mrs. A. E. Weber of Clarion, was chairman. There was a disposition at the beginning to continue the work with both nurses, but it was soon found that the funds available would not permit this. Then it was decided that any drive for funds to meet the expense would not result favorably. Miss Liddle can be retained by support from the County Red Cross.

Eagle Grove, represented at the board there was going to discontinue the school nurse, and would expect to share in Miss Liddle's time. Some of the Red Cross workers feel that in view of this fact, one nurse cannot do half the work that is required and wanted both nurses retained, but very graciously acquiesced when it was found finances were too low to permit both nurses to be retained.

R. W. Birdsall, of Dows, criticised the work in that the Dows schools had only two visits from Miss Liddle during the year. He also stated that some of the doctors there doubted the value of the work as it was being carried on, and were more or less opposed to it. Mr. Birdsall thought it strange that the physicians of Wright couny, who naturally would be in a position to know best whether or not the work was worth its cost, had never publically espoused the cause of the health nurse.

Later Dr. E. D. Tomkins explained this by saying that while it was true some doctors did not apparently favor the nurse, he believed the majority did, and the only reason they had not endorsed her work was for fear that people might get the idea that the nurse was plugging for the doctors and the doctors, therefore, were anxious to have her retained.

The criticism that some of the operative cases sent to Iowa City could have been handled at home, was partly true and partly wrong, according to Dr. Tomkins. In one instance, he said, no one in the county could give the same service that was secured at the state hospital at Iowa City. In other instances he said the operations could have been had here, but explained: "There was no money in it, so why should any other doctor kick about not getting the work?"

Mrs. Weber explained that the reports frequently heard of wrong diagnosis were untrue, for Miss Liddle never diagonosed a case. She would advise that she believed certain conditions existed, but always made it a point to suggest that the child be taken to the family physician for diagnosis. She did not believe that the county nurse was advising any particular physician or physicians, as had been suggested.

Rev. Mr. Jamison, of the Presbyterian church in Clarion, made a splendid short plea for the continuance of the work. He believed in time the people would realize its value, and favor it, but until that time did come he pledged his individual support to the work as a benevolence the friends of the work should gladly support.

Several of the ladies present gave little talks on the practical side of the work and the benefits it had been to their families.

The Red Cross will finance the work after July first, when it is expected county funds will be withdrawn. In the meantime the petitions asking for a special election on the matter will be circulated, and this election will be held at the regular November election, and then if the voters authorize the Supervisors to continue county support two nurses will be used. Should the vote be unfavorable as no one anticipates, the work will probably be dropped next year.

FIRST BALL GAME GOES TO EAGLE GROVE, 13-6

Timely Swats Combined With Many Errors Give Visitors Ragged Game

Eagle Grove's ball team came over Sunday and after two hours of mauling the ball, went home with the long end of a 13 to 6 score. It was a case of the best team winning, and they won. The Eagles garnered around 13 hits, to the locals half a dozen, and their hits were timely, coming with men on bases. The hits, combined with poor fielding on the part of Belmond, and some bonehead errors, caused the lopsided result.

Eagle Grove scored in the first, and in their half Belmond shoved across two. The second saw two more runs go over for the visitors, and after that they just gradually stepped along, making five runs on two hits and four errors in one inning. Belmond couldn't swat the pill when swats were needed. Errors were many, Eagle making some boneheads along with the locals. Three base hits by Dillon ond Foss were the hitting features, Foss stretching his to home on a bum throw to catch him at third. Some sensational fielding was displayed, by the Belmond team, at times, but they showed a lack of training and practice. The team, with practice, will be a corking good one, but performing the way they did Sunday will never get anywhere.

A large crowd saw the event, and dispite the ragged playing enjoyed the cleanly fought contest. With a few more games and some limbering up in practice, the boys ought to give a mighty good account of themselves. They have the material for a fine team and before the summer is over, if they keep going, will give any team in this neck of the woods a real scrap.

OBITUARY

Martha R. Dean was born in Jackson County, State of Missouri, June 12th, 1847, and was united in marriage with Joseph R. Stanley, June 24th, 1864, in the same county of her birth.

Mrs. Stanley had been confined to her home for many months, all owing to a fall which she suffered some time preceding, which was the immediate cause of her demise, which occured upon the 5th day of June, 1922.

It can be truthfully said of Mrs. Stanley, that during all of her illness, that she bore the same unflinchingly, without complaint, all of which was fortified through her strong religious convictions she has been for more than a quarter of a century a member Methodist Episcopal church. That during her residence in this city, she made many and fast friends, who now join with the immediate members of her family in their great loss.

To this union four children were born, two sons and two daughters, two of whom, Wm. E. Stanley and Lulu Stanley, have passed to their reward; the remaining son and daughter, Fred Stanley, resides at Holton, Kansas, while Mrs. H. N. Hill resides at Belmond, Iowa.

The funeral exercises were held at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. N. Hill, Rev. Wilkinson, officiating; following which the remains were placed at rest, in our beautiful Evergreen Cemetery.

LAKE ROAD TO BE GRAVELED THIS FALL

We are told that the township trustees of Belmond township expect to gravel the road leading to Morse Lake this fall. The road we understand, is to be placed in shape this summer—grading and leveling—and this fall the road will be graveled from the Martin corner west and south to the lake. This will make a fine improvement, and the Belmond township trustees are to be congratulated upon their progressiveness.

FARM BUREAU PICNIC TO BE BIG AFFAIR

Many Fine Attractions Are Planned For Annual Affair Held July 4th

The county wide picnic which is being planned by the county farm bureau in cooperation with the various towns of the county will be held in the grove on the Warner estate, which is located six miles east and one and one-half north of Clarion instead of Pike's timber as announced originally. The picnic ground is less than one-half mile off the Clarion-Belmond gravel road.

The committees having charge of the various departments have plans quite well organized for a "riprousing" good time. Most towns of the county are giving their loyal support to this county wide proposition and many of the townships have already sent in their contributions. Arrangements have been made for Congressman L. R. Dickinson, of Algona and Mrs. Ellsworth Richardson of Pella to speak at the picnic. Members of the executive committee having of all plans for the picnic are as follows: J. E. Lamb, chairman, Harry Woodley, grounds; O. P. Morton, entertainment; Mrs. E. E. Evans, program; Harry Poundstone, band; J. E. Lamb, sports; H. Sumners, concessions, Will Tillman, finance; Mrs. Harry Woodley, decorations; M. L. Clark, marshal of the day.

THROWS ROCK AT CAR; HITS WOMAN IN EYE

Thursday evening while Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Amundsen and Mr. and Mrs. Pete Shoemaker were out driving, the five-year-old son of Ralph Chapman playfully threw a rock at the car as it was passing and the missile struck Mrs. Amundsen in the eye, making a very painful injury which caused her to temporarily lose the sight of the eye.

The little tot did not realize the danger of his act, but parents should caution children even of such tender ages that it is dangerous to throw at cars.—news.

CAR RUNS IN DITCH

Bob Coulson met with an unfortunate accident Monday, when the car he was driving went in the ditch on the road near the Barry farm. Bob suffered a collar bone broken in two places, besides numerous bruises and scratches. The car was pretty well battered up.

CLARION MAN SAYS CALIFORNIA IN BOOM

News: W. A. Stark, pioneer business man of Clarion who is home from several month's sojourn in California, declares he has never before seen the like of the California boom. Nowhere in Iowa's palmiest days of our 1918-20 land boom did we approach the California showing of wild speculation. Land and lots change hands; buildings go up and come down to make room for new and larger structures; speculators go broke, perhaps, but cross over to another side of the street and make another stake. Even the merchantile business is picking up and tho a slump did set in early in the year, now the business man say business is better than last year, which to a Californian means that it is better than ever.

OBITUARY

Mary Teresa Finn, daughter of Thomas and Julia Finn, was born on a farm one mile east of Belmond, January 19, 1873 and died in a hospital at Rochester, Minnesota, June 12, 1922, 49 years, 4 months and 23 days of age. In 1899 she moved with her parents to Belmond where they spent the remainder of their lives.

On April 16, 1901 she was united in marriage to Win Dziewanowski, to which union were born three children, one of whom preceded her in death, William having died in infancy thirteen years ago. She leaves to mourn her death her husband, two children, Thomas and Gladys, five brothers, Dave of Goodell, William of Mason City, Tom, Jack and Jim of Belmond, and three sisters, Nora and Kate of Belmond, and Mrs. Walter Courtney of Thornton, besides many other relatives and a host of friends.

On June 6, accompanied by her husband and her sister, Miss Kate Finn, Mrs. Dziewanowski went to Rochester to enter the hospital and receive treatment for goiter. Upon arrival her weakened condition would not permit the anticipated operation, but until Friday it was thought she was gaining strength, at which time she began to show signs of greater weakness and gradually failed until the end came about 6 o'clock Monday afternoon. Relatives here were notified of her serious condition and answered the summons to her bedside immediately. The remains were brot to Belmond Tuesday afternoon, accompanied by relatives. Thus has departed the life of a true friend, a devoted mother and an affectionate and thoughtful wife.

The funeral was held Thursday, June 15 at 9:30 a. m. from St. Francis Catholic Church, Rev. Father Eardley celebrating Requien High Mass and officiating at the grave. At the completion of Mass, Father Eardley delivered the funeral sermon and paid beautiful tribute to the life of Mrs. Dziewanowski. The church was filled with sorrowing relatives and friends who gathered to pay their last respects to the mortal remains. The spiritual and floral offerings were numerous and beautiful, an evidence of the esteem in which the deceased was held.

The funeral was conducted by Mr. Fred D. Fulton. The palbearers were W. J. McLaughlin, Peter Kaufman, M. A. Holtzbauer, J. F. Barry, J. J. Barry and Geo. G. Brady. Out of town people who attended the funeral were Mr. McKola Dziewanowski of Rutland, Iowa, Mrs. John Harriet of Hampton, Mrs. Mary Dorsey of Rockwell and Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Courtney of Thornton.

Though she's gone she's not forgotten
In our memories she'll remain;
Though this parting be so painful,
We may some day meet again.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for the many acts of helpfulness and words of sympathy tendered us during the illness and death of our wife, mother and sister, and for all the spiritual boquets and floral offerings. Also the Choir of St. Francis' church and those who took charge of the flowers.

Win Dziewanowski and children.
The brothers and sisters.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Last Sunday we reached our mark for attendance so we had to set a new one which we hope to reach next Sunday. Remember to be sure and be present for it only takes two more Sundays like last to get that picnic. Every one in his place next Sunday with someone who is not now in Sunday school.

There will be no preaching services Sunday morning as the pastor and Mrs. Leinbach will be at Kansas City Mo., attending the 10th International Sunday School convention. The young people's meeting at 7:30 and at 8:15. Miss Beatrice Leinbach will give the fourth stereoptican lecture on the life of St. Paul. Be sure and be present for the evening services.

The Ladies Missionary society will hold their annual dollar meeting at the home of Mrs. W. C. Tyrrell, Jr., on Thursday afternoon. Anyone wishing to go who has no way of going is asked to come to the church at 2:15 and a way will be provided for you. This is one of the great meetings of the year and it is hoped that a large number will be there who are not accustomed to go.

GIVES CHEESE DEMONSTRATION

Mrs. J. F. Henn gave a demonstration of cheese making one evening last week, to a number of neighbor ladies, at her home east of town. About 50 ladies were present, several from considerable distance, to witness the demonstration. Mrs. Henn has made a number of the "home made" cheeses, and that they are a toothsome morsel we can testify, thanks to the maker. This is a part of the Farm Bureau work inasmuch as it was thru this organization that Mrs. Henn learned the art for which she is gaining a widespread reputation.

Additional Crew To Be Added July 1st

Fine Progress Being Made Toward Getting Plant Ready For Operation

BEET PROSPECTS GOOD

Work in repairing and overhauling the factory of the Iowa Valley Sugar Co. at Belmond is going forward, and excellent progress is being made towards getting the plant in shape for the coming operating season. A crew of ten men are now at work, and the first of July more will be added. Mr. Tyrrell, President of the company, states that it is the policy of the company to employ so far as possible all home men, so that next year and in the years to come these men will be familiar with the work of overhauling.

H. K. Dyer, a brother of the head of the Dyer Company, is on the job overseeing the work of overhauling, and will remain until the campaign of sugar making is closed. The officials of the Iowa Valley Company are much pleased that Mr. Dyer is with them, as he is an experienced sugar man, having been in the game for 24 years, and under his supervision the Iowa Valley Company is assured of a complete and thoro job. One of the officials of the Mason City sugar company recently inspected the Belmond plant and stated that he had never seen a plant in better shape.

Prospects for the beet yield are good, with the exception of the late planting, which needs rain. All the indications for the operating campaign are highly favorable, and Belmond and vicinity may look forward to their greatest industry going full blast this fall with a successful run.

TO GRAVEL GROVE ROAD

Joe Sampson has been circulating a petition the past week to gravel the road leading thru the grove, from the Catholic cemetery east, and thence south to the township line. As we understand it, the township gives the gravel and gets the road in shape, and the hauling is donated by farmers and citizens in Belmond. The road is now graveled to the Catholic cemetery. Joe's petition was liberally signed. Let the good work go on; who will start it on another road?

REVISITS OLD TIME HOME

Mr. and Mrsr. James Johnson, who now reside at Coulee North Dakota, are here visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Johnson, and with other relatives and friends in this locality. Mr. Johnson was one of the early settlers in this community, coming here from Wisconsin by ox team. He built his first home with lumber he brought from Clear Lake, building on a farm a mile west of the St. Olaf church. He was postmaster at Olaf before the railroad came thru.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our neighbors, friends and the Ladies Aid societies for the flowers and kindness shown during the sickness and death of our mother, Mrs. Andrew Bohning.

The Children.

ACCIDENT VICTIMS ALL RECOVERING

The young people who were injured in the automobile accident a week ago Sunday evening, are all recovering nicely and have returned to their homes. Linn Huntley, who was injured the worst, has returned to his home near Clarion and is reported doing nicely, with probably no ill affects from his injuries. Miss Schultz is home and rapidly recovering. We understand that the authorities at Garner are arranging to post signs at the curve where the accident occured, warning drivers of the sharp turn.

PLEASE HELP US OUT

We want to ask a favor of our readers, and that is, to get any copy you have for publication in to the office as early as you can. We often have copy come in on Tuesday and Wednesday, which might just as well have been sent in Friday or Saturday of the week before. On Tuesday and Wednesday our linotype operator has her hands full to get up the type, whereas during the last of the week, after the paper is printed for the week, she has time in which much could be put into type. We are always glad to have our readers send in "copy," and urge them to do so, for we want the Independent to be your paper to the fullest extent, but, when possible, please send it in early. Thanks.

Standard Service

With our experience and equipment we have a notion that we could work out a pretty fair sort of battery service without much help.

But we also have an idea that it wouldn't measure up to the brand of service developed for our use by the Willard Storage Battery Company.

As Battery Headquarters we have the benefit of their years of experience, and of the definite national standards of service they have been able to develop as a result.

Come in! No matter what make of battery you happen to have it needs the sort of attention provided by the Willard Standard of Service.

GIVE BROOKHART A CHANCE

Brookhart's winning in the primary seems to have been a bitter dose to a lot of folks, who have utilized every opportunity since to swing the hammer, to knock and kick the gentleman, his ideas, platform, and abilities. What's the use? Brookhart was choosen by a majority of the people; regardless of who elected him, or what factions supported him, he received the majority; then why not give him a chance to put his theories into practice? If they are so utterly impractical as some claim, the public will mighty soon find it out—and find Brookhart out. If his ideas are of practical nature, then the state needs them badly.

American government is based on majority rule; when the Constitution was drafted, the makers didn't say anything about the majority having to consult the minority after the governors were chosen. We believe in giving any man a chance, and in Brookhart's case, while this paper did not support him, nevertheless it is our opinion that, having been elected—or practically so—he should receive the support of the people until he proves himself unworthy of it. In law, every man is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Actually, however, we presume him guilty until proven innocent, and a lot of the newspapers over the state, together with a bunch of disappointed politicians, are presuming that Brookhart is a Socialist, an I. W. W., a dreamer with impractical ideas, and are holding him "guilty" until proven innocent.

Give the devil his due. Brookhart was chosen by the majority; he is the popular choice; give him your support until you find that he doesn't deserve it. This country needs some fresh ideas; needs them mighty badly; perhaps Brookhart's "Impractical" ideas may prove to be really worth something. He'll never know—and neither will the rest of us—until he tries to put them to work.

CLIPPINGS

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Commercial Club last week it was decided to go ahead with the arrangements to put the city park in proper condition for the use of tourists. Mayor Pritchard conferred with the committee and since then has had the city water supertendent put city water in the park.

Signs have been painted and placed at the important corners directing tourists to the "Tourjsts Park." Toilets have been installed and men are at work moving a building to the park which will be fitted up with a stove. There is quite a lot of wood in the park that can be used for cooking, and all around we will have as nice a tourist park as any town in this part of Iowa.—Garner Leader.

Although Monday was a fine day and the corn needed plowing, Ed Simpson didn't put in a full day in the field. Ed started out at the usual early hour with good intentions but upon reaching the field found that somebody had stolen the shovels, shanks and shields off his new two-row cultivator. This dastardly deed was committed sometime Sunday night as the implement was in good shape until dark that day. Ed was was knocked out of a days work and it cost him about $20 for repairs. If he could just lay hands on the thief and only did half the things he says he would there would be a funeral. There would be a big crowd at the funeral too, but no mourners, and this paper would take pleasure in publishing the obituary.—Renwick Times.

The first band concert of the season was given last evening. This is the first concert given since Harry Keelel took over the band and was probably the best concert we have had for several years. Mr. Keeler is an exceptional instructor and the boys are making the best of the opportunity to work under him. Several of the boys who were in the band a number of years ago were back on the job last night, as well as standbys. Garner has a good band and the concerts will become better each week. The crowd last night was large for the first concert, and as the season progress the crowd will become larger.—Signal.

Farm Bureau News

By R. M. Edwards

Will Vote on Ship Subsidy Question

Through the medium of a statewide referendum members of the Ia. Farm Bureau Federation will be given an opportunity to express their opinions on the ship subsidy bill which is now under consideration by congress.

Farm bureau meetings will be called in every township in the state, about seventeen hundred in number. At these meetings the bill will be taken up for discussion. Its various provisions and requirements will be explained, after which a vote will be taken and the results sent to federation headquarters in Des Moines.

While the referendum is really one of the underlying principles of farm bureau federation procedure, this vote is being instituted more especially in response to numerous demands made to the officials, by letter and otherwise, that the membership be given an opportunity to go on record on this question, and the tone of the requests indicate that farmer sentiment is very much alive toward it.

Much propaganda has been circulated in Iowa setting forth the benefits it is believed might accrue to the nation from a ship subsidy, but little or nothing in regard to the actual provisions of the bill itself. The farmers want to know just what the bill proposes to do and what it will cost the government to carry it on. The federation policy is to make everything clear to the individual member in order that he may think it out and settle for it himself.

Appropriation for T. B. Testing

Congress has recently passed the Agricultural Appropriation bill in which provision is made for an appropriation of over $2,000,000 to be used for paying federal indemnity on cattle found to be tubercular in the cooperative tuberculin test.

These funds will be available July 1, and it is hoped that since Wright county has seventy-six applications filed at the state veterinarian's office we will be one of the first counties to receive the help in the tuberculin work.

From general appearance it is not always evident that the cows are in a subnormal condition. We are all familiar with the case in Paris county, Illinois, where one cow that was tested seemed to be in such good flesh that the owner was sure that the test was wrong and gave the cow to a hired man in lieu of a debt. Both parties seemed to have thought that the test was wrong and the cow was in perfect condition. After a few month's a physician diagnosed the illness of a five year old daughter as tuberculosis. The cow was suspected, slaughtered and found to have a generalizel case of tuberculosis. Lesions were found in both lungs, all important glands of the body, liver and udder. A pig and four little cats had been fed milk from the same cow. Post mortem examination showed that they had generalized cases of tuberculosis. The Kelly family became alarmed and had their other six children examined. The baby had never been given cow's milk and the oldest daughter seldom drank milk. The other four children had enlarged glands which the physician pronounced as glandular tuberculosis.

A few months ago an Iowa mother of three children became convinced that is was unsafe to feed children milk from untested cows, and persuaded her husband to have their herd of fifteen cows tested. Twelve out of fifteen reacted to the test. It was not until after the husband watched the slaughtering of his healthy looking cows that he could believe that the cows were tubercular. Needless to say the father and mother are much concerned about the health of their children.

The table taken from Farmers' bulletin 1069, "Tuberculosis in Live Stock," gives a clear idea of the loss for the past fifteen years. It shows that in 1921, 8,179,572 cattle were slaughtered and that out of this number 33,328 were condemned on account of T. B.

This means that enough meat is condemned each year because of tuberculosis to feed nearly 54,000 families, allowing 100 pounds of meat to each person. In other words enough meat was condemned in 1921 to supply a city of 250,000 inhabitants with meat for a year. It means that we throw into tanks to be destroyed one hundred trains of forty car loads each because of tuerculosis contamination. This helps in the high cost of living and is a preventable waste.

Garment Club Leaders Meet

Mrs. Marie Berry, assistant state leader of Girls' club work, met with the leaders of eight garment clubs at the county agent's office Wednesday, June 14th, for the purpose of making plans for the club work of this season. Mrs. Berry spoke very highly of the splendid club organizations which the girls of the county have developed and complimented the leaders for their efforts in organizing the work. Mrs. Berry lectured and demonstrated on the following subjects: Appropriateness in dress; appropriate trimmings and proper seams for undergarments; sensible shoes; color schemes; attachments and use of sewing machines.

It should be remembered that the success of the garment clubs in the county rests with the leaders of the work and due credit should be given the unselfish leaders, who have so willingly volunteered their time and energy in this great work of directing the club girls in their sewing, with no thought in mind except that of helping the girls to better and bigger things as homemakers.

Following is the list of garment clubs of Wright county and the leaders in attendance at this meeting:

Lincoln Learning Lassies, Miss Edith Waddell.

Live Wires (Dayton) Miss Amy Benson.

Tri-G (Grant), Mrs. L. F. Dorr.

Wall Lake Willing Workers, Mrs. N. E. Schroeder.

Tri-R (Lake) Mrs. Arthur Duitscher.

Woolstock Township Club, Mrs. J. E. Kirstein.

Eagle Grove Townshio Club, Mrs. John Larson.

East Pleasant Township Club, Miss Virgie Jenison.

West Pleasant Township Club, Miss Vida Jenison.

Miss Hazel Spencer, former county club leader, also Miss Cloe Jenison of Pleasant township and about twenty-five club members, were also in attendance at this meeting.

Ship Your Wool June 23

Arrangements have been made by the Wright County Wool Growers association for the shipment of the 1922 clip of wool on Friday, June 23rd. Each wool grower is being asked to deliver his wool to his nearest shipping point on this date, wool to be packed securely in regulation wool sacks, properly tagged, and to be personally responsible for billing to the National Wool Warehouse & Storage Co., 4300 S. Robey street, Chicago, Ill., which firm the county association has consigned to for the past three seasons.

RADIO

INSTRUCTIONS FOR TROUBLE SHOOTING

How to Detect and Remedy the Open Circuit, Short Circuit and Leakage.

Radio circuits are subject to the same ills that the ordinary power circuits are subject to. However, to cure them is not such a difficult task as might be supposed, especially if some logical procedure is used.

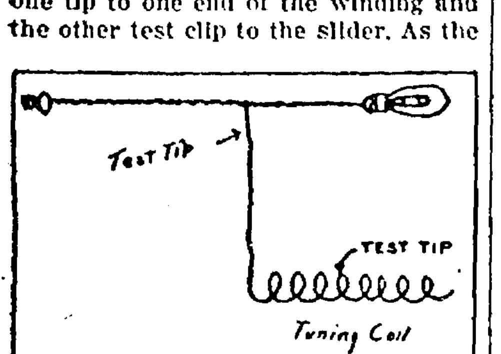
If a receiver is well put together in the first place and all contacts and other parts gone over once in a while, there is no reason why there should be any trouble. But the human being is prone to err, so that for the "once in a while" that is liable to happen, this article will be devoted to the explanation of what might happen to a simple receiver and the best way to fix it.

The usual troubles of the receiver fall under one of the following three headings:

1—An open circuit.
2—A short circuit.
3—Leakage.

An open circuit can most easily be detected by means of a series lamp. Nearly every one has available the ordinary 110 volt lighting circuit. Take an ordinary extension cord and cut one wire at any convenient place and use these two ends as test clips or tips. The extension cord is plugged into the house lighting circuit at any convenient outlet and when the two cut ends are held together the lamp will light as the circuit is closed. When the tips are held open the circuit is "open" and the light will go out.

Suppose it is desired to test for an open circuit in a tuning coil. Connect one tip to one end of the winding and the other test clip to the slider. As the slide is moved back and forth the light should remain lighted. If the light goes out at times there is an open circuit in the coil. If the light goes out when the coil is jarred the slider does not make good contact with the winding.



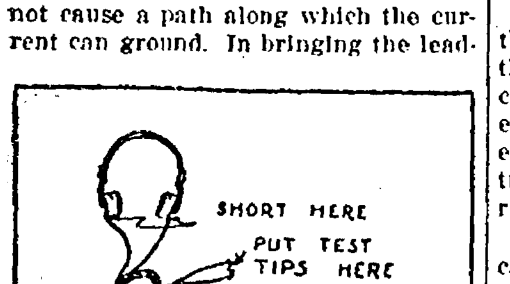
Testing the Tune Circuit.

If a buzzer and battery are available they can be used in testing for an open circuit in the same way that the lamp can be used. Connect the battery and buzzer in series with the test clips or tips and any low resistance circuit can be tested.

The ground connections can be tested with a buzzer and battery, but do not use the house-lighting circuit to test for grounds because one side of the lighting circuit is already grounded and if the other side were connected to the ground a short circuit would exist and an excessive current flow.

If the ground wire is connected to the water pipe, connect one test tip to the ground and the other to the gas pipe, which is also grounded. The buzzer should buzz if one has a good low resistance ground.

Leakage usually exists between the antenna and the ground. An antenna should be well insulated from its support. The lead-in should be brought down to the point where it enters the wall of the station in such a manner that when the wind causes it to swing, it cannot touch any grounded material, and that rain and snow cannot cause a path along which the current can ground. In bringing the lead-in through the wall, insulate it well and inside the station use as short a piece of well-insulated wire as is possible to make good connection with the set.



To Test Telephone Cords.

To test the continuity of the circuit of a pair of telephone receivers, touch the tips of the cord phone to the tongue. If the receivers are in reasonably good condition a slight click will be heard. If the response in one receiver seems to be weaker than that in the other, examine the diaphragm of the receiver giving the weaker response and see if it is bent toward the pole piece. Try tuning the diaphragm over if such is the case. Be careful when the diaphragm of a receiver is removed that the leads of fine wire from the magnet spools to the connection blocks do not become broken in handling.

If the continuity of the circuit of a pair of telephone receivers is checked and no response is heard when the cord tips are touched to the tongue, try checking each receiver of a double head set separately.

The two receivers are connected in series and to check either one separately, short circuit the tips of the cord leading to the other receiver just outside of the case. Should it appear that there is an open circuit in the cord, short circuit both receivers where the cord enters the case and with a buzzer or lamp connected to the tips on the end of the cord test for an open circuit.

Care should be exercised by the operator when adjusting a crystal detector to see that his fingers do not touch the surface of the crystal or the contact point of the little spring. The oil secretion that exists in the skin together with the dust that it collects will render a crystal detector inoperative by the insulating film that it will cause to form on the portion of the crystal surface that is touched. Should the surface of the crystal get dirty as evidenced by the received signals becoming weaker and weaker, try cleaning the crystal with alcohol and a little brush. Or if this does not seem to remedy the trouble, chip off old surface so that an entirely new surface is presented to the spring.

TIPS TO THE RADIOIST

The higher the aerial the stronger the signals. An increase of five to ten feet in the height of the flat top aerial will increase signals.

Addition of a variable condenser to the secondary or to the primary of a loose coupler often helps to tune out the undesired signals.

The sliders on tuning coils often make poor contacts with the slide rod. Thus much of the signal strength is lost. You can overcome this by soldering a flexible wire to the slider.

Increase length of spreaders of two, three or four-wire aerials from six to ten feet for best results. Each wire should be from four to six feet from its neighbor. Two wires one or two feet apart are no better than one wire. Likewise four wires on short spreaders are no better than one wire.

AMATEURS SHOULD PLAY FAIR

Radio Inspector Schmidt Urges That They Learn the Laws and Regulations.

Nine out of every ten radio fans are good sports, but the tenth is either a fan with poor judgment or a "rotter." It is up to the amateurs to see that restrictions are not imposed upon them, by playing fair, says Radio Inspector L. R. Schmidt of the Ninth district.

This can be done by observing certain cautions and by becoming posted on the radio laws and regulations. A copy of these regulations may be obtained from the superintendent of documents, government printing office, Washington, D. C., for 15 cents. It is worth while to spend 15 cents in order to be a "square shooter" in the radio game.

The great trouble with amateurs is that when they want to send a message around a corner they put on all the power they have with the hope that some one in Texas might pick up their message. The object should be to use the minimum amount of power to get the message to its destination.

"In all circumstances, except in case of signals or radiograms relating to vessels in distress, all stations shall use the minimum amount of energy necessary to carry out any communication desired."

Amateurs should keep their wave length to 200 meters.

They should use a "pure wave" or, as the regulations state, "if the sending apparatus is of such a character that the energy is radiated in two or more wave lengths, more or less sharply defined, as indicated by a sensitive wave meter, the energy in no one of the lesser waves shall exceed 10 per centum of that in the greater."

The wave must be "sharp." As to this the regulations state: "At all stations the logarithmic decrement per complete oscillation in the wave trains emitted by the transmitter shall not exceed two-tenths when sending distress signals or signals and messages relating thereto."

Amateurs frequently are at fault in calling stations too often. The law states that they can call three times, send "d e" once and sign their station call three times; but often the amateurs will send the calls a dozen or more times.

HOW TO GROUND AN AERIAL

If Properly Done It Really Protects the Property From Lightning.

Generally speaking, aerials do not attract lightning, but they do store up atmospherical electricity, and, of course, this condition does create a hazard. However, when the aerial is properly grounded it then acts as a lightning rod and really protects the property from this electrical hazard.

Briefly, the fire underwriters require that the aerial be grounded when not in use by a copper wire no smaller than B. S. Gauge No. 4 or larger, and run said wire as directly as possible to the outside ground.

This means that water, gas or steam pipes inside the property cannot be used for a lightning ground, because if ever this ground was called into service there is a possibility that fire and loss of life may result. So do not use inside grounds for lightning protection.

"THE SHEIK"
STAR THEATRE JUNE 23-24

Diana Mayo, a beautiful English girl, proud and haughty, decides to make a trip into the Saraha desert, despite the protests of her brother and friends. At Biskra, the Paris of the desert, she disguises herself as a slave girl and enters a gmbling casino where Sheik Ahmed, who is holding a fete, meets her. Learning that she is to go into the desert the next day, he bribes a guide and later she falls into his hands.

The Sheik is determined to bow her to his imperious will, but she rebels. He makes a slave of her, and one day while riding with an attendant, she attempts to escape. Her horse falls and breaks its leg and at this moment, Omair, a desert bandit sees and decides to abduct her. The Sheik arrives at this juncture and takes Diana back to camp. When he hears of Omair's presence in the vicinity, he decides to send Diana back to Biskra. While Diana and Saint Hubert, a friend of the Sheik's and a novelist, are riding in the desert, Omair swoops down upon them. Saint Hubert is wounded and Diana made prisoner.

When news of the abduction is brought to the Sheik, he summons his tribemen and hastens to her rescue. Diana is about to commit suicide rather than endure Omair's loathsome embraces, when the Sheik's followers attack the camp. In hand-to-hand battle, Omair is slain and the Sheik badly wounded. Diana nurses the Sheik, whom she now loves back to health, but he treats her indifferently and decides to return her to her people. Diana, who has learned from Saint Hubert that the Sheik is an American of excellent family, pleads with him and when he realizes that she loves him as devotedly as he adores her, he takes her in his arms. A few days later they start back to civilization, on the first leg of their honeymoon journey.

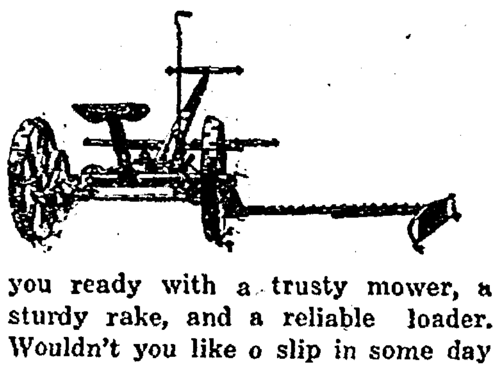
Keep cool! This isn't the time to get all "het up." It's hot enough the way it is.

A Big Hay Crop

Haying machines are ready now. Clip-clippity-clip, the call of the mower sounds in the distance, and it won't be long before a big hay crop will be ready for harvest. Are you ready with a trusty mower, a sturdy rake, and a reliable loader. Wouldn't you like o slip in some day and look at the McCormick or Deering mower, the International Side-Delivery rake and the International loader? You should have these three machines. McCormick and Deering mowers are famous for service over the whole round world—so are the rest of the International haying machines. Their long suit is light draft. Come in and look 'em over.



A real he-man is a little bit of everything that's good and still remains what he should be.

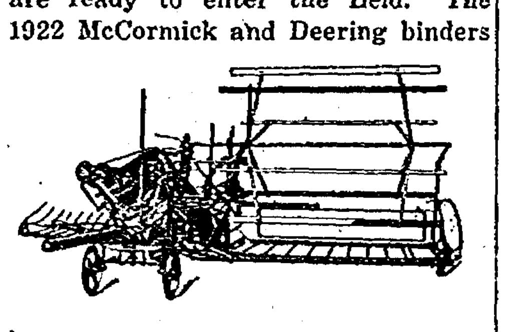
The mouth is a source of much trouble, and it's not altogether toothache of stomach trouble either.

It's hard to see what some women see in the men they marry, but it's harder still to see what some men see in the "hootch" they drink.

No flies mean a clean home. Cleanliness means efficiency, better health, better homes, and better humanity.

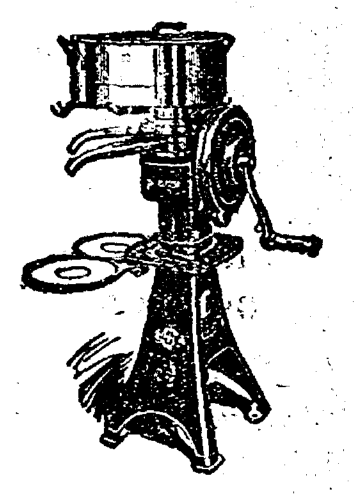
Improved Binders

Will your old binder stand the "gaff" for anoher season? Now's the time to find out. Not when you are ready to enter the field. The 1922 McCormick and Deering binders have many improvements over the binder of ten years ago. At your first chance come in and see some of these improvements—outside reel support, grain-saving floating elevator, quickly removed durable pitman, long wearing fabric canvas straps, modern bundle carrier, tongue truck and better bearings. With a new McCormick or Deering binder you'll be ready for all harvesting difficulties—including rough fields, and long ache or stomach trouble either.



Did You Know

That the Primrose is the only cream separator made with two wide-open cream outlets, giving it more than double the space any other separator has for cream to escape? It's a fact. Fat globules cannot be crushed or broken in passing through these openings. The density of the cream is regulated in the Primrose with a screw in the skimmilk outlet. It is easy to adjust because it works on the large volume of skimmilk instead of the small volume of cream.



There is no screw or other obstruction in the cream outlets to interfere with the free flow of all the cream out of the bowl. The two wide-open cream outlets and the milk screw are two big cream saving features not found in any other separator.

WHY KEEP ADVERTISING ?

"Things are slow this time of year; why should I advertise now?" is the question a man asked one day last week.

That man has driven an automobile. He knows that you can't start an automobile on high. First, you get the engine going; then you "put her in low. When she's moving a little faster, you change to second speed and finally, when the wheels are going round at a good clip, you shift into high.

Why is this? Because an automobile is a heavy load weighing thousands of pounds. It takes time and lots of power to get that big piece of metal started and rolling along smoothly and rapidly. You can't start an automobile right off at sixty miles an hour.

In the same way you can't advertise today and have the orders you want on your desk tomorrow evening. People don't do busness that way. You have to tell them what you want to sell, and keep on telling them many times over to get their orders. Some people are harder to start than automobiles and they move more slowly.

Some Independent readers are just as anxious to buy your goods as you are to sell them. But they don't know about 'em. Tell them what you have got. Start in at once. Tell them facts in your advertisements every week and when they are placing orders—YOU'LL GET YOURS.

SIX MILLIONTH FORD BUILT ON MAY 18TH

The six millionth Model "T" Ford motor was produced May 18 in the Ford factory at Detroit. In other words, from the time back in 1908 when the company began marketing the model T until May 18, 1922 a total of six million cars and trucks have been produced.

That Ford products have been quite evenly distriuted thruout the United States is borne out by the fact that thru the sparsely settled communities in the West to the densely populated cities in the East, practically the same ratio of cars and trucks to population exists.

Ohio leads with a total of 290,769 cars and trucks in daily use; Illinois comes second; Pennsylvania third; Texas fourth, and Michigan fifth, with a total of 234,081. New York, Iowa and California follow in the order named, each having more than 200,000.

Ford motor number 6,000,000 was lifted from the assembly line in the Highland Park Ford plant at 9:14 a. m. Just 5 1-3 seconds later number 6,000,001 was finished.

HOBO INJURED

Weary Willie, knight of the road is getting three squares a day and a comfortable bed for the first time this year, because when he attempted to alight from a late evening freight on Monday at the Second street viaduct his feet failed to hit soft turf and he bounced unmercifully on he pavement 20 feet below, according to the Chief. Willie wasn't supposed to know where the whereabouts of the viaduct. Cherokee was Cherokee to him, and he wanted to alight as gracefully as possible. The time was ripe, and the night seemed beautiful—and one place seemed as good as another—so he let loose. Terra Firma refused to come up and meet his stretching feet and he flip-flopped unceremoniously to the pavement. Hard is the word—to fall from a moving freight train and kiss the right of way is usually disasterous for the kisser. But Willie was lucky. One rib was fractured and he spent a few minutes in an attempt to organize his faculties. The stars flitted to and fro, and he emitted barks and groans. Kind hearted spectators, reluctant to put on the brakes, screeched to a halt and picked up the remains, taking them to the hospital for treatment. It is believed that Willie will be some time convalescing. The grub is reported O. K.

Bankers Practice Shooting.

Members of the Cherokee County Bankers' Protective Association from the north half of the county, spent one day last week at the Cherokee Rifle Club's range north of town, practicing with real amunition at the various targets. Both revolvers and rifles were used. Woe to be the easy money grabber who comes to Cherokee, provided the revolvers and sawed off shotguns are kept in handy places about the banks.

BOOTLEGGER IS DANGEROUS

Marshall Daily Times-Republican:—Bonker, the young man who killed Rebecca Nelson of Northwood, confessed fully to the officers. He killed the girl. He says he did not mean to rob his father's bank, that he meant to kill himself. He explains it all when he said that after her refusal to marry him, "I bought the hootch and then became crazy."

"Did it kill my mother?" he inquired. "I wouldn't have done it except for the hootch."

How dangerous is a bootlegger and those who peddle booze? At Northwood a fine girl who was working hard to pay off a mortgage on her dead mother's home lies dead by murder; two families are plunged into sorrow and despair; a boy who had served his country in war waits the noose.

Take it to yourselves, jurymen who boast that you will never convict a man for selling liquor; take it to yourselves, officers of the law, that wink at violation of the law; take it to yourselves, you smug citizens, to whom law violation and hootch peddling are perfunctory while your own home seems safe; take it to your own families and take with it the truth that no family is so immune from possible disgrace thru some act of one of its members.

How dangerous is a bootlegger? As dangerous as sudden death, rape, mayhem and murder; he carries and peddles the potentialities of every crime in the catalog. So dangerous is the dealer in illicit intoxicants.

Next dangerous to him are the officials that evade their sworn duty and the citizens who sneer at the law.

A mad dog is less dangeruos.

Take it home. The family of this young man now looking toward a shameful end by rope and gallows is prominent in its community. The father is a farmer and banker there. Not that it matters as to social and financial prominence, but to drive home the thought that no family is immune from the disgrace and destruction by "hootch."

MUNICIPAL PARK AT GARNER

Garner is going to have a Municipal Park. This fact was definitely decided at a meeting of the executive committee of the Commercial Club, Tuesday evening. The site is the old Midway Park which in former days marked the half-way limit between Garner and Concord. Arrangements have been made with the city, in which the title to the park rests, to allow the local Commercial Club to go on with improvements necessary to put the park up to the standard required by the state board and open it to the general public as camping ground. This move was made necessary by the demands made upon towns of this size by tourists for suitable camping ground. The club decided that the place should be put in proper condition forthwith—that is the improvements required by the state board would be made at once, and after this has been done, the park will be listed as a permanent Municipal Tourists Park. Markers proclaiming the presence and location of the park have been ordered, and will grace the highways leading to Garner. Workmen are busy bringing city water into the park, toilet rooms will be arranged and cooking apparatus installed.—Garner Leader.

AN OLD TALE CAUSES SUIT FOR $5,000.00

An old tale, which harks back to fifteen years ago, we have been told, re-told in the year of Our Lord, 1922 in cause for a libel suit which James Mehl has filed and in which he asks $5,000 from Byron Oberton of Clarion for an alleged malicious and defamatory statement.

Mr. Mehl's petition recites that he is now and has been a member of the Board of Supervisors of Wright county; that he is also a member of the Norway township school board. It alleges that on or about April 1st 1922, Byron Oberton of Clarion, in the presence of G. H. Lee of Clarion and others unknown to plaintiff, used the following "false and defamatory words: 'That damn Mehl, look what kind of a man he is for a member of the Board of Supervisors. His children had some trouble at school and he went to the schoolhouse and started to give her, the teacher, a licking, and he carried on so she had to stand him off with a six-shooter."

"The plaintiff alleges that the said false and defamatory words cause it to be believed that the plaintiff was unworthy of public trust and confidence, and unfit to hold and adminster the duties of public office and especially the offices herein set forth, whereby the plaintiff has been injured and damaged in his reputation in the sum of $5,000."

It is said that Oberton does not even know Mehl; that he only repeated a story which he had heard some fifteen years ago. Mr. Mehl is prepared to push the case and Oberton will undoubtedly resist with equal vigor.—news.

A Peculiar Automobile Accident

Last Monday, Ernest Edge had some business at the court house, says the Humboldt Independent, and drove up to attend to it, leaving his auto at the foot of the steps leading up to the court house from te south. As he expected to be in the court house but a few minutes, he left his motor running. The M. & St. L. south bound pasenger pulled in and while it was at the depot, Ernest's car took a notion to go down the hill to see what was going on at the depot, the small matter of being short a driver cutting no figure with it in the least. The result was that it crashed into the passenger train standing at the station. The car was somewhat damaged and Ernest had to postpone his trip to South Dakota that he was going o take Monday evening until Tuesday in order to have the necessary repairs put on his car.

LEAVES AND MONEY GOES RIGHT ALONG

News: A young man named Laurence Heyings, whose home is said to be in Carrol, walked off with around $40 of D. H. Eley's money from his cafe at Cornelia a few days ago, while the Eleys were at the Mrs. Abrahamson funeral. The young man hired Mr. Pederson, the blacksmith, to take him over to Belmond, and from that city is supposed to have taken the Great Western passenger train into Minnesota, where he is now believed to be.

The young man came to Clarion some time ago. The Eleys gave him employment and thot he was worthy of trust. But his good conduct was deceiving, and when he found his employers were going to be absent, he waited till they had gone and then proceeded to tap the till of the small change, sell some merchandise, and pocket the cash. He also is said to have told the boys around the lake that day that he was getting married, and he treated them rather liberally at Mr. Eley's expense.

When he left he gave Mr. Pederson a letter, saying that if any one wanted to know where he was to be found to ask a certain man near Belmond. The sheriff's office is searching for the young fellow and if he is located he may be brot back and prosecuted.

The boy is only about nineteen years of age, and is a nice appearing young fellow.

Farm Loan Money Coming Easier

Further indications of "easier" money is shown in the announcement from Omaha that the Federal Land Bank of this district has reduced its interest rate to borrowers from 6 per cent to 5½ per cent, effective June 1st. T. O. Hegen, president of the Central Iowa Mortgage company, Fort Dodge agents for the Federal Land Bank, says the reduction shows clearly there is "plenty of money" available for farm loans. The importance of a reduction of one-half of one per cent is set forth in a bulletin from which states that "this means more to farmers and to business interests in this section, dependent on farming than anything else that has occurred for many months." There are four states in this district Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Wyoming. The federal census shows a mortgage indebtness of about one billion dollars in these four states.

Railroad Traffic Declines

Railroad patronage is on the decline. Recently the Bode Bugle spoke of the fact that only one ticket was sold at that station on Tuesday, May 23, and that was only bought to Livermore. The auto bus and the auto and the truck are putting the railroads out of business, and will continue to do so until the roads learn to lessen their operating expenses by running smaller trains that require less investment and less man power. There is no reason why the roads connot run one car, gasoline and motor car that travels the high ways. The railroad is good every day of the year except in excessive snows, and is much better ffitted to handle light traffic than the truck, but is failing simply because the road officials will not change their ways.

HAS CHICKEN THAT IS A REAL FREAK

Joe Meyers has unearthed or found another curiosity on his farm. It will be remembered that the snakes come out and dance on the snow in Joe's back lot, and the frogs sing Christmas carols, and the gophers turn white, and now he has found a chicken that has four ferfect wings and four perfect legs, and a perfect head and body. The legs are situated fore and aft like a horse or any other quadruped, but there is no other bird that has four wings that we know of. If this bird should grow to maturity and start off across the world with the four wings all going at once, and then drop to the ground and gallop along like a kangaroo or a mule, it would be a sight well worth seeing.

The boys have speculated long and loud on the probable origin of this animal or beast or snake, or whatever it is, and the concensus of opinion is that the thing is a cross between that white gopher and a guinea hen. The monstrosity is white like the gopher, has pink eyes like the gopher, and lacks only tail and pockets to make it complete. It might have had the pockets for all we know; for we forgot to look, and it also might have had a stub of a tail under its feathery white down.—Humboldt Republican

The Republican forgot to mention one thing that would explain the foregoing—Humboldt's "White Mule."

KLEMME TO CELEBRATE

Times: It has been definitely decided among the business men of the town of Klemme to put on a celebration July 4th this year.

At the time of going to press it is impossible for us to give full details of the celebration as there are a number of things that the various committees have to work out; but Klemme will celebrate and we can promise that it will be a good celebration and you are assured of a good time.

Make your plans to come early and to stay late, there will be something doing every minute of the day.

If you would preserve harmony in the home, never tell your troubles to your wife—when she is at the bottom of them.

Let not your right hand know what your left doeth. It might feel ashamed.

In criticising others we are apt to lose the good opinion of those to whom we are speaking.

SHEFFIELD HAS TOURIST PARK

The town of Sheffield, always up and doing, has just opened a park for tourists. It is located along the Jefferson Highway, just south of the residential portion of the town and may be entered at the west and at an opening just north of the bridge that spans Bailey creek and from the east by the brick-yard road at the second corner coming from the north. The tract comprises about thirteen acres and is an ideal camping ground. The land belongs to the Sheffield Brick & Tile Company and F. F. Carhart, president of the company, has given the town free use of the ground for a period of five years.

GLOOMY ABOUT IOWA? READ THIS SNAPPY ESSAY

Iowa agriculturalists, who have been feeling gloomy over low prices and difficult times, will be cheered by re-reading the "Short Essay on Iowa" written over ten years ago by the late George Fitch, former Council Bluffs newspaper man.

The essay, which displays Fitch's irrepressible optimism and quaint humor, is as follows:

"Iowa is a large and happy corn field, speckled with Carnegie libraries and half-ton hogs, which are exchanged by their owners when ripe for automibles and piano players. The field is bounded on the east and west by the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, but barbed wire is used on the north and south. The state has 2,200,000 people, almost all of whom scan the editorial pages and market reports in the daily papers with the deepest interest.

"Iowa has no romance in its history. Its history could not be dramatized, even in the high-brow theatre, with any success. About seventy years ago, people began going into Iowa from Illinois to raise crops, and they have been doing it ever since. Iowa leads the world in farm products. Its corn cribs have elastic sides, and the Iowa pig, after he has fed on Iowa corn for a few months, has to be moved to and from meals on a truck. The tourist who crosses Iowa during midsummer complains of the dense forests and early twilight, but he is only going thru 300 miles of Iowa crops which are getting their full growth. After an Iowa farmer has sat out on his porch on hot July evenings and has heard his corn grow for twenty-five years, it is hard to interest him in such pifflish music as grand opera products.

"Iowa is singularly blessed in its lacks. It has no trusts, no great metropolis, no smart set, no slums, no country estates, and no abandoned farms. It also has no vast increase of population to assimilate and educate; in fact, it showed a decrease of population by the last census, and it talks of giving medals to its vigilant police force because of the fact.

"Iowa people wear last year's fashions quite extensively, but read this year's books and originate next year's political improvements. The Iowa man can be readily distinguished by the placid brow, his nine o'clock bedtime, and his careless habit of paying cash for everything he buys."

How?

"Do you think, dearest, that you could manage on my salary?" the fond youth asked.

"Why, yes; I think I could, darling," the girl responded; "but how in the world would you get along?"

Mixed Metaphor.

The INDIAN DRUM

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes his employer is dead. He also tells him the legend of the Indian Drum, which according to old superstition beats once for every life lost on the Great Lakes. Twenty years before, the great freighter Miwaka had gone down with twenty-five on board, but the Drum had sounded for only twenty-four, leaving the inference that one person had been saved, since it was general belief that the drum never erred. Pursuing a stranger who had made a disturbance at his house, Alan is slugged and rendered unconscious.

CHAPTER IX.—Conrad recovers, and the affair remains a mystery.

CHAPTER X.—Alan learns from Wassaquam that it was Corvet's habit to keep the sum of $1,000 in the house, apparently to meet the demands of a certain "Luke," who appeared periodically. In the absence of Wassaquam, "Luke" comes to the house demanding to see Corvet. He is evidently in a dying condition, due to alcohol and exposure. Conrad tries without avail to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. The man dies. Wassaquam gives Conrad a paper on which is a list of names.

Alan had drawn back but now went to the man again. The first idea that this might have been merely some old sailor who had served Benjamin Corvet or, perhaps, had been a comrade in the earlier days, had been banished by the confident arrogance of the man's tone—an arrogance not to be explained, entirely, by whisky or by the fever.

"How long have you been this way?" Alan demanded. "Where did you come from?" He put his hand on the wrist; it was very hot and dry; the pulse was racing, irregular; at seconds it seemed to stop; for other seconds it was continuous. The fellow coughed and bent forward. "What is it—pneumonia?" Alan tried to straighten him up.

"Gi' me drink! . . . Go get Ben Corvet, I tell you! . . . Get Ben Corvet quick! Say—yous shear? You get me Ben Corvet; you better get Ben Corvet; you tell him Lu—uke's here; won't wait any more; goin' t'have my money now . . . sright away, your shear? Kick me out s'loon; I guess not no more. Ben Corvet give me all money I want or I talk!"

"Talk!"

"Syou know it! I ain't goin' . . ." He choked up and tottered back; Alan, supporting him, laid him down and stayed beside him until his coughing and choking ceased, and there was only the rattling rasp of his breathing. When Alan spoke to him again, Luke's eyes opened, and he narrated recent experiences bitterly; all were blamed to Ben Corvet's absence; Luke, who had been drinking heavily a few nights before, had been thrown out when the saloon was closed; that was Ben Corvet's fault; if Ben Corvet had been around, Luke would have had money, all the money any one wanted; no one would have thrown out Luke then. Luke slept in the snow, all wet. When he arose, the saloon was open again, and he got more whisky, but not enough to get him warm. He hadn't been warm since. That was Ben Corvet's fault. Ben Corvet better be 'round now; Luke wouldn't stand any more.

Alan felt of the pulse again; he opened the coat and under-flannels and felt the heaving chest. He went to the hall and looked in the telephone directory. He remembered the name of the druggist on the corner of Clark street and he telephoned him, giving the number on Astor street.

"I want a doctor right away," he said. "Any good doctor; the one that you can get quickest." The druggist promised that a physician would be there within a quarter of an hour. Alan went back to Luke, who was silent now except for the gasp of his breath; he did not answer when Alan spoke to him, except to ask for whisky. Alan stood watching, a strange, sinking tremor shaking him. This man had come there to make a claim—a claim which many times before, apparently, Benjamin Corvet had admitted. Luke came to Ben Corvet for money which he always got—all he wanted—the alternative to giving which was that Luke would "talk." Blackmail, that meant, of course; blackmail which not only Luke had told of but which Wassaquam too had admitted, as Alan now realized. Money for blackmail—that was the reason for that thousand dollars in cash which Benjamin Corvet always kept at the house.

Alan turned with a sudden shiver of revulsion toward his father's chair in place before the hearth; there for hours each day his father had sat with a book or staring into the fire always with what this man knew hanging over him, always arming against it with the thousand dollars ready for this man, whenever he came. Meeting blackmail, paying blackmail for as long as Wassaquam had been in the house, for as long as it took to make the once muscular powerful figure of the sailor who threatened to "talk" into the swollen whisky-soaked hulk of the man dying now on the lounge.

For his state that day the man blamed Benjamin Corvet. Alan, forcing himself to touch the swollen face, shuddered at thought of the truth underlying that accusation. Benjamin Corvet's act—whatever it might be that this man knew—undoubtedly had destroyed not only him who paid the blackmail but him who received it; the effect of that act was still going on, destroying, blighting. Its threat of shame was not only against Benjamin Corvet; it threatened also all whose names must be connected with Corvet's. This shame threatened Alan; it threatened also the Sherrills. What Sherrill had told Alan and even Corvet's gifts to him had not been able to make Alan feel that without question Corvet was his father, but now shame and horror were making him feel it; in horror at Corvet's act—whatever it might be—and in shame at Covert's cowardice, Alan was thinking of Benjamin Corvet as his father. This shame, this horror were his inheritance.

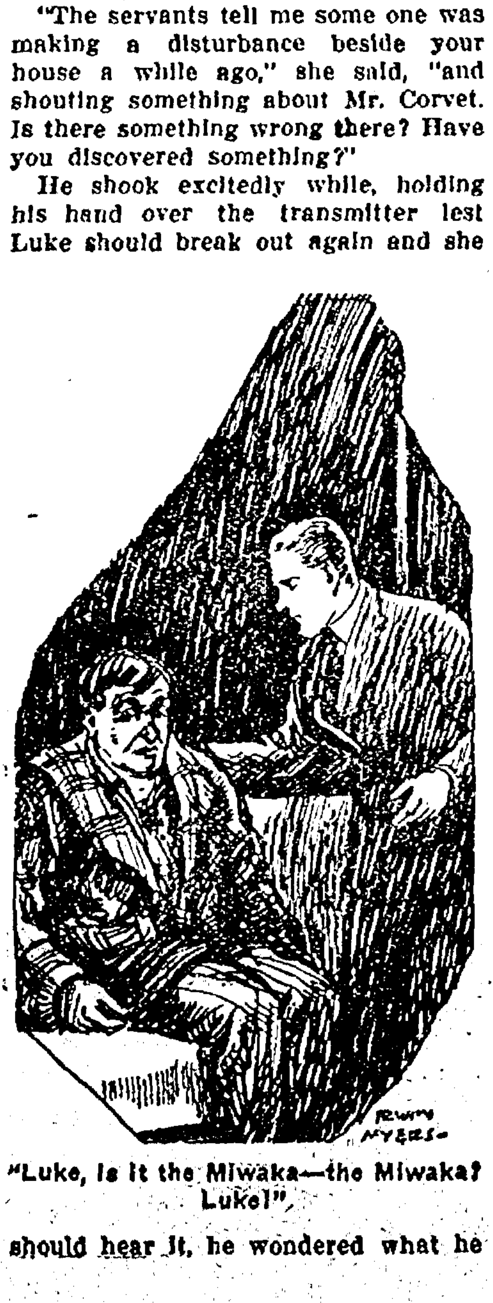
He left Luke and went to the window to see if the doctor was coming. He had called the doctor because in his first sight of Luke he had not recognized that Luke was beyond the aid of doctors and because to summon a doctor under such circumstances was the right thing to do; but he had thought of the doctor also as a witness to anything Luke might say. But now—did he want a witness? He had no thought of concealing anything for his own sake or for his father's; but he would, at least, want the chance to determine the circumstances under which it was to be made public.

He hurried back to Luke. "What is it, Luke?" he cried to him. "What can you tell? Listen! Luke—Luke, is it about the Miwaka—the Miwaka? Luke!"

Luke had sunk into a stupor; Alan shook him and shouted in his ear without awakening response. As Alan straightened and stood hopelessly looking down at him, the telephone bell rang sharply. Constance Sherrill's voice came to him; her first words made it clear that she was at home and had just come in.

"The servants tell me some one was making a disturbance beside your house a while ago," she said, "and shouting something about Mr. Corvet. Is there something wrong there? Have you discovered something?"

He shook excitedly while, holding his hand over the transmitter lest Luke should break out again and she should hear it, he wondered what he should say to her.



"Luke, Is It the Miwaka—the Miwaka? Luke!"

"Please don't ask me just now, Miss Sherrill," he managed. "I'll tell you what I can—later."

His reply, he recognized, only made her more certain that there was something the matter, but he could not add anything to it. He found Luke, when he went back to him, still in coma; the bloodshot veins stood out against the ghastly grayness of his face, and his stertorous breathing sounded through the rooms.

* * * * * * * *

Constance Sherrill had come in a few moments before from an afternoon reception; the servants told her at once that something was happening at Mr. Corvet's. They had heard shouts and had seen a man pounding upon the door there, but they had not taken it upon themselves to go over there. She had told the chauffeur to wait with the motor and had run at once to the telephone and called Alan; his attempt to put her off made her certain that what had happened was not finished but was still going on. Her anxiety and the sense of their responsibility for Alan overrode at once all other thought. She told the servants to call her father at the office and tell him something was wrong at Mr. Corvet's; then she called her maid and hurried out to the motor.

"To Mr. Corvet's—quickly!" she directed.

Looking through the front doors of her car as it turned into Astor street, she saw a young man, carrying a doctor's case, run up the steps of Corvet's house. Constance recognized him as a young doctor who was starting in practice in the neighborhood. He was just being admitted as she and her maid reached the steps. Alan stood holding the door open and yet blocking entrance when she came up.

"You must not come in!" he denied her; but she followed the doctor so that Alan could not close the door upon her. He yielded then, and she and her maid went on into the hall.

She started as she saw the figure upon the couch in the library, and as the sound of its heavy breathing reached her; and the wild fancy which had come to her when the servants had told her of what was going on—a fancy that Uncle Benny had come back—was banished instantly.

Alan led her into the room across from the library.

"You shouldn't have come in," he said. "I shouldn't have let you in; but—you saw him."

"Yes."

"Do you know him?"

"Know him?" She shook her head.

"I mean, you've never seen him before?"

"No."

"His name is Luke—he speaks of himself by that name. Did you ever hear my father mention a man named Luke?"

"No; never."

Luke's voice cut suddenly their conversation; the doctor probably had given him some stimulant.

"Where'sh Ben Corvet?" Luke demanded arrogantly of the doctor. "You go get Ben Corvet! Tell Ben Corvet I want drink right away. Tell Ben Corvet I want my thousan' dollar . . . !"

Constance turned swiftly to her maid. "Go out to the car and wait for me," she commanded.

Luke's muffled, heavy voice went on; moments while he fought for breath interrupted it.

"You hear me, you d—n Injin! . . . You go tell Ben Corvet I want my thousan' dollars, or I make it two nex' time! You hear me; you go tell Ben Corvet. . . . You let me go, you d—n Injin!" . . .

Through the doorway to the library they could see the doctor force Luke back upon the couch; Luke fought him furiously; then, suddenly as he had stirred to strength and fury, Luke collapsed again. His voice went on a moment more, and rapidly growing weaker:

"You tell Ben Corvet I want my money, or I'll tell. He knows what I'll tell. . . . You don't know, you Injin devil. . . . Ben Corvet knows, and I know. . . . Tell him I'll tell . . . I'll tell . . . I'll tell!" The threatening voice stopped suddenly.

Constance, very pale, again faced Alan. "Of course, I understand," she said. "Uncle Benny has been paying blackmail to this man. For years, perhaps. . . ." She repeated the word after an instant, in a frightened voice, "Blackmail!"

"Won't you please go, Miss Sherrill?" Alan urged her. "It was good of you to come; but you mustn't stay now. He's—he's dying, of course."

She seated herself upon a chair. "I'm going to stay with you," she said simply. It was not, she knew, to share the waiting for the man in the next room to die; in that, of itself, there could be nothing for him to feel. It was to be with him while realization which had come to her was settling upon him, too—realization of what this meant to him. He was realizing that, she thought; he had realized it; it made him, at moments, forget her while, listening for sounds from the other room, he paced back and forth beside the table or stood staring away, clinging to the portieres. He left her presently, and went across the hall to the doctor.

"Is he dead?" Constance heard him ask.

"Not yet," the doctor answered; "but it won't be long, now."

"There's nothing you can do to make him talk—bring him to himself long enough so that he will tell what he keeps threatening to tell?"

The doctor shrugged. "How many times, do you suppose, he's been drunk and still not told? Concealment is his established habit now. It's an inhibition; even in wandering, he stops short of actually telling anything."

Alan came back to Constance. Outside, the gray of dusk was spreading, and within the house it had grown dark. It was very quiet in the library; she could not even hear Luke's breathing now. Then the doctor came out to them.

"It's over," he said to Alan. "There's a law covering these cases; you may not be familiar with it. I'll make out the death certificate—pneumonia and a weak heart with alcoholism. But the police have to be notified at once; you have no choice as to that. I'll look after those things for you, if you want."

"Thank you; if you will." Alan went with the doctor to the door and saw him drive away. Returning, he drew the library portieres; then, coming back to Constance, he picked up her muff and collar from the chair where she had thrown them, and held them out to her.

"You'll go now, Miss Sherrill," he said. "Indeed, you mustn't stay here—your car's still waiting, and—you mustn't stay here . . . in this house!"

"Won't you come over home with me," she said, "and wait for father there till we can think this thing out together?"

Her sweetness almost broke him down. "This . . . together! Think this out! Oh, it's plain enough, isn't it? For years—for as long as Wassaquam has been here, my father has been seeing that man and paying blackmail to him twice a year, at least! He lived in that man's power. He kept money in the house for him always! It wasn't anything imaginary that hung over my father—or anything created in his own mind. It was something real—real; it was disgrace—disgrace and worse—something he deserved; and that he fought with blackmail money, like a coward! Dishonor—cowardice—blackmail!"

She drew a little nearer to him. "You didn't want me to know," she said. "You tried to put me off when I called you on the telephone; and—when I came here, you wanted me to go away before I heard. Why didn't you want me to know? If he was your father, wasn't he our—friend? Mine and my father's? You must let us help you."

As she approached, he had drawn back from her. "No; this is mine!" he denied her. "Not yours or your father's. You have nothing to do with this. Didn't he try in little cowardly ways to keep you out of it? But he couldn't do that; your friendship meant too much to him; he couldn't keep away from you. But I can—I can do that! You must go out of this house; you must never come in here again!"

Her eyes filled, as she watched him; never had she liked him so much as now.

"I thought," he said almost wistfully, "it seemed to me that, whatever he had done, it must have been mostly against me. His leaving everything to me seemed to mean that I was the one that he had wronged, and that he was trying to make it up to me. But it isn't that; it can't be that! It is something much worse than that! . . . Oh, I'm glad I haven't used much of his money! Hardly any—not more than I can give back! It wasn't the money and the house he left me that mattered; what he really left me was just this . . . dishonor, shame . . ."

The doorbell rang, and Alan turned to the door and threw it open. In the dusk the figure of the man outside was not at all recognizable; but as he entered with heavy and deliberate steps, passing Alan without greeting and going straight to Constance, Alan saw by the light in the hall that it was Spearman.

"What's up?" Spearman asked. "They tried to get your father at the office and then me, but neither of us was there. They got me afterward, at the club. They said you'd come over here; but that must have been more than two hours ago."

His gaze went on past her to the drawn hangings of the room to the right; and he seemed to appreciate their significance; for his face whitened under its tan, and an odd hush came suddenly upon him.

"Is it Ben, Connie?" he whispered. "Ben . . . come back?"

He drew the curtains partly open. The light in the library had been extinguished, and the light that came from the hall swayed about the room with the movement of the curtains and gave a momentary semblance of life to the face of the man upon the couch. Spearman drew the curtains quickly together again, still holding to them and seeming for an instant to cling to them; then he shook himself together, threw the curtains wide apart, and strode into the room. He switched on the light and went directly to the couch; Alan followed him.

"He's—dead?"

"Who is he?" Alan demanded.

Spearman seemed to satisfy himself first as to the answer to his question. "How should I know who he is?" he asked. "There used to be a wheelsman on the Martha Corvet years ago who looked like him; or looked like what this fellow may have looked like once. I can't be sure."

He turned to Constance. "You're going home, Connie? I'll see you over there. I'll come back about this afterward, Conrad."

Alan followed them to the door and closed it after them. He spread the blankets over Luke. Luke's coats, which Alan had removed, lay upon a chair, and he looked them over for marks of identification. A side pocket produced an old briar; there was nothing else. Then Alan walked restlessly about, awaiting Spearman. Spearman, he believed, knew this man; Spearman had not even ventured upon modified denial until he was certain that the man was dead; and then he had answered so as not to commit himself, pending learning from Constance what Luke had told.

But Luke had said nothing about Spearman. It had been Corvet, and Corvet alone, of whom Luke had spoken; it was Corvet whom he had accused; it was Corvet who had given him money. Was it conceivable, then, that there had been two such events in Corvet's life? That one of these events concerned the Miwaka and Spearman and some one—some one "with a bullet hole above the eye"—who had "got" Corvet; and that the other event had concerned Luke and something else? It was not conceivable, Alan was sure; it was all one thing. If Corvet had to do with the Miwaka, then Luke hed had to do with it too. And Spearman? But if Spearman had been involved in that guilty thing, had not Luke known it? Then why had not Luke mentioned Spearman? Or had Spearman not been really involved? Had it been, perhaps, only evidence of knowledge of what Corvet had done that Spearman had tried to discover and destroy?

Alan went to the door and opened it, as he heard Spearman upon the steps again. Spearman waited only until the door had been reclosed behind him.

"Well, Conrad, what was the idea of bringing Miss Sherrill into this?"

"I didn't bring her in; I tried the best I could to keep her out."

"Out of what—exactly?"

"You know better than I do. You know exactly what it is. You know that man, Spearman; you know what he came here for. I don't mean money; I mean you know why he came here for money, and why he got it. I tried, as well as I could, to make him tell me; but he wouldn't do it. There's disgrace of some sort here, of course—disgrace that involves my father and, I think, you too. If you're not guilty with my father, you'll help me now; if you are guilty, then, at least, your refusal to help will let me know that."

"I don't know what you're talking about. I told you this man may have been a wheelsman on the Corvet; I don't know more about him than that; I don't even know that certainly. Of course, I knew Ben Corvet was paying blackmail; I've known for years that he was giving up money to some one. I don't know who he paid it to; or for what."

The strain of the last few hours was telling upon Alan; his skin flushed hot and cold by turns. He paced up and down while he controlled himself.

"That's not enough, Spearman," he said finally. "I—I've felt you, somehow, underneath all these things. The first time I saw you, you were in this house doing something you ought not to have been doing; you fought me then; you would have killed me rather than not get away. Two weeks ago, some one attacked me on the street—for robbery, they said; but I know it wasn't robbery—"

"You're not so crazy as to be trying to involve me in that—"

There came a sound to them from the hall, a sound unmistakably denoting some presence. Spearman jerked suddenly up; Alan, going to the door and looking into the hall, saw Wassaquam. The Indian evidently had returned to the house some time before; he had been bringing to Alan now the accounts which he had settled. He seemed to have been standing in the hall for some time, listening; but he came in now, looking inquiringly from one to the other of them.

"Not friends?" he inquired. "You and Henry?"

Alan's passion broke out suddenly. "We're anything but that, Judah. I found him, the first night I got here and while you were away, going through my father's things. I fought with him, and he ran away. He was the one that broke into my father's desks; maybe you'll believe that, even if no one else will."

"Yes?" the Indian questioned. "Yes?" It was plain that he not only believed but that believing gave him immense satisfaction. He took Alan's arm and led him into the smaller library. He knelt before one of the drawers under the bookshelves—the drawer, Alan recalled, which he himself had been examining when he had found Wassaquam watching him. He drew out the drawer and dumped its contents out upon the floor; he turned the drawer about then, and pulled the bottom out of it. Beneath the bottom which he had removed appeared now another bottom and a few sheets of paper scrawled in an uneven hand and with different colored inks.

At sight of them, Spearman, who had followed them into the room, uttered an oath and sprang forward. The Indian's small dark hand grasped Spearman's wrist, and his face twitched itself into a fierce grin which showed how little civilization had modified in him the aboriginal passions. But Spearman did not try to force his way; instead, he drew back suddenly.

Alan stooped and picked up the papers and put them in his pocket. If the Indian had not been there, it would not have been so easy for him to do that, he thought.

CHAPTER XI

The Land of the Drum.

Alan went with Wassaquam into the front library, after the Indian had shown Spearman out.

"This was the man, Judah, who came for Mr. Corvet that night I was hurt?"

"Yes, Alan," Wassaquam said.

"He was the man, then, who came here twice a year, at least, to see Mr. Corvet?"

"Yes."

"I was sure of it," Alan said. "Can you tell me now why he came here, Judah?"

"I have told you I do not know," Wassaquam replied. "Ben always saw him; Ben gave him money. I do not know why."

Alan had been holding his hand over the papers which he had thrust into his pocket; he went back into the smaller library and spread them under the reading lamp to examine them. But, as he looked the pages over now, he felt a chill of disappointment and chagrin. They did not contain any narrative concerning Benjamin Corvet's life; they did not even relate to a single event. They were no narrative at all. They were—in his first examination of them, he could not tell what they were.

They consisted in all of some dozen sheets of irregular size, some of which had been kept much longer than others, a few of which even appeared fresh and new. The three pages which Alan thought, from their yellowed and worn look, must be the oldest, and which must have been kept for many years, contained only a list of names and addresses. The remaining pages, which he counted as ten in number, contained nearly a hundred brief clippings from newspapers; the clippings had been very carefully cut out, they had been pasted with painful regularity on the sheets, and each had been dated across its face—dates made with many different pens and with many different inks, but all in the same irregular handwriting as the letter which Alan had received from Benjamin Corvet.

Alan, his fingers numb in his disappointment, turned and examined all these pages; but they contained nothing else. He read one of the clippings, which was dated "Feb. 1912."

"The passing away of one of the oldest residents of Emmet county occurred at the poorfarm on Thursday of last week. Mr. Fred Westhouse was one of four brothers brought by their parents into Emmet county in 1846. He established himself here as a farmer and was well known among our people for many years. He was nearly the last of his family, which was quite well off at one time, Mr. Westhouse's three brothers and his father having perished in various disasters upon the lake. His wife died two years ago. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Arthur Pearl, of Flint."

He read another:

"Hallford-Spens. On Tuesday last Miss Audrey Hallford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Hallford, of this place, was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to Mr. Robert Spens, of Escanaba. All wish the young couple well."

He read another:

"Born to Mr. and Mrs. Hal French, a daughter, Saturday afternoon last. Miss Vera Arabella French, at her arrival weighed seven and one-half pounds."

This clipping was dated, in Benjamin Corvet's hand, "Sturgeon Bay, Wis., Aug. 1914." Alan put it aside in bewilderment and amaze and took up again the sheets he first had looked at. The names and addresses on these oldest, yellowed pages had been first written, it was plain, all at the same time and with the same pen and ink, and each sheet in the beginning had contained seven or eight names. Some of these original names and even the addresses had been left unchanged, but most of them had been scratched out and altered many times—other and quite different names had been substituted; the pages had become finally almost illegible, crowded scrawls, rewritten again and again in Corvet's cramped hand. Alan strained forward, holding the first sheet to the light.

Alan seized the clippings he had looked at before and compared them swiftly with the page he had just read; two of the names—Westhouse and French—were the same as those upon this list. Suddenly he grasped the other pages of the list and looked them through for his own name; but it was not there. He dropped the sheets upon the table and got up and began to stride about the room.

He felt that in this list and in these clippings there must be, somehow, some one general meaning—they must relate in some way to one thing; they must have deeply, intensely concerned Benjamin Corvet's disappearance and his present fate, whatever that might be, and they must concern Alan's fate as well. But in their disconnection, their incoherence, he could discern no common thread. What conceivable bond could there have been uniting Benjamin Corvet at once with an old man dying upon a poorfarm in Emmet county, wherever that might be, and with a baby girl, now some two years old, in Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin?

He called Wassaquam into the library and brought the lists and clippings out again.

"Do you know at all what these are, Judah?" he asked.

"No, Alan. I have seen Ben have them, and take them out and put them back. That is all I know."

"Do you know any of these people?"

He gave the lists to Wassaquam, who studied them through attentively, holding them to the lamp.

"No, Alan."

"Have you ever heard of any of their names before?"

"That may be. I do not know. They are common names."

"Do you know the places?"

"Yes—the places. They are lake ports or little villages on the lakes. I have been in most of them, Alan. Emmet county, Alan, I came from there. Henry comes from there, too."

"Then that is where they hear the Drum?"

"Yes, Alan."

"My father took newspapers from those places, did he not?"

Wassaquam looked over the addresses again. "Yes; from all. He took them for the shipping news, he said. And sometimes he cut pieces out of them—these pieces, I see now; and afterward I burned the papers; he would not let me only throw them away."

THE DOUGHBOY'S PRAYER

Congress is my Shepherd; I am in want.

He maketh me to pay all my income; he leadeth me to believe that there will be no bonus.

He restoreth no hope of faith; he leadeth me to regret my vote.

Yea tho I walk thru the alley and the street of doubt I find no pleasure in them.

He preparest a fable before me in the presence of no free lunch counters.

Such poverty and hardships will follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in a rented house forever.

SHIP SUBSIDY BILL TO BE PLACED BEFORE FARMERS

There has been much publicity sent broadcast over the country urging legislation granting subsidy to American Merchant Marine. Bills have been introduced in both branches of Congress aiming to enact a law providing for such subsidy. So much has already been said favoring the legislation that we believe it essential to give the Farm Bureau Members of Iowa a chance to vote and thus express their stand for or against the question.

In brief the bill proposes that private corporations buy the ships now owned by the U. S. Government and it is proposed to loan up to two-thirds value of ships bought or built in U. S. Ship Yards at not less than two per cent interest giving ten to fifteen years time, and not to exceed $125,000,000 is set aside by the U. S. Shipping Board to be known as its construction loan fund.

Further aid is proposed exempting the corporation or individual ship owner from income tax, provided such exemption is used for building new vessels. The bill also proposes to exempt five percent of ocean freight rates paid by persons subject to tax for transportation made in American vessels of goods or property of any kind. It also proposes to double taxes on fees now imposed on foreign ships entering our ports.

Provides further that fifty percent of aliens entering this country must take passage on American ships; also that Merchant Marine Naval Reserve be established and that members in good standing shall receive compensation per year apart from pay received as an officer or one of the crew of merchant ship. There shall be set aside, for this

HUNT FOR GOLD

Salem, S. D.:—Interest in the reported burial of a pot of $65,000 in gold during the Indian days has been revived by the receipt by Mr. Kizer, the owner of the farm where the gold is supposed to be buried, of a letter from Nathan A. Parr, of Speer, Illinois, a metallurgist, proposing that he be given the task of locating the treasure.

It is believed that Mr. Kizer will soon conclude arrangements for making a systematic search for the alleged pot of gold. Interest in the matter is again becoming keen thruout the Salem and Montrose districts.

According to the traditional story, a party of whites was pursued by Indians. When they reached what is now the Kizer farm they decided to bury all their gold to prevent it falling into the hands of the Indians, who were gradually closing in on them. The whites shortly afterwards were overtaken and killed by the Indians, it is said.

RUNNING A PAPER

Running a newspaper is just like running a hotel, only different. When a man goes into a hotel and finds something on the table which does not suit him, he does not raise hades with the landlord and tell him to stop his old hotel. Well hardly. He sets that dish to one side and wades into the many dishes that suit him. It is different with some newspaper readers. They find an article occasionally that does not suit them exactly and without stopping to think it may please hundreds of other readers make a grandstand play and tell the editor how the paper should be run. And what should be put into it. But such people are becoming fewer every year.—Exchange.

Goodell Takes 7-5 Game From Belmond

Goodell Secures Sweet Revenge For Many Years Of Mauling

BELMOND AT KLEMME 4TH

The town of Goodell secured sweet revenge Sunday for the years of defeat suffered in the past, when the ball team from there walked on Belmond for a score 7 to 5 victory. Superior playing tells the story. Scoring in the first inning, in a few more frames on three hits and numerous errors they had four runs salted away and the result was forecast. Belmond could not hit, fielding was poor, errors numerous, and Goodell took advantage of them all. A light rain made the ball slippery and hard for the pitchers to handle. A small crowd was out.

The Klemme Times reports that Belmond will play Garner at the Klemme Fourth celebration, and the Farm Bureau Exchange states Belmond will play Eagle Grove at the picnic the Fourth. We have not learned whether the one team is to play both games, or if the Farm Bureau picnic team will be another bunch.

SOME FISH RIDER

Garner Leader: Sheriff E. P. Hanson of this city, Attorney Frank Senneff, Dr. Denny, N. P. Nelson, and Joe Haxton, all of Britt, spent the greater part of last week fishing in the vicinity of Waterville, Minnesota, and fair luck is reported. The day that Attorney Senneff caught that 28-pounder, the thermometer registered high. In order to be as comfortable as possible, Sheriff Hanson donned his bathing suit, and it so happened that he was in the boat with Senneff when he got the big strike. By careful maneuvering, Frank succeeded in getting the fish close to the boat and part way out of the water, but it seemed that it would be impossible to land the prize. With rare presence of mind Sheriff Peck sprang upon the back of the fish, and after fastening his fingers securely in his gills, managed to steer him to shore. As Peck told us this story, we could not help but think how very fortunate it was that he was clad in his bathing suit. This is Hanson's own story, and as we listened attentively and gathered in all the details—some of which we have ommited here, we could not rid our mind of the thought "what an immaculate liar you are."

KING'S HERALDS HOLD PICNIC AT MORSE LAKE

The King's Heralds enjoyed a splendid picnic at Morse Lake Tuesday afternoon, there being 40 of the Heralds present, also, 25 parents and friends of the members. The afternoon was spent in various games, and amusements, and a good dip in the lake. Refreshments of a picnic nature were enjoyed, and the members all report a real good time enjoyed. The next meeting of the King's Heralds will not be held until September.

SHEFFIELD TO CELEBRAT THE FOURTH

This is Sheffield's year to celebrate the Fourth of July and the business men of that splendid town are busy arranging a program that has the earmarks of being the biggest thing in that line ever attempted there. At a meeting held last week at the new Memorial hall an executive committee, headed by Dr. A. H. Hinken, and various other committees were named, to go ahead and do business, and this is a sure guarantee that the American eagle will scream long and loud. Franklin county people should arrange to celebrate the Fourth at Sheffield.—Hampton Recorder.

FIRE DESTROYS HAY CROP

Last Thursday fire destroyed around 30 acres of hay on the farm of Geo. C. Johnson, west of town. Quite a bit was destroyed on the Malvin Hanson place, also. It is thought that the fire was set from a passing train. No rain has fallen here for several weeks, to amount to anything, and hay and pastures are becoming as dry as tinder.

Townsan Hardware Entered By Thieves

Try To Saw Thru Floor But Give It Up And Enter Thru Window

TAKE ABOUT $30 WORTH

Unknown thieves broke into the Townsan Hardware building sometime Saturday or Sunday nights, and took hardware to the value of $25 to $30.

The robbers first attemped entrance thru the floor, boring several holes in the planking with the evident intention of cutting a hole and crawling up thru into the building. Evidently finding this a tedious job, they went around the back of the building and removed a back window, thru which they gained entrance. A revolver and cartridges, several pocket knives and several other small articles were appropriated, the total value being around $30.

No clews are entertained as to the identity of the burglars, altho the surmise is that they were either young boys or foreigners. All indications are that the thieves were boys, the job bearing the earmarks of such directing. Had they been older men, articles of greater value, and more of them would probably have been taken.

CLASS OF '16 HOLDS REUNION

The Class of 1916 B. H. S. held a reunion at Morse Lake Sunday June 25.

About 20 of the former class members were present which was quite a good representation, due to the fact that the reunion was planned in a short time.

A delicious picnic dinner, served by the ladies, was enjoyed by all.

The afternoon was enjoyably spent in recalling school day memories and a refreshing "dip" in the lake.

We hope to make this an annual affair.

NEW WAY TO RAISE FUNDS

Swea City Herald: Lakota is setting the pace for Kossuth county towns in the matter of street improvement. She is graveling all of her thorofares. The other towns are wondering how she can do it. You know how the neighbors talk when Mrs. Jones travels at a [illegible] pace with Jones producing a Ford income. Lakotas town finances are no better than those for the neighbors. Green-eyed with envy a Swea Cityan the other day asked a Lakotian: Where do you get the money?" "From those thirteen eighty-fives," replied the Lakota man. "Whaddy mean, thirteen eighty-five," was the comeback of the Swea Cityan. Then the Lakota man explained that motorists who exceeded the town's speed limit are fined $13.85. Persons who get "lit-up" on home brew are also taxed $13.85. In fact it seems there is a flat rate of $13.85 for infractions of the town's ordinances. And every time $13.85 comes in that means 10 yards of gravel on the streets. With Lakota's system of financing revealed there is now no good reason why the streets of Kossuth county towns shouldn't be transformed from mudholes to boulevards. Possessed of a diligent marshall and a flat rate any town can do it.

A FEW DON'TS FOR OUR TOWN

Don't fail to sound its praises wherever you are.

Don't make your money out of its citizens and spend it somewhere else.

Don't frown on every public improvement simply because it will cost you a dollar or two.

Don't sneer at the efforts of your fellow citizens to build up the town but lend a hand yourself.

Don't talk a great deal about what should be done and remain on the back seat waiting for someone else to do it.

Don't say the public schools are a failure because your boy has been upsetting the school's discipline and has been punished.

Don't stay at home on election day, but get out and hustle for good men and good government.

Don't let a good local paper that is the town's untiring champion abandon the champion business because of lack of deserved patronage.

Don't forget to drop your dollar in the slot when the committee that is afer a new enterprise comes around with the subscription list.

Don't forget that in building up the town, hearty co-operation, united endeavor and a spirit of get there are what win the day. There is no pull like a long pull, a strong pull and a pull together.—Exchange.

COUNTRY CLUBS TO HOLD MATCHES

The newly organized Boone Valley Golf Association consisting of the Webster City, Eagle Grove, Rolfe, Clarion and Belmond country clubs will hold a series of tournaments beginning the first part of July at the various clubs of the association. The first tournament will be held on July 9th when Webster City comes here for a tournament on the local course. The remaining matches scheduled are for July 23rd with Clarmond at Eagle Grove; August 6th Clarmond at Webster City; August 21st, Rolfe at Clarmond, and September 4th, Rolfe at Webster City. The association will offer as a prize a silver trophy cup which will be awarded to the club winning the series. After the cup has been won by a club three times it then becomes the permanent property of the club.

In addition to the tournament scheduled for July and August, an open invitation tournament for all asociation club members will be held at the Eagle Grove County Club on Thursday and Friday, Sept. 14th and 15th. This tournament will be for the association championship.

The program begins on the morning of the 14th with qualifying round of eighteen holes. The sixteen lowest players will qualify for match play for the association championship and prize. The player turning in the lowest score will receive the prize and the runner up will also receive a prize. Match play will consist of eighteen holes with the exception of the finals which will consist of thirty-six holes.

Arrangements have been made for the entertainment of all visiting players at the local clubhouse which will be open to guests all day. Lunches will be served at the clubhouse and entertainment will be provided in the evening.—Eagle Grove Times.

POST OFFICE TO RETURN TO 3RD CLASS

July 1st the post office here will return to the third class, we are informed. Lack of the required amount of business is the reason for the office going back to the old stand. To be a second class office, there must be a total of $6,000 in business in the year, and the total fell a little short of this. When the factory gets to going and business picks up, there is little doubt but what the office will again be a second class office.

SEVENTEENTH MUSICAL HELD

Miss Gertrude Ely's puplis in music held another of their popular recitals last Friday evening, this one being the seventeenth recital which her students have given. The guests present thoroly enjoyed the excellent program rendered by the young people, many of whom displayed remarkable talent.

WHERE YOU GOIN' THE 4TH?

Where you goin' the Fourth? Close choices are the towns of Klemme and Swaledale, and the Wright County Farm Bureau picnic held at the Warner estate. Klemme claims a real bang-up affair is arranged, and Swaledale has been advertising for attractions, while the picnic progrm will be found in the Independent this issue. Clear Lake, of course, will celebrate, as usual, but the general opinion is that the mob will be sa great that there "won't be no fun there." And again, Morse Lake is still four miles west of town; the swimmin's fine.

RADIO CONCERTS FINE

The receiving station of the Belmond Battery Co. and the Independent continues to operate very successfully, and some fine concerts are being heard. The Ames station is the strongest of any, and government weather reports are received from there every day. The Omaha Grain Exchange gives the markets every noon. To date the stations heard by the above outfit are Ames, Iowa City, Des Moines, Fort Dodge, Kansas City, Dubuque, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha, Detroit, Dearborn, Akron, O., Schnectedy, and Boston. Come in at noon when Ames gives the report and "listen in."

COMMUNITY CLUB MEETING POSTPONED

On account of Prof. Shimek from Iowa City, being unable to be here this Friday the Community club meeting is postponed till Friday July 7. Prof Shimek is in Indiana doing research work among the sand dunes.

The Club is very fortunate in getting Prof. Shimek, he is a man of nation wide reputation. He will speak on conservation July 7th, if he can possibly get here, if he can't the college program planned for August will be given. So you will be assured of a good program if the speaker is unable to come.

Community Club and Council Co-Operating

Gift Of Capt. Tyrrell Being Fitted Out For Convenience Of Tourists

TO HOLD BIG DAY IN JULY

Tyrrell Park, located at the corner of Franklin Grove, and a gift to Belmond and community from one of its former residents and citizens, Capt. W. C. Tyrrell, Sr., of Beaumont Texas, is being made into one of the finest tourists camps and beauty spots in northern Iowa.

The ladies of the Community Welfare Club, in co-operation with the city officials, have been "fixing up" the park, and Belmond will soon have a resting spot and an accomodation for travelers which it may well be proud of. A fine well with pump has been dug and is now in use; three "dutch ovens" have been installed for the use of tourists and picnic parties in cooking; tables are being made, and benchers placed; toilets have been built, and many other improvements made which will make Tyrrell Park not only a fine tourists park but one of the natuarl beauty spots in this section of the country.

Park is Natural Timber Land

The Tyrrell Park is natural timber ten acres of it, and all furniture—tables, seats, and the lake—is being built to harmonize with the surroundings, rough and crude, some of it from untrimmed limbs, the seats built between or fastened to, the trees. The Community Club will be glad to accept any donations the public may care to make in the way of benches or tables for the park, and those who wish to give something along this line may call M. D. Sullivan, chairman of the park committee, or Mrs. H. L. Gowdy, representing the Community Club.

Club to Place Park Signs

Already tourists have been using the park for camping purposes, and the past week or two has seen a number of them taking advantage of its cool shade and useful accomodations. As it becomes better known and the many improvements planned are made, Tyrrell Park will undoubtedly be the Mecca of every tourist who is looking for a place to camp. The Community Club is having signs made relative to Tyrrell Park, which it will place on the Wilson Highway north and south of Belmond, for a distance of five miles, stating that "Tyrrell Park, so many miles to Belmond," giving the loca tion and a welcome. This is a splendid idea, and one which will pertain not only to the park but to the town as well.

Will Honor Donor With Park Day

In honor of the donor, Capt. Tyrrell the Community Club is planning a "Tyrrell Park Day," to be held, as at present planned, in the early part of July, when Mr. Tyrrell is expected here for a visit with his son, W. C. Jr., and family. The club plans to combine its annual picnic with this day, hold it at the park, with an appropriate program, and hopes to have Mr. Tyrrell present at the event. Plans for this day, which every Belmond citizen will heartily approve, are yet in the formative stage, but with the progressive members of Belmond's livest organization in community welfare in charge, the city may expect a real affair and will look forward in anticepation of the coming event.

CANDIDATES FILE THEIR EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

Expense accounts of the various political candidates in the primary show that Atty. Jensen, of Belmond, expended $224.22, half of which was for circulars, postage, cards, gas, meals and lodging, and the other half for newspaper advertising. J. D. Baker spent $34. 50, of which $12 was for gas and oil. D. E. Harris was out $18, and R. C. Morse, democratic candidate for supervisor,, spent just an even dollar.

CROP CONDITION IS FAIR

The condition of the crops in this vicinity is, taken generally, pretty fair. Oats are reported short in many cases, and some fields hardly worth cutting, while there are other fields where they are still green and growing. Wheat, of which there appears to be little, is reported pretty fair; barley short but fairly well fitted out. Corn, the old stand-by, is doing nicely, thank you, and is standing the dry weather in very good shape. Around Belmond the corn is much better than further west, we are told; most of it is knee high or better now, and coming strong. Sugar beets are doing nicely with the exception of the late plantings, which are much in need of rain, pastures are all drying up and very badly in need of rain.

What Water Does for Batteries

Not too much or too little—but just the right quantity of water ought to be kept in your battery all the time.

The water does two things: it keeps the battery solution over the tops of the plates so that the whole plate surface is used; and it gives proper strength of solution.

Don't hesitate to ask us for water service even if yours isn't a Willard Battery. The Willard Standards of Service are the same for every make.

SAYS PROSPERITY IS RETURNING

Iowa's old-time prosperity is coming back.

Farmers and livestock breeders are in a much better concition than they were in a year ago, according to a report given out by the directors in charge of the coming Iowa State Fair.

Entries in the live stock departments for the Iowa State Fair are larger by far than they have been in recent years, Secretary A. R. Corey announced. This same trend has also been evidenced in inquiries received from all parts of the state regarding exhibits of grain, fruits and garden produce to be entered at the fair. Approximately 30 counties sent collective grain exhibits to the 1921 State Fair. This number will be very much increased this year, according to present indications.

If concession reservations are an indication, the 1932 State Fair will be a record-breaker. More than double the amount of space contracted for at this date last year has now been reserved. Officials state that the concession people are always a good barometer of the condition of their localities and declare that this augurs well for a big exposition August 23 to September 1.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

THE COUNTY NURSE

As has been reported in the Independent, there is more or less concentrated action being started towards having the question of the County Nurse submitted to the voters once more, at the fall election. It is the almost universal opinion among those who favor the retention of the nurse's services, that had the voters known more of what the nurse has done; of what her function is, and the results that have been accomplished, the result of the primary vote would have been different.

The News, in a brief editorial last week, suggests that those who are pushing the proposition may overdo it, and swing sentiment just the opposit to what is intended. There is truth in that, but if the nurse is to be retained, the public must have the question fairly placed before it in all angles, so that an accurate and unprejudiced judgment can be rendered. The County Nurse question, submitted at the primary, was under a handicap in that it was classed by a great many people in the same category as the county fair—and they emphatically did not favor the fair. They did not really understand the question. When they do, the Independent believes they will return a favorable verdict. For surely it is as important that the children of the country be given as much consideration as the hogs and cattle. We take great pains to give our stock better quarters, better foods and better care; should we neglect the children, then, in these same essentials?

The cost to the county is small; the individual amounts assessed to each tax payer are too small to argue about. It is simply a matter of whether we believe such a nurse, giving care and attention to our children, is a worth while proposition, and we do not believe that the majority of people in Wright county place their hogs before their children.

KILLING THEIR BEST FRIEND

One of the strongest cartoons "Ding" has ever created was published in the Register last week, depicting Union Labor as standing over the dead body of its best friend, Public Sympathy, whom Labor had just murdered. There is a world of truth in it; Union Labor is murdering its best friend. Public sympathy has been on the side of Union labor for years, but the past year or two has witnessed a great reversal. Such things as the murderous battle in Illinois last week, in which scores of non-union men were wounded and killed, many of them, according to the Press, deliberately and cold-bloodedly, are fast killing all sympathy the public has held for organized labor. The railroad unions, with their threats and strikes, their demands for exorbitant wages, and "public be damned" attitude, are steadily losing their most powerful weapon. Organized labor is needed, it is a just and right thing, but no body, however powerful, can do such things and remain intact. The days of the Czars are over.

This argument on whether American ships are to be booze joints reminds us of that line about "water, water everywhere, and not a drop to drink."

They christen ships with a bottle of wine, and now they want to keep right on feeding it. Prohibition will certainly cause a lot of travel if this goes thru.

One fellow wants us to boost the ball team, and another one wants to boost it, but they have different ways of wanting it boosted. If we boost it one way, the other will boost us; and if we boost it 'tother way, we'll be boosted again. Ain't it funny how everybody wants "George" to do it?

Our name isn't George, anyway.

It's Mud according to some folks.

Well, as Shakepeare once remarked, what's in a name? Sometimes there's a lot; a One dollar bill is different from a Ten dollar bill.

We had a compliment handed us the other day; fellow from Rowan tried to pay his subscription with a twenty dollar bill.

RADIO

VACUUM TUBE USED AS RADIO DETECTOR

How This Device Depends on Emission and Control of Electrons for Its Operation.

Readers of the radio column are urged to clip each article and paste it in a file book. The articles printed are continuous and the entire series will be valuable for reference.

The greatest advances made in the past few years in the radio art have been due in one way or another to the use of vacuum tubes. In view of this fact a more careful consideration of them will be of interest.

All of these tubes, known by a variety of names, such as radiotron, audion, seriotron (trade names of the manufacturer) depend upon the same fundamental principles for their operation. For the sake of simplicity of brevity these will be referred to in this column simply as vacuum tubes. A vacuum tube can be made to function as a detector, as an amplifier, or as an oscillator.

The vacuum tube depends on the emission and control of electrons for its operation. The electron is the smallest subdivision of matter which mankind recognizes and it carries the smallest known charge of negative electricity. For years previous to electron research it had been held by scientists that matter was built up of distinct particles or units which they called atoms and molecules. At first the molecule was assumed to be the smallest quantity of matter that could have a separate existence or take part in chemical action, but more vigorous research pointed to the fact that the molecule is made up of still smaller elements which are termed atoms; that is, a molecule may be composed of several atoms. Then for a time it was assumed that the atom was the very smallest quantity of an element that could exist, but later researches have revealed that atoms may be further subdivided into particles called electrons. The apparent mass of an electron is about one-eighteen-hundreth part of that of an atom of hydrogen which is the smallest of the chemical atoms.

According to the electron theory an atom consists of a definite number of electrons grouped around a nucleus having a positive charge and so long as none of the component electrons are driven from the atom, the latter possess no detectable charge. The positive charge on the nucleus is said to be exactly neutralized by the negative charges on the electrons grouped about it.

Suppose now that by some means an electron can be detached from the atom. Then the atom becomes what is known as a positive ion and it exhibits the properties of a positively charged body, or in other words since an electron which carries a negative charge has been removed from the atom which has equal positive and negative charges, the portion of the atom now remaining has a deficiency of negative charge and acts like any positively charged body.

On the other hand if some force can be brought to bear that will add an electron to a normal atom which is neutral as far as electrical charges are measured, the result will be a negative ion, which will possess all the properties of a negatively charged body. An atom then which has a deficiency of electrons is called a positive ion and one having excess of electrons is called a negative ion.

Since each electron carries a negative charge of electricity an electron represents a certain quantity of electricity. Forcing electrons to move from one point to another causes electricity to flow. The ability of any medium to conduct electricity or allow a current to flow through it depends upon the number of free electrons available as carriers of charges.

It has been known for many years that the space surrounding a piece of heated metal is a conductor of electricity. It has been demonstrated more recently that this is due to the release of electrons and that if an incandescent metal be placed in a bulb exhausted of all gases, pure electrons will be liberated from the incandescent metal.

In a vacuum tube such as we are using at the present time, the piece of metal used to furnish the electrons is called the filament and is usually made of tungsten and sometimes is coated with oxides to increase the electron emission. For convenience the filament of a vacuum tube is heated by a battery current and it is this heat furnished by the battery current that constitutes the force that disrupts the atoms of the filament and liberates electrons.

Fig. III is a spherical glass bulb from which all the air and gases have been exhausted and having mounted in it a filament C-D which can be heated to incandescence by the "A" battery connected to it, and the metallic plate E. When the filament C-D is heated to incandescence by the "A" battery connected across its terminals electrons are emitted. Connecting the cold plate E to the incandescent filament C-D by means of the circuit E-F-G-H which includes a current meter and a "B" battery, with its negative side connected to the filament lead at H and its positive side connected through the current meter, the plate becomes electrically positive with respect to the filament.

Since like charges repel and unlike charges attract, there will be a movement of electrons from the filament to the positively charged plate, and the current meter will show a deflection which indicates that a current is flowing in the circuit E-F-G-H.

Increasing the "B" battery voltage causes an increase in the current flowing in the circuit E-F-G-H, the plate circuit, until the positive charge on the plate E is so strong that all of the electrons given off by the filament are attracted to it. Assuming that the temperature of the filament is kept constant and that the plate voltage has been increased to the point where all of the electrons given off by the filament are attracted to it, any further increases in the "B" battery voltage will not cause any increase in the current in the plate circuit.

Increasing the temperature of the filament will increase the total number of the electrons emitted.

FRISCO TALKS TO HONOLULU

New Radio Station at the Presidio Can Be Heard Half Way Around the Globe.

"Hello, Honolulu."

That may sound like fiction, but it is a reality, nevertheless.

The new radio station at the Presidio, San Francisco, with aerial conditions right, can be heard half way around the globe. Officials in charge of construction declare it to be the most powerful vacuum tube transmitter on the Pacific coast.

Located on the highest point in the Presidio, overlooking San Francisco bay, two 150-foot aerial towers to augment its efficiency, the new station will command similar stations in Salt Lake City and Cheyenne.

Radiophones on German Trains.

Wireless telephone instruments will be installed on a number of important German express trains, and receiving instruments will be placed in hotels and embassies, according to an announcement made recently. Experiments conducted in a moving freight car have shown that the wireless system works well, the men engaged in the testing of the instruments being able to hold conversations with friends in Berlin. The tests were made under the observation of engineers, military attaches and the diplomatic representatives of the United States and Sweden.

Handling Vacuum Tubes.

When you handle the vacuum tubes of your receiver great care should be exercised that they are not knocked about or that the elements are broken. These little lamps are the heart and soul of the set. A good way to operate these tubes is to keep the glow just a little below the critical point.

ADVICE FOR AMATEURS.

The voltages applied to the plate circuits of amplifying tubes are not extremely critical and one voltage control will suffice. The detector tube, however, is often very critical and an efficient potentiometer will work wonders in controlling it.

Apparatus used for the reception of broadcasting is exactly the same as that used for the reception of code signals. The transmitting equipment, however, is different.

The use of a single wire for reception is advantageous because it lessens the amount of objectional interference in the way of static. It is equally as good as a multiple wire system for reception.

Defective "B" batteries will often cause roaring in the telephone receivers.

The electron often talked about is the smallest known quantity of negative electrical energy. In motion it makes up the electric current.

A "soft" vacuum tube is used as a detector tube and a "hard" vacuum tube as an amplifier. The terms "hard" and "soft" refer to degree of evacuation.

Radio waves travel at the same speed as light, namely 186,000 miles per second.

A wavemeter is an instrument used for checking up the wave lengths of sending and receiving stations.

Gas pipe or water pipe systems may be used for grounds, the latter being more advisable.

Lightning protection secured by grounding the antenna when not in use is essential and is required by the underwriters.

Bible Thoughts for This Week

Sunday.

ALL IS WELL:—Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.—John 14: 1, 2.

Monday.

WHY WILL YE DIE?—As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked. . . Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways: for why will ye die. O house of Israel?—Ezekiel 33: 11.

Tuesday.

PEACE WITH ALL MEN:—Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.—Hebrews 12: 14.

Wednesday.

THE WAY TO PEACE:—Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee.—Job 22: 21.

Thursday.

PROCLAMATION OF PEACE:—Glory be to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.—Luke 2: 14.

Friday.

REFUGE, STRENGTH, HELP:—God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.—Psalm 46: 1.

Saturday.

PERFECT PEACE:—Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee.—Isaiah 26: 3.

GOODELL NEWS

Last Thursday while George Rust was raking hay one of the horses began to kick and broke the rake tongue. George was thrown under the rake but he escaped with but a slight injury on his right limb.

Mr. and Mrs. Mellem returned from Lake Mills on Friday. His father who died at Minneapolis on June 19th was buried at Lake Mills.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Christensen and Mrs. Charles Conklin visited with Mrs. Stacy at Lake Mills on Sunday.

Mr. Jay Griggs spent a few days at Spirit Lake last week, fishing.

Mrs. Butterfield of Belmond was calling on Goodell friends one day last week.

Mrs.L. W. Sherwood was very sick last week with ear trouble. Miss Maude Griggs her sister is helping to care for her.

Mr. Will Langlitz went to Hampton last Friday for treatment.

Mr. and Mrs. Hio Harberts drove to Hampton on Saturday to consult the doctor.

On June 23 the North Avery Progressive Club meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bachman. There was a fine attendance. After an interesting program the guests were served with ice cream and cake.

Miss Ina Ahrenkiel who has been visiting in the east came home Saturday. She stopped at Waterloo to visit friends. Mr. and Mrs. Lund came with her and spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. John Ahrenkiel.

U. B. Church Notes.

Last Sunday Miss Sanborn gave an excellent address on the work of the Iowa Children's home.

The church finance Committee will hold an ice cream social on Saturday night July 1st in the building formerly occupied by the Goodell Drug store.

There has been a fine attendance at the Sunday school of late and the offering hs been good.

Everyone is invited to meet with us for the study of God's word.

July 2nd will be communion service. Sunday school it at 9:45 and general worship at 11:00 a. m.

The way the ladies are making improvements at the Silent City, co-operating with a Friend, the more we consider that suggestion that the road from town be paved and the community renamed the "Twin Cities," the more we are inclined to think that an injustice would be done the Silent City.

Pretty soon Dempsey and Wills will be "forced" into a match at a measly couple hundred thousand dollars for thirty minutes work. Wills ought to get the biggest share; he'll have to work so much harder.

"Things are slow this time of year; why should I advertise now?" is the question a man asked one day last week.

That man has driven an automobile. He knows that you can't start an automobile on high. First, you get the engine going; then you "put her in low. When she's moving a little faster, you change to second speed and finally, when the wheels are going round at a good clip, you shift into high.

Why is this? Because an automobile is a heavy load weighing thousands of pounds. It takes time and lots of power to get that big piece of metal started and rolling along smoothly and rapidly. You can't start an automobile right off at sixty miles an hour.

In the same way you can't advertise today and have the orders you want on your desk tomorrow evening. People don't do busness that way. You have to tell them what you want to sell, and keep on telling them many times over to get their orders. Some people are harder to start than automobiles and they move more slowly.

Some Independent readers are just as anxious to buy your goods as you are to sell them. But they don't know about 'em. Tell them what you have got. Start in at once. Tell them facts in your advertisements every week and when they are placing orders—YOU'LL GET YOURS.

CROOK GETS AWAY WITH $207

Hampton Chronicle: Some one in Manson City is out a few dollars on account of cashing three forged checks on June 12th. The name of a Hampton business man, W. L. Beringer, was signed to all three of the checks, and they were made out to George C. Miller.

Two of the checks were for $79.50 each, and were drawn on checks of the Franklin County State Bank. The other check was for $48.50 and was drawn on a check of the Citizens National Bank. When the checks were received for payments by the banks in Hampton the forgery was at once detected, and they were returned to the bank at Mason City which sent them here for collection.

It is understood that the checks were cashed at some store in Mason City, and in that case the concern which cashed the checks are out the money. As there is a George Miller who resides near Hampton, and in this way was able to get by with his game at some of the stores.

The Rock Island depot in this city was entered yesterday morning between 2:00 and 3:00 o'clock while the night operator, H. A. Pickett, was up town getting a lunch, and $48.03 was taken from the cash drawer.

The thief or thieves gained entrance through the freight house, which is connected with the ticket office, by pushing in on the big sliding door on the west side of the building and then unfastening the lock.

Nothing in the depot was molested, but the cash drawer, and the yeggs either missed or did not care to be bothered with over $100 worth of checks which were in the drawer.

The oil station at the Rock Island tracks, just south of the depot, was also entered later in the morning and several gallons of oil and some gasoline were removed therefrom.

Officers are now working on the case but as yet have not succeeded in uncovering any enlightening clues.

OIL IN IOWA?

Iowa may see a coal or oil boom, or both, at least something is doing if that wise old thing geology does slip a cog. Soundings and prospectings are being made in Winnebago county with the chances that coal and oil prospects may be unearthed to equal or surpass Texas and Oklahoma.

The prospecting is in the hands of reliable parties and is not for the purpose of forming wildcat or speculative companies, but of getting the real facts of what has been hinted at by oil and coal already discovered. Here is the story:

Some thirty years ago on the farm known as the Rev. Salverson farm, half mile south of Vinje and three miles west of Scarville, crude oil was found in a well dug about 25 feet deep with a spade. There was also evidences of coal at about that depth. The rumor went the rounds more as a matter of gossip or as a joke, and the discovery was soon forgotten.

T. H. Thompson, the banker at Miller, owns this farm now and N. E. Thurston of Forest City owns the farm adjoining this on the south. About eighteen months ago while drillers were sinking a well on the Thurston farm at the depth of about 30 feet, crude oil that would burn and was consumed, was taken from the well and a vein of coal of 4 to 7 feet deep was also struck.

Several different soundings were made on this and the Thompson farm with similar results, coal and oil being found in each instance. A geoloist called declared the oil a fair quality of crude oil and gave it as his judgment that the same was forced from many hundred feet below thru crevices of the rock and oth- geological formations.

Had the speculation mood of Iowa investors been as greedy as the previous year, undoubtedly this discovery would be in the heighth of development by this time, but the various investments in southern oil fields and even Iowa projects deterred any probability of testing the matter out by a company.

However, now the interest in the reports of the finding is reviving and men of the capital are awaiting the further reports of a geologist they have employed and have secured tentative lease, it is said, to sink wells or shafts if the geologist's report will warrant the out lay.

There seems to be no question as to the fact that oil and coal have been discoverd and the results of the investigation may prove a big and pleasing surprise to Northern Iowa. The oil and coal which have not been planted must come from somewhere in geological formations and the outcome of the shafts, if they are sunk, will be watched with unusual interest.—Mason City Globe Gazette.

KLEMME DEFEATS SCHOOL BONDS

The special school election held at the city hall Monday to vote on the $15,000 bond issue, brought out a goodly number of voters, both the men and the women.

The proposition was downed by 35 votes.

Many had hoped that the voters would accept the bond issue so that the school could be enlarged to take care of the full twelve grades but this plan will now have to be abandoned.

STATE DERIVES MUCH FROM SALE OF CIGARETS

Cigaret smoking in Iowa enriches the state exchequer by $1,000 a day for 2,000,000 cigarets a day are smoked in Iowa. The state imposes a tax of 2 cents on each 20 cigarets. This is at the rate of $520,000 income a year on a yearly consumption of 730,000,000 cigarets. During the first eight days of June receipts averaged $2,000 a day. Iowa is the only state in the union which makes unlicensed selling of cigarets a misdemeanor with a fine and punishment. A number of Iowa towns have refused to license the sale of cigarets. At the state meeting of the Spanish-American war veterans at Grinnell recently, several smokers were considerably chagrinned when they discovered that they could not get their favorite smokes in that college town.

U. S. GRAIN GROWERS

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)

Financial negotitations for $50,000 to meet capital stock requirements for admission of the U. S. Grain Growers Sales Co. to the Chicago and Minneapolis grain exchanges and other arrangements for credit of a million dollars or more to finance grain movements, were reported to the directorate of the U. S. Grain Growers Inc. by Pres. C. H. Gustafson at the quarterly board meeting last week. While the entire matter is in the formative stage and was presented to the directors for their consideration, Mr. Gustafson stated that the officers of the farmer's grain firm had had numerous conferences and reached an agreement on details with principals who were willing to give this assistance to the growers' organization.

"It must be generally understood that sales offices which will be in position to handle grain through the exchanges is only a part of the selling and grain handling arrangements of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc.," said Mr. Gustafson. "We have examples of farmers' firms who attempted to handle grain without membership in established exchanges with the result that a goodly portion had to be resold to commission men holding membership or to the 'scalpers.' A double commission charge is the result. We are going to profit by this mistake. The Grain Growers must be able to handle any kind of grain at any time."

B. F. Hales, farmer-business man and formerly active in the grain markets in the barley and feed business is the man who stands ready to give such financial assistance to the grain selling operations of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc. Mr. Hales is extremely active despite his 67 years and has a record in financial circles of Chicago as a fighter. On the other hand, he is now devoting practically all his time and attention to his 800 acre farm outside of Chicago where he has a herd of more than 200 registered Shorthorns and is known as one of the most generous supporters of the Shorthorn cattle trade for the past few years.

ROWAN NEWS

The churches were largely attended last Sunday when the Children's Day programs were given. The programs reflected great credit on those who were in charge.

The Ladies Aid of the M. E. church will meet with Mrs. Henry Azeltine on Thursday of this week.

The pastor of the Methodist church Rev. Harold Tomkinson, will deliver a special sermon next Sunday evening on "The Birth of a Nation," with reference to our independence and the price of our freedom. In the morning he will speak in "The Nobility of Our Young."

Mr. and Mrs. Westaby of Alexander were in town last Sunday and attended the Children's Day program.

Mr.r and Mrsr. Ed. Underdahl left last week for a vacation trip thro Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Gay Fletcher are touring thro Wisconsin.

The Clarion tennis players are expected this week for a game with the local boys.

The Rowan horseshoe pitchers returned home from Hampton last week with victory to their credit. The contest was keen and close, but the Rowan boys won out. Dan Whitten was Rowan's star performer.

The Auxiliary of the American Legion are still adding names to their membership list. Miss Florence Box is the President of the local organization.

Last Friday afternoon the following families enjoyed a fine time at Lake Cornelia taking a picnic supper with them: Arthur Box, of Clarion, H. J. C. Box, R. H. Virden, D. W. Whitten, Will Duffy, S. B. Heath, Howard Box, J. F. Howell, George Aldrich, Jake Aldinger, and A. E. Emerson.

Mr. and Mrs. Gay Fletcher and baby, Mrs. Dan Fletcher and Mrs. Morris Sullivan started for Bruce, Wis., Thursday to visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tim Weld.

Born to Mr. and Mrs Fred Stadtlander, a baby girl, Sunday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Hansen motored to Iowa Falls one day last week.

Mrs. Henry Hansen visited at the home of her mother, Mrs. Joe Daley at Hampton Thursday.

Messers William Steffens and Phil Klineschrodt spent a couple of days the past week at Clear Lake, where they enjoyed some good fishing.

Mr. J. H. Dix, of Hampton, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. Bingham.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Pritchett and daughter, Mrs. O. F. Braden were Belmond callers Friday.

Saturday afternoon about twenty relatives of Mrs. J. F. Howell gathered at her home to help her celebrate the anniveryary of her birthday. The afternoon was spent by the ladies in sewing rug rags. A picnic supper was served at six o'clock. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. E. Bingham, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bingham, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bingham and daughter, Faye, Mr. and Mrs. John Pritchett, Mr. and Mrs. George Pritchett, Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Braden, Mr. and Mrs. Will Bingham and family, Mrs. Clint Kercheval and son, Charles, and Mrs. F. L. Kercheval.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Stumph and family visited last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Robinson in Meservey. The Robinson family accompanied them home Sunday.

C. E. Lindsey has been on the sick list the past few days.

Rev. Tomkinson is suffering from a broken foot which was injured when an auto tipped over in the ditch as he was on his way to the Sunday school picnic which was held at the Morgan township picnic ground last Thursday.

Mrs. B. Bradfield and daughter, of Spirit Lake have been visiting at the home of her mother, Mrs. Jennie Rowan the past week.

Mr. A. J. Azeltine and sons, Wes, Will, Ed, and Ray motored to Iowa Falls Sunday to see their daughter and sister, Mrs. L. D. Bingham. They found her resting more com fortably than she had been for the past few days. Her, son, Harold has returned from Washington, D. C. Sunday morning and will stay with his mother for a while.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Miller and daughter, Blanche and an aunt and cousin who are visiting at the Miller home spent Tuesday at the Guy Stumph home.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Snow visited in Rowan Tuesday as they were enroute to their home in Goldfield from Waterloo. Miss Gladys Whitten accompanied them home.

Mr. and Mrs. George Liming and son Glenn and daughter Lorine, D. K. Stout and wife, Ed Underdahl and wife, Sophia Eson, Garnett Stumph and Nelliee Hackley enjoyed a picnic supper at Lake Cornelia lesa Tuesday evening.

Mesdames Herb Hadley, W. R. and Leonard McCallum motored to Dows Wednesday.

Mrs. J. A. Whitten and little daughter, Billie went to Monkato Minnesota, Wednesday to visit at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jurden Brinkman.

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Whitten and the Misses Mildred Duffy and Cecil Walker spent Tuesday evening in Thorton at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Whitten.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bingham and daughter, Faye, and Mrs. O. F. Braden motored to Iowa Falls Wednesday to visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Bingham.

Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Harris are rejoicing over the arrival of a nine pound baby girl which arrived at their home Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rood, of Garner spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Kieth.

Miss Carol Hoke has been suffering the past week from an infected foot. She is at the home of her sister, Mrs. D. K. Stout.

Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Ballou and daughter, LaVonne, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kercheval spent Sunday with relatives at Webster City.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Tresidder, and daughter, Ruth of Clarion spent Sunday at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Tresidder.

Mrs. Anton Hospaska and daughter, Martha, of Clarion spent Sunday with Rowan relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. L. W. McCallum, who have been at the home of his parents the past few months, have moved back to town to the house lately vacated by the Gay Fletcher family.

Mrs. F. H. Fowler has been suffering from an infected eye. She has made several trips to Dows the past week where Dr. George has been caring for it.

The American Legion Auxiliary met in regular session Thursday evening. Four new members were initiated into the organization. We are anxious to make our chapter 100 percent. The meetings promise to get more interesting as we get better organized and used to the work. Anyone who is a mother, wife daughter or sister of an American Legion member is eligible to membership. If your boy does not belong to the Legion urge him to join so you can join in our good times.

James Rowen Married at Clarion Last Wednesday.

Last Wednesday morning at eight o'clock James Rowen was united in marriage to Miss Marjorie Griffen, of Clarion. The mothers of the bride and groom witnessed the ceremony. After a wedding breakfast at the home of the bride's parents, the happy couple left in an auto for a trip to St. Paul and thru Minnesota. Their many friends extend congratulations and wish them a long happy journey thru life.

Messers. Fred Hackley, L. A. McCallum, D. W. Whitten, G. Gunderson, Ed Azeltine, Joe Simons and John Riker were at Hampton last last Tuesday where they played in a horse shoe tournament with the Hampton players. Three games were played of 150 points each. Rowan winning by four points. D. W. Whitten held Rowan's highest score.

WRIGHT COUNTY FARM PICNIC ON JULY 4TH

purpose, not to exceed $3,000,000 for any one year. A direct subsidy is proposed to vessels based on gross tons, miles traveled and speed, of one half of one cent for each gross ton and one hundred nautical miles traveled. This subsidy may increase up to 2 1-10 cents added to above rate and under certain conditions this subsidy may be doubled.

It has been admitted that some of the fast liners of large tonnage would be entitled to an annual subsidy of $900,000 and if that was doubled under the discretion proposed in the bill the ship could be paid $11,800,000 annually.

This subsidy would continue at least fifteen years if made a law and be continued under the provisions of the bill till ships show a net return of ten percent on capital invested.

Money must be provided to pay this subsidy, and make the low interest rate loans provided for in the bill. The farmers will have to pay their share of this reserve fund. The argument for the bill is that we must have a merchant marine to enlarge and hold our present export trade. You must decide whether it is necessary to subsidize ships to hold our foreign trade.

MOVIE BEING DEMONSTRATED

The county agent is now demonstrating, in the various townships, the moving picture machine which, if purchased will be used throughout the county in conducting the regular township Farm Bureau meetings.

At the May Board of Directors meeting it was decided that the moving picture machine should be demonstrated in each township so as to give each individual member opportunity to see the pictures and vote on the matter of purchasing the machine. All members seem very enthusiastic over the "Movie" and the machine will, undoubtedly, be purchesed at the next directors meeting.

CLOTHING SPECIALIST COMING

Miss Martha Foster, clothing specialist, from Ames, will be in Wright County July 5, 6, and 7 to lecture and demonstrate on the subject "Use and Alteration of Commercial Patterns." Quite a number of townships have asked for this specialized work by Miss Foster and it has been necessary to schedule the work so as to hold group meetings in order to give all ladies of the county opportunity to hear Miss Foster.

The schedule to be followed by Miss Foster in conducting the demonstrations is as follows:

Clarion July 5, 10:00 a. m. County Agents' office.

Eagle Grove July 5, 2:00 p. m. Community Rooms, Citizens' State Bank.

Dows July 6, 10:00 a. m. State Bank of Dows.

Belmond July 6, 2:00 p. m. City Hall.

Goldfield July 7, 10:00 a. m. Whyte Motor Co.

Wall Lake Twp. July 7, 2:00 p. m. Center School.

PRETTY SOFT FOR THE WOMEN

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)

"Yes" answered Brown, upon being questioned, "Eliza, the wife, is sick. Don't know jest what's ailin' her. She got up this morning and got breakfast for me and the hands at five, and then she did some washin' and baking' and the churnin' and a little cleanin' besides diggin' some taters and a-weedin' a patch of garden. She got dinner and was a-sewin' and a-mendin' this afternoon when she sort o keeled over. I jest Kain't think what kin be the matter, for she's been a-doing nothing but keepin' house here easy-like for the last fifteen years."

WEBSTER ON AGRICULTURE

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)

"Let us never forget that the cultivation of the earth is the most important labor of man. Unstable is the future of a country that has lost its taste for agriculture. If there is one lesson of history which is unmistakable it is that national strength lies very near the soil."

Kinseth's Store News

Where are you going to celebrate the Fourth? At home? If you are —and a lot of folks say that's where they're going to stay—then you want to be sure to come to the Store on the Corner and see what we can give you to help make the day successful.

Everything you need to make the Fourth Dinner a success. Come in and let us show you—and you won't have to blow in a lot of coin to do it, either. We've some real bargains that you want to look over. We've a few Silver Prunes left, extra good ones, and if you'll try a real prune dish with these, you'll have something as good as ice cream. Then we've got canned beans, cheaper than dried ones, canned cherries and grapes, everything in cans, and a big stock of fresh, clean groceries.

You know they used to say that the Fourth wasn't a real day without a new pair of shoes. That holds good yet, and if you'll ask us we'll show you some real ones. And percales, ginghams and such things for the new Fourth Dress.

Come to the Store on the Corner, folks, and save money to celebrate on. And save it every day after, too.

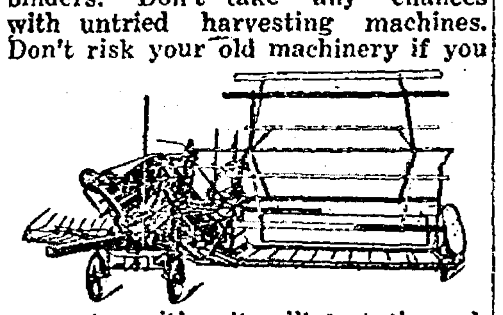
Griesy's Store News

Vol. 1 BELMOND, IOWA, JUNE 29, 1922. NO. 17.

Don't worry too much because people do not always agree with you. Nobody agreed with Noah.

Take No Chances

Harvest is a fight from start to finish—a fight to get ahead of bad weather—a fight to save the grain in the shortest possible time. In fact, it is a fight against time. Saving a few hours in getting the grain cut may mean several hundred dollars in your pocket. Whether you win or lose in this fight to save the grain depends almost entirely upon the kind of harvesting machine you have. You know that you can depend on a Deering or McCormick binders. Don't take any chances with untried harvesting machines. Don't risk your old machinery if you are not positive it will last through the season without causing serious delays. Play safe. See us now.



A Hot Weather Worker

You don't have to lay off because of heat, or stop when the going is hard if you own a Titan 10-20 tractor. You can tear into work in the morning and by nightfall you've put a lot of it behind you. Right now is a good time to buy your Titan. The Harvester Company's free plow offer expired some time ago, but we were foresighted and bought several tractors before the expiration date. Therefore we can still sell you a Titan at $700, complete with regular equipment and a FREE three-bottom plow. Our supply of tractors and plows is limited so you'd better let us hear from you at once.

You don't need to have flies in the house. You may think you do, but you don't. Screen your porches and windows. Trap the fly before he gets in. Keep the back yard clean and keep everlastingly at it.

That Primrose, "Handsome Blue Machine,"
Just come in to look and view.
You'll like the bowl that saves the cream,
And other worth-while features, too.

Order repairs for your harvesting and haying machines now and save the "cussing" for some other time when you'll need it.

One Ball Of Twine

looks very much like any other ball of twine. But the discovery of the difference between the good old reliable Deering which you should buy and the inferior grade which you might have been induced to buy, comes too late. Remember, only bound bundles pay. The great majority of farmers buy good twine—the Harvester Company brands, and they get their money's worth. Next in importance to getting good twine is to get it now. Don't wait until the last minute. Buy now.

It costs only three cents an hour to pump water with an International Engine.

Protect Your Hay Crop

You can speen up the hay harvest and save man power with an International hay loader. The hot, strength-wasting job of pitching hay into the wagon is done away with. Load-time is greatly reduced so that there is less danger or damage to the cut hay from sudden wind and rain storms. One crop saved is worth many times the price of the loader. International hay loaders are almost enetirely steel-built. The parts are held in allgnment even in the roughest fields. They handle the hay from the lightest swarth to the heaviest windrow—practically no limit to capacity. Let us show you our complete line of International haying machines, including mowers, side-delivery rakes, self-dump rakes, tedders, sweep rakes and stackers.

PLAYING THE BABY

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)

Occasionally we find a man who has become a littie put out about this or that and has cancelled his bureau membership. Usually it is something of no importance and very often it was something for which the bureau was not in the least to blame.

We might expect a man at the age of one or two years, if he cannot have his own way, to knock down his block house, to scatter his play-things all over the floor and to yell that he is through. When he gets to be 21 or 22 he generally has begun to learn that he cannot always have his own way, that the other members of society have a right to their opinions and that only by bowing to the will of the majority can we hope to get along. He has generally learned not to kick up his heels and holler that he won't play.

Reduce Your Production Costs

Farming, like every other business, must cut down the overhead.

It is not a question of being able to afford a Fordson; it is a question of being able to continue farming on the old too-costly basis.

The farmer's problem is not all a sales problem; it is also a production problem. He must cut down the cost of production.

The Fordson does more work at a lower cost and in less time than the old hand methods.

WITHIN AN INCH

Pat was the man who did all the odds jobs about the place, and owing to petty thieving, his employer instructed him to get a good yard dog.

Pat was out all day and in the evening landed home with a dachshund.

"What on earth have you brought along, Pat?" queried his employer.

"Well, sir," said Pat, "he's the nearest I could get to a yard; he's two feet elivin inches long."—Minneapolis Trioune.

THE OLD-TIME BUGGIES

There was a lot of excitement in Knoxville a few days ago when a farmer bought a new two horse power buggy. The buggy manufacturers lost out because they didn't keep up to date. It is our idea that a buggy equipped with a windshield and a device for preventing the reins from getting—well, you know where the reins always managed to get when you and Mable were out riding—would find a ready sale, even in this day of sport model "eights" and disk wheel flivvers. One could drive a team in the good old days with one hand and at the same time keep the rig from going in the ditch. For Sunday night use the buggy and a geentle team never will have a rival. Of course you couldn't go very fast or far in one evening, but just think of the fun you had! The 1922 boys who take Mable or Nellie out riding in their $2,000 speedsters have the advantage of a more attractive bait, than did the boys of an earlier year, but the percentage of poor catches remains the same.—Carroll Times.

EIGHT INCH HAIL STONES

The southern part of Kossuth county was visited by a teriffic hail storm about 8 o'clock Monday evening and the growing corn and other crops were more or less injured. Most of the hail stones were about the size of hen's eggs, but some were considerably larger. One was picked up that measured eight and one half inches in circumference.—Algona Republican.

A big powerful motor slowed up as the occupants perceived a car of very modeset preportions standing by the roadside in a rather battered condition. The owner of the car was on his knees, endeavoring to straighten ont some of the parts.

"Have an accident?" queriede the man in the big car.

"No, thank you," grimly replied the other, "just had one."

MAKE FLY SPRAY FOR COWS

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)
Keep Up Production By Removing Pests From Dairy Barns

A good fly spray can be made from the following materials that will keep the barns cleaned of that pest, say the dairymen of Iowa State College.

Take 4½ quarts of coal tar dip, 4½ quarts of fish oil, three quarts of coal oil, three quarts of whale oil and 1½ quarts oil of tar. Dissolve three pounds of laundry soap, add the spray mixture and bring the whole up to 30 gallons with luke warm soft water. This spray will be cheaper than commercial mixtures; will keep off flies and will keep the cows hide in good shape. Thirty gallons of this mixture will spray 40 cows twice daily for ten days.

OPEN CHICAGO COMMISSION HOUSE

New Marketing Association Opened For Business June 19th, at Union Stock Yards

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)

The largest livestock market in the world has a producer-owned and controlled commission house in complete operation at present. The Chicago Producers' Commission Association opened for business Monday morning June 19. S. W. Doty is general manager. He announces the employment of Ed. Stevens as steer salesman, A. C. Burney as Butcher cattle salesman, and George Parmenter as hog salesman. In addition to his general executive work, Mr. Doty himself will sell the sheep. Offices are in Room 357, Livestock Exchange Building, Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

The Chicago Producers' Commission Association is organized under the auspices of the National Livestock Producers' Association, set up by the Farmer's Live Stock Marketing Committee of 15 appointed by the American Farm Bureau Federation. The new producer-owned and controlled commission house will handle livestock chiefly from Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Wisconsin, South Dakota and southeast Minnesota. A large number of cooperative shipping associations in those states have already sent in their membership. The producer directorate of the Chicago Company is as follows: President A. Sykes, Ida Grove, Iowa; Vice President, George McKerrow, Pewaukee, Wis.; sec.-treas. I. Warren Crabb, Delavan, Ill; George W. Briley, Carthage, Ill; M. Sar, Essex, Iowa; Frank Coyne, Montrose, Iowa; W. S. Hill, Mitchell, S. Dak.

Gen. Mgr. F. M. Simpson of the National Livestock Producers' Association points out that the Chicago company will be the third established under the plan for the Farmer's Live Stock Marketing Committee of 15. The Indianapolis company opened for business on May 15 and in the second week was in first place as regards volume. Last week the producers' company handled 105 straight car loads of stock and 35 loads of trucked in stock. This represents the fourth week of business The business has increased so rapidly that it has been necessary for this producer-owned and controlled company to put on a night force in order to take care of it. This is a new departure in the conduct of the Live Stock commission business and it is indicative of the methods followed by the farmer-owned companies. They are quick to adopt new and unique methods which make for a lower cost of operation and better service to their patrons.

The producers' Company at National Stock Yards, Illinois (St. Louis Market) is the oldest one belonging to the National Live Stock Producers' Association and has been in operation since January 2, 1922. The value of the livestock handled by these two companies every week exceeds $500,000.

"Say it With Cars" is the slogan which live stock producers seem determined to follow when it comes to supporting their own commission houses.

MILLIONS SAVED BY RATE REDUCTION

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)

The reduction of 10 percent in freight rates throughout the country on all commodities except agricultural products ordered on May 24, will mean approximately $127,000,000 to the farmers of the U. S.

As a result of a petition presented by the American Farm Bureau Federation to the Interstate Commerce Commission last October, the railroad executives granted a 10 percent reduction on all agricultural commodities for a temporary period of six months, which has netted the shippers an estimated $55,000,000.

Another $38,000,000 was saved to shippers in the reduction made in the Western Hay and Grain case. The revenue of the carriers for 1921 was $3,906,599,521. A 10 percent cut from this amount would be approximately $400,000,000, ninety-three millions of which have already been saved the shipper by the other two reductions.

Since the farmer pays 55 percent of the freight it means that he would get the benefit of $220,000,000 Ninety-three millions have already been saved which leaves $127,000,000 to represent the benefit derived from the reduction ordered on all commodities recently.

SYKES PRESIDENT OF CHICAGO TERMINAL

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)

Sykes, of Ida Grove, Iowa, President of the Cornbelt Meat Producers' association, has been selected as president of the New Producers' Live Stock Commission Association to be established at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago. Geo. McKerrow, of Pewaukee, Wis., was chosen as vice president and I. W. Crabb, of Delaven, Ill., as Secretary-Treasurer.

F. M. Simpson, of the National office at Chicago, is now perfecting arrangements preparatory to opening office headquarters.

STAND BY THE FARM BUREAU

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)
(From Traer Star-Clipper)

The Farm Bureau is approaching a critical period in its history. The next year or so it will survive or perish. It is the most formidable, most practical and most successful organization of farmers ever known in American History. Its power properly exerted will be tremendous from now on, if it continues to grow. The history of the farm organizations has been discouraging. Few of them have survived any great length of time. It has always been said that farmers will not stick together and in a great measure this is true. The Farm Bureau in its brief existance has done much to benefit and fortify the agricultural classes, and is in position to accomplish much greater work if the members will stick. But there is a tendency on the part of many to drop out. Here in Tama county scores have already quit, just when the Bureau is getting in position to do them the most good.

Some people never like to part with a dollar unless they can get two in return. Too many farmers object to paying yearly dues of $5.00. They say they don't get anything for their money. We know of no organization of business men that is run on a fee of $5 per year. The Star-Clipper has for years paid yearly dues of $30 to the Iowa Press Association and felt that it more than got its moneys worth. It costs railroad men around $100 per year to maintain the brotherhood. People will blow in several times $5. on lodges and think nothing of it.

If the farmers who are withholding their support from the Bureau would attend the meetings and learn what has been done and is proposed they would form a different opinion. Unlike many former farm organizations the bureau is headed by sane and conservative men. It is not their policy to tear down or fight anybody, but to lift up the farmer. We do not see how a farmer who heard Mr. Cunningham at Toledo Saturday can withhold his support from the farm bureau if he wants to improve his condition. The trouble is that such men are so prejudiced that they will not attend the meetings. They will make no attempt to inform themselves regarding the plans and accomplishments. They get the idea that someone is working a graft. They feel they know more about farming than the youthful county agent. They wholly mistake the purpose of the bureau The agent is not employed to tell them how to farm. He is their hired man. It is he that keeps up enthusiasm in the Bureau, that keeps the wheels going. It is he who brings in specialists, to demonstrate vaccination, culling, spraying, pruning, who hunts upseed grain, who brings men with animals to sell to those who want to buy; it is he who organized twelve shipping associations in this county; who was instrumental in testing seventy herds of cattle; who had aroused interest in the farmer's children in promoting beef clubs. Many farmers have made several years' fee in culling of hens alone, others in handling of wool, others in syraying.

But the greater benefits are yet to come. The shipping association is a success. What is needed is better marketing facilities and these the bureau have in sight. Then they plan a finance corporation that will be helpful to the farmer in carrying on his business. The bureau had more to do with the recent freight reduction than any other agency. We have not mentioned women's activities promoted by the bureau, which is in itself no small consideration.

Just why any Iowa farmers, who now have the largest bureau of any in the nation, should throw cold water upon any organization that is in position to do them so much good is a mystery to us.

IOWA FLEECE WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION

(Wright Co. Farm Bureau Exchange)
To County Agent and Co-Workers:

I trust you are keeping the members of your county wool pool informed as to the advance in the prices. Since our last letter the market has advanced on some of the common grades and the better grades are stronger.

Wool is selling for 50 cents per pound in Texas and the buyers see even higher prices in the future. If the speculators are willing to pay the prevailing prices, there certainly will be a bright future for the pooled wool.

It is predicted that fine wools may reach 75 cents and medium wools 60 cents. Local buyers in Iowa are paying 40 cents for medium and fine grades.

The market quotations in the Commerical Bulletin of May 27 are on the same basis as in our last letter.

We recommend shipping the wool as soon as shearing has progressed sufficiently to let as many as possible in the first consignment. Wool will be graded and offered for sale at an early date this season.

Growers should bear in mind that by pooling his wool he will receive the benefit of any advance in the market, and if he sells locally this profit goes to the speculator. More strongly than ever do we advise the growers to build up and maintain their county pool.

Trusting we will receive a nice shipment from your county, I am

Very truly yours,

Always On the Job

We are still here selling more goods than ever. This week we are selling 1 gallon cans of fruit—just the thing for haying and harvesting, and cheaper than you can can them. Peaches, Apricots, Pineapples and Logan berries. They are good.

Do you know all woolen goods are higher—also cotton goods. The mills have shut down, waiting for prices to stabilize. You know that means higher prices. We are not going to raise while our present stock lasts, but you better hurry and get in as it is going to raise.

Remember hogs went to $11 last week. (We don't eat meat at our home.) but shoes are one-half times lower than two years ago. Come in and see these patent leather Oxfords and canvas slippers—just the thing for hot weather.

We pay higest prices for all produce—cash or trade.

Don't forget Opal coffee, 3 lbs for $1. A good standard corn at 95c per dozen cans. All kinds of fruit. FRESH CHERRIES THIS WEEK.

Bring in your eggs.

Look over our stock—WE WILL NOT BE UNDERSOLD.

Yours for a square deal,

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes his employer is dead. He also tells him the legend of the Indian Drum, which according to old superstition beats once for every life lost on the Great Lakes. Twenty years before, the great freighter Miwaka had gone down with twenty-five on board, but the Drum had sounded for only twenty-four, leaving the inference that one person had been saved, since it was general belief that the drum never erred. Pursuing a stranger who had made a disturbance at his house, Alan is slugged and rendered unconscious.

CHAPTER IX.—Conrad recovers, and the affair remains a mystery.

CHAPTER X.—Alan learns from Wassaquam that it was Corvet's habit to keep the sum of $1,000 in the house, apparently to meet the demands of a certain "Luke," who appeared periodically. In the absence of Wassaquam, "Luke" comes to the house demanding to see Corvet. He is evidently in a dying condition, due to alcohol and exposure. Conrad tries without avail to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. The man dies. Wassaquam gives Conrad a paper on which is a list of names.

CHAPTER XI.—From the document Alan thinks he may have a clue to the mystery surrounding Corvet's life and disappearance. He leaves Chicago to visit Lake Michigan ports in search of the persons whose names were on the list.

"That's all you know about them, Judah?"

"Yes, Alan; that is all."

Alan dismissed the Indian, who, stolidly methodical in the midst of these events, went downstairs and commenced to prepare a dinner which Alan knew he could not eat. Alan got up and moved about the rooms; he went back and looked over the lists and clippings once more; then he moved about again. How strange a picture of his father did these things call up to him! When he had thought of Benjamin Corvet before, it had been as Sherrill had described him, pursued by some thought he could not conquer, seeking relief in study, in correspondence with scientific societies, in anything which could engross him and shut out memory. But now he must think of him, not merely as one trying to forget; what had thwarted Corvet's life was not only in the past; it was something still going on. It had amazed Sherrill to learn that Corvet, for twenty years, had kept trace of Alan; but Corvet had kept trace in the same way and with the same secrecy of many other people—of about a score of people. When Alan thought of Corvet, alone in his silent house, he must think of him as solicitous about these people; as seeking for their names in the newspapers which he took for that purpose, and as recording the changes in their lives. The deaths, the births, the marriages among these people had been of the intensest interest to Corvet.

It was possible that none of these people knew about Corvet; Alan had not known about him in Kansas, but had known only that some unknown person had sent money for his support. But he appreciated that it did not matter whether they knew about him or not; for at some point common to all of them, the lives of these people must have touched Corvet's life. When Alan knew what had been that point of contact, he would know about Corvet; he would know about himself.

Alan had seen among Corvet's books a set of charts of the Great Lakes. He went and got that now and an atlas. Opening them upon the table, he looked up the addresses given on Corvet's list. They were most of them, he found, towns about the northern end of the lake; a very few upon other lakes—Superior and Huron—but most were upon or very close to Lake Michigan. These people lived by means of the lake; they got their sustenance from it, as Corvet had lived, and as Corvet had got his wealth. Alan was feeling like one who, bound, has been suddenly unloosed. From the time when, coming to see Corvet, he had found Corvet gone, until now, he had felt the impossibility of explaining from anything he knew or seemed likely to learn the mystery which had surrounded himself and which had surrounded Corvet. But these names and addresses! They indeed offered something to go upon, though Luke now was forever still, and his pockets had told Alan nothing.

He found Emmet county on the map and put his finger on it. Spearman, Wassaquam had said, came from there. "The Land of the Drum!" he said aloud. Deep and sudden feeling stirred in him as he traced out this land on the chart—the little towns and villages, the islands and headlands, their lights and their uneven shores. A feeling of "home" had come to him, which he had not had on coming to Chicago. There were Indian names and French up there about the meetings of the great waters. The sense that he was of these lakes, that surge of feeling which he had felt first in conversation with Constance Sherrill was strengthened an hundredfold.

He gazed down at the lists of names which Benjamin Corvet had kept so carefully and so secretly; these were his father's people, too; these ragged shores and the islands studding the channels were the lands where his father had spent the most active part of his life. There, then—these lists now made it certain—that events had happened by which that life had been blighted. North, there by the meeting of the waters, was the region of the wrong which was done.

"That's where I must go!" he said aloud. "That's where I must go!"

* * * * * * * *

Constance Sherrill, on the following afternoon, received a telephone call from her father; he was coming home earlier than usual, he said; if she had planned to go out, would she wait until after he got there? The afternoon's mail was upon a stand in the hall. She turned it over, looking through it—invitations, social notes. She picked from among them an envelope addressed to herself in a firm, clear hand, which, unfamiliar to her, still queerly startled her, and tore it open.

"Dear Miss Sherrill," she read,

"I am closing, for the time being, the house which, for default of other ownership, I must call mine. The possibility that what has occurred here would cause you and your father anxiety about me in case I went away without telling you of my intention is the reason for this note. But it is not the only reason. I could not go away without telling you how deeply I appreciate the generosity and delicacy you and your father have shown me in spite of my position here and of the fact that I had no claim at all upon you. I shall not forget those, even though what happened here last night makes it impossible for me to try to see you again or even to write to you.

"ALAN CONRAD."

She heard her father's motor enter the drive and ran to him with the letter in her hand.

"He's written to you, then?" he said, at sight of it.

"Yes."

"I had a note from him this afternoon at the office, asking me to hold in abeyance for the time being the trust that Ben had left me and returning the key of the house to me for safekeeping."

"Has he already gone?"

"I suppose so; I don't know."

"We must find out." She caught up her wraps and began to put them on. Sherrill hesitated, then assented; and they went round the block together to the Corvet house. Sherrill, after a few instants' hesitation, took the key from his pocket and unlocked the door and went in. The rooms, they saw, were all in perfect order; summer covers had been put upon the furniture; protecting cloths had been spread over the beds upstairs. After their inspection, they came out again at the front door, and her father closed it with a snapping of the spring lock.

Constance, as they walked away, turned and looked back at the old house, gloomy and dark among its newer, fresher-looking neighbors, and suddenly she choked, and her eyes grew wet. That feeling was not for Uncle Benny; the drain of days past had exhausted such a surge of feeling for him. That which she could not wink away was for the boy who had come to that house a few weeks ago and for the man who just now had gone.

CHAPTER XII

The Things From Corvet's Pockets.

"Miss Constance Sherrill, Harbor Springs, Michigan."

The address, in large scrawling letters, was written across the brown paper of the package which had been brought from the post office in the little resort village only a few moments before. The paper covered a shoe box, crushed and old, bearing the name of "S. Klug, Dealer in Fine Shoes, Manitowoc, Wisconsin." The box, like the outside wrapping, was carefully tied with a string.

Constance, knowing no one in Manitowoc and surprised at the nature of the package, glanced at the postmark on the brown paper which she had removed; it too was stamped Manitowoc. She cut the strings about the box and took off the cover. A black and brown dotted silk cloth filled the box; and, seeing it, Constance caught her breath. It was—at least it was very like—the muffler which Uncle Benny used to wear in winter.

She started with trembling fingers to take it from the box; then, realizing from the weight of the package that the cloth was only a wrapping or, at least, that other things were in the box, she picked up box and wrapping and ran up to her room. She locked the door and put the box upon the bed; now she lifted out the cloth. It was a wrapping, for the heavier things came with it; and now, also, it revealed itself plainly as the scarf—Uncle Benny's scarf! A paper fluttered out as she began to unroll it—a little cross-lined leaf evidently torn from a pocket memorandum book. It had been folded and rolled up. She spread it out; writing was upon it, the small irregular letters of Uncle Benny's hand.

"Send to Alan Conrad," she read; there followed a Chicago address—the number of Uncle Benny's house on Astor street. Below this was another line:

"Better care of Constance Sherrill (Miss)." There followed the Sherrills' address upon the Drive. And to this was another correction:

"Not after June 12; then to Harbor Springs, Mich. Ask some one of that; be sure the date; after June 12."

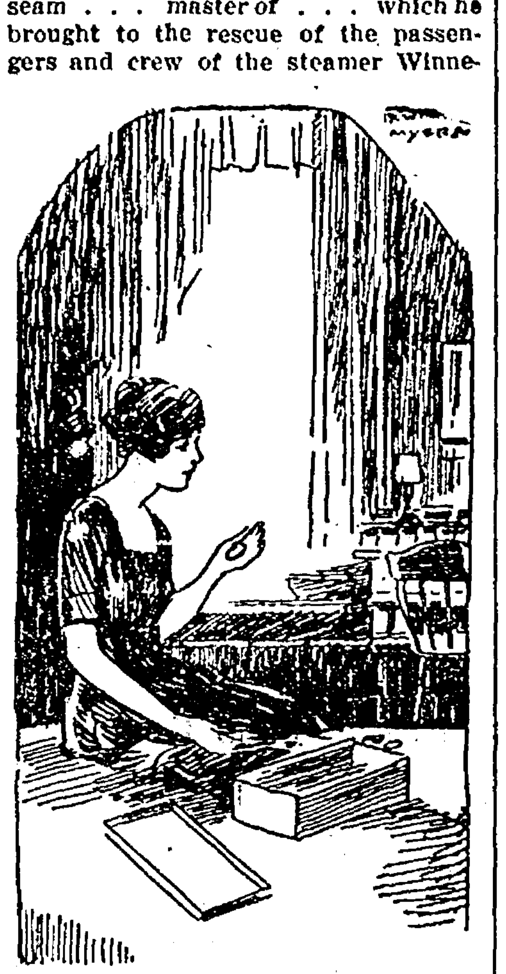
Constance, trembling, unrolled the scarf; now coins showed from a fold, next a pocketknife, ruined and rusty, next a watch—a man's large gold watch with the case queerly pitted and worn completely through in places, and last a plain little band of gold of the size for a woman's finger—a wedding ring. Constance, gasping and with fingers shaking so from excitement that she could scarcely hold these objects, picked them up and examined them—the ring first.

It very evidently was, as she had immediately thought, a wedding ring once fitted for a finger only a trifle less slender than her own. One side of the gold band was very much worn, not with the sort of wear which a ring gets on a hand, but by some different sort of abrasion. The other side of the band was roughened and pitted but not so much worn; the inside still bore the traces of an inscription. "As long as we bo . . . all alive," Constance could read, and the date, "June 2, 1891."

It was in January, 1896, Constance remembered, that Alan Conrad had been brought to the people in Kansas; he then was "about three years old." If this wedding ring was his mother's, the date would be about right; it was a date probably something more than a year before Alan was born. Constance put down the ring and picked up the watch. It was like Uncle Benny's watch—or like one of his watches. He had several, she knew, presented to him at various times—watches almost always were the testimonials given to seamen for acts of sacrifice and bravery. The spring which operated the cover would not work, but Constance forced the cover open.

There, inside the cover as she had thought it would be, was engraved writing. Sand had seeped into the case; the inscription was obliterated in part.

"For his courage and skill in seam . . . master of . . . which he brought to the rescue of the passengers and crew of the steamer Winnebago foundering . . . Point, Lake Erie, Nov. 26, 1890, this watch is donated by the Buffalo Merchants' Exchange."



Constance Choked, and Her Eyes Filled With Tears.

Uncle Benny's name, evidently, had been engraved upon the outside. Constance could not particularly remember the rescue of the people of the Winnebago; 1890 was years before she was born, and Uncle Benny did not tell her that sort of thing about himself.

Constance left the watch open and, shivering a little, she gently laid it down upon her bed. The pocketknife had no distinguishing mark of any sort. The coins were abraded and pitted disks—a silver dollar, a half dollar and three quarters, not so much abraded, three nickels, and two pennies.

Constance choked, and her eyes filled with tears. These things—plainly they were the things found in Uncle Benny's pockets—corroborated only too fully what Wassaquam believed and what her father had been coming to believe—that Uncle Benny was dead. The muffler and the scrap of paper had not been in water or in sand. The paper was written in pencil; it had not even been moistened or it would have blurred. There was nothing upon it to tell how long ago it had been written; but it had been written certainly before June 12. "After June 12," it said.

That day was August the eighteenth. It was seven months since Uncle Benny had gone away. After his strange interview with her that day and his going home, had Uncle Benny gone out directly to his death? There was nothing to show that he had not; the watch and coins must have lain for many weeks, for months, in water and in sand to become eroded in this way. But, aside from this, there was nothing that could be inferred regarding the time or place of Uncle Benny's death. That the package had been mailed from Manitowoc meant nothing definite. Some one—Constance could not know whom—had had the muffler and the scrawled leaf of directions; later, after lying in water and in sand, the things which were to be "sent" had come to that some one's hand. Most probably this some one had been one who was going about on ships; when his ship had touched at Manitowoc, he had executed his charge.

Constance left the articles upon the bed and threw the window more widely open. She trembled and felt stirred and faint, as she leaned against the window, breathing deeply the warm air, full of life and with the scent of the evergreen trees about the house.

The "cottage" of some twenty rooms stood among the pines and hemlocks interspersed with hardwood on "the Point," where were the great fine summer homes of the wealthier "resorters."

This was Uncle Benny's country. Here, twenty-five years before, he had first met Henry, whose birthplace—a farm, deserted now—was only a few miles back among the hills. Here, before that, Uncle Benny had been a young man, active, vigorous, ambitious. He had loved this country for itself and for its traditions, its Indian legends and fantastic stories. Half her own love for it—and, since her childhood, it had been to her a region of delight—was due to him and to the things he had told her about it. Distinct and definite memories of that companionship came to her. This little bay, which had become now for the most part only a summer playground for such as she, had been once a place where he and other men had struggled to grow rich swiftly; he had outlined for her the ruined lumber docks and pointed out to her the locations of the dismantled sawmills. It was he who had told her the names of the freighters passing far out, and the names of the lighthouses, and something about each. He had told her, too, about the Indians. She remembered one starry night when he had pointed out to her in the sky the Indian "Way of Ghosts," the Milky way, along which, by ancient Indian belief, the souls of Indians traveled up to heaven; and how, later, lying on the recessed seat beside the fireplace where she could touch the dogs upon the hearth, he had pointed out to her through the window the Indian "Way of Dogs" among the constellations, by which the dogs too could make that journey. It was he who had told her about Michabou and the animals; and he had been the first to tell her of the Drum.

The disgrace, unhappiness, the threat of something worse, which must have made death a relief to Uncle Benny, she had seen passed on now to Alan. What more had come to Alan since she had last heard of him?

Word had reached her father through shipping circles in May and again in July which told of inquiries regarding Uncle Benny which made her and her father believe that Alan was searching for his father upon the lakes. Now these articles which had arrived made plain to her that he would never find Uncle Benny; he would learn, through others or through themselves, that Uncle Benny was dead. Would he believe then that there was no longer any chance of learning what his father had done? Would he remain away because of that, not letting her see or hear from him again?

She went back and picked up the wedding ring. The thought which had come to her that this was Alan's mother's wedding ring, had fastened itself upon her with a sense of certainty. It defended that unknown mother; it freed her, at least, from the stigma which Constance's own mother had been so ready to cast. Constance could not yet begin to place Uncle Benny in relation to that ring; but she was beginning to be able to think of Alan and his mother. She held the little band of gold very tenderly in her hand; she was glad that, as the accusation against his mother had come through her people, she could tell him soon of this. She could not send the ring to him, not knowing where he was; that was too much risk. But she could ask him to come to her; this gave that right.

She sat thoughtful for several minutes, the ring clasped warmly in her hand; then she went to her desk and wrote:

"Mr. John Welton,
"Blue Rapids, Kansas.

"Dear Mr. Welton:

"It is possible that Alan Conrad has mentioned me—or at least told you of my father—in connection with his stay in Chicago. After Alan left Chicago, my father wrote twice to his Blue Rapids address, but evidently he had instructed the postmaster there to forward his mail and had not made any change in those instructions, for the letters were returned to Alan's address and in that way came back to us. We did not like to press inquiries further than that, as of course he could have communicated with us if he had not felt that there was some reason for not doing so. Now, however, something of such supreme importance to him has come to us that it is necessary for us to get word to him at once. If you can tell me any address at which he can be reached by telegraph or mail—or where a messenger can find him—it will oblige us very much and will be to his interest."

She hesitated, about to sign it; then, impulsively, she added:

"I trust you know that we have Alan's interest at heart and that you can safely tell us anything you may know as to where he is or what he may be doing. We all liked him here so very much. . . ."

She signed her name. There were still two other letters to write. Only the handwriting of the address upon the package, the Manitowoc postmark and the shoe box furnished clues to the sender of the ring and the watch and the other things. Constance herself could not trace those clues, but Henry or her father could. She wrote to both of them, therefore, describing the articles which had come and relating what she had done.

The next noon she received a wire from Henry that he was "coming up." It did not surprise her, as she had expected him the end of the week.

Late that evening, she sat with her mother on the wide, screened veranda. The lights of some boat turning in between the points and moving swiftly caught her attention. As it entered the path of the moonlight, its look was so like that of Henry's power yacht that she arose. It was his way, as soon as he had decided to leave business again and go to her, to arrive as soon as possible; that had been his way recently, particularly. So the sight of the yacht stirred her warmly and she watched while it ran in close, stopped and instantly dropped a dingey from the davits. She saw Henry in the stern of the little boat; it disappeared in the shadow of a pier . . . she heard, presently, the gravel of the walk crunch under his quick steps, and then she saw him in the moonlight among the trees. She went down on the path to meet him.

"How quickly you came!"

"You let yourself think you needed me, Connie!"

"I did. . . ."

He had caught her hand in his and he held it while he brought her to the porch and exchanged greetings with her mother. Then he led her on past and into the house.

When she saw his face in the light, there were signs of strain in it.

"You're tired, Henry!"

He shook his head. "It's been rotten hot in Chicago; then I guess I was mentally stoking all the way up here, Connie. But first, where are the things you wanted me to see?"

She ran upstairs and brought them down to him. Her hands were shaking now as she gave them to him; she could not exactly understand why; but her tremor increased as she saw his big hands fumbling as he unwrapped the muffler and shook out the things it inclosed. He took them up one by one and looked at them, as she had done. His fingers were steady now, but only by mastering of control, the effort for which amazed her.

He had the watch in his hands.

"The inscription is inside the front," she said.

She pried the cover open again and read, with him, the words engraved within.

"'As master of . . .' What ship was he master of then, Henry, and how did he rescue the Winnebago's people?"

"He never talked to me about things like that, Constance. This is all?"

"Yes."

Henry put the things back in the box. "Of course, this is the end of Benjamin Corvet."

"Of course," Constance said. She was shaking again and, without willing it, she withdrew a little from Henry. He caught her hand again and drew her back toward him. His hand was quite steady.

"You know why I came to you as quick as I could? You know why I—why my mind was behind every thrust of the engines?"

"No."

"You don't? Oh, you know; you must know now!"

"Yes, Henry," she said.

"I've been patient, Connie. Till I got your letter telling me this about Ben, I'd waited for your sake—for our sakes—though it seemed at times it was impossible. You haven't known quite what's the matter between us these last months, little girl; but I've known. We've been engaged; but that's about all there's been to it. Don't think I make little of that; you know what I mean. You've been mine; but—but you haven't let me realize it, you see. And I've been patient, for I knew the reason. It was Ben poisoning your mind against me."

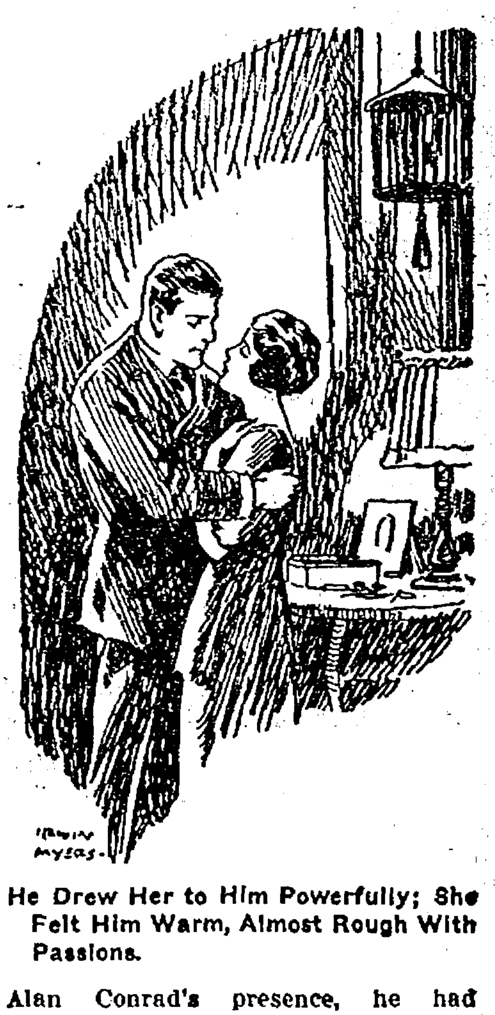
"No! No, Henry!"

"You've denied it; I've recognized that you've denied it, not only to me and to your people, but to yourself. I, of course, knew, as I know that I am here with your hand in mine, and as we will stand before the altar together, that he had no cause to speak against me. I've waited, Connie, to give him a chance to say to you what he had to say; I wanted you to hear it before making you wholly mine. But now there's no need to wait any longer, you and I. Ben's gone, never to come back. I was sure of that by what you wrote me, so this time when I started to you I brought with me—this."

He felt in his pocket and brought out a ring of plain gold; he held it before her so that she could see within it her own initials and his and a blank left for the date. Her gaze went from it for an instant to the box where he had put back the other ring—Alan's mother's. Feeling for her long ago gazing thus, as she must have, at that ring, held her for a moment. Was it because of that that Constance found herself cold now?

"You mean you want me to marry you—at once, Henry?"

He drew her to him powerfully; she felt him warm, almost rough with passions. Since that day when, in Alan Conrad's presence, he had grasped and kissed her, she had not let him "realize" their engagement, as he had put it.



He Drew Her to Him Powerfully; She Felt Him Warm, Almost Rough With Passions.

"Why not?" he turned her face up to his now. "Your mother's here; your father will follow soon; or, if you will, we'll run away—Constance! You've kept me off so long! You don't believe there's anything against me, dear? Do you? Do you?"

"No; no! Of course not!"

"Then we're going to be married. . . . Right away, we'll have it then; up here; now!"

"No; not now, Henry. Not up here!"

"Not here? Why not?"

She could give no answer. He held her and commanded her again; only when he frightened her, he ceased.

"Why must it be at once, Henry? I don't understand!"

"It's not must, dear," he denied. "It's just that I want you so!"

When would it be, he demanded then; before spring, she promised at last. But that was all he could make her say. And so he let her go.

The next evening, in the moonlight, she drove him to Petoskey. He had messages to send and preferred to trust the telegraph office in the larger town.

* * * * * * * *

Alan was driving northward along the long, sandy peninsula which separates the blue waters of Grand Traverse from Lake Michigan; and, thinking of Constance, he knew that she was near. He not only had remembered that she would be north at Harbor Point this month; he had seen in one of the Petoskey papers that she and her mother were at the Sherrill summer home. His business now was taking him nearer them than he had been at any time before; and, if he wished to weaken, he might convince himself that he might learn from her circumstances which would aid him in his task. But he was not going to her for help; that was following in his father's footsteps. When he knew everything, then—not till then—he could go to her; for then he would know exactly what was upon him and what he should do.

His visits to the people named on those sheets written by his father had been confusing at first; he had had great difficulty in tracing some of them at all; and, afterward, he could uncover no certain connection either between them and Benjamin Corvet or between themselves. But recently, he had been succeeding better in this latter.

He had seen—he reckoned them over again—fourteen of the twenty-one named originally on Benjamin Corvet's lists; that is, he had seen either the individual originally named, or the surviving relative written in below the name crossed off. He had found that the crossing out of the name meant that the person was dead, except in the case of two who had left the country and whose whereabouts were as unknown to their present relatives as they had been to Benjamin Corvet, and the case of one other, who was in an insane asylum.

Wm. Meyer, who is here from Chicago visiting his brother, Fred, and other relatives and friends, spent the week end with Harry Webb, at Ottosen, Iowa, where Harry has charge of a church this summer.

Joe White went to Mason City with Dibble's truck last week one day, and at Rockwell, one of the towns the truck makes on the route, he ran across Rev. Horton, formerly minister of the Congregational church here. Rev. Horton has a fine church and pastorate at Rockwell, where he is doing nicely.

Miss Mildred Gealow came down from Meservey to spend the week end with relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Snyder left Friday evening for a month's visit in parts of Michigan and Indiana, and to attend a reunion of the Snyder family. Brothers and sisters from California, South Dakota, Iowa, Michigan and Indiana are expected to be present.

Mrs. W. A. Bullis is enjoying a visit with Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Riggs, in Estherville.

Miss Mary Forrestal, who is employed at Galt, spent the week end at the home of her parents in Belmond.

The ladies of the Priscilla club entertained their husbands at a picnic in the park Tuesday of last week. Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Polhemus, of Guffey, Colo., were the out of town guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Ole Scott were called to Huxley last Sunday by the serious illness of Mrs. Scott's father.

Miss Dorothy Purcell is the new clerk at the Foster Cafe.

The Misses Nettie Benson and Iris Trumbell spent a couple of days at Mason City last week with Miss Trumbell's uncle.

Dan Wenzell was a visitor the past week with his son, Will who resides at Swea City.

Now is the time to get rid of the roosters. Sell them to Joe S. White. Phone 272.

The Community Club meeting is postponed till July 7th, the speaker being unable to be here this week.

Will Wolle is spending a few days visiting at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wolle. He drove down in his Ford, and is on a vacation from his duties at Morningside College. He was accompanied by a friend, Miss Vivian Dow, of Odeboldt.

Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Haupt drove to West Bend last week one day, to visit the famous Grotto of the Redemption being constructed at that place by the Catholic Father, Rev. Dobberstein. The Grotto is a wonderful piece of art, and well worth the trip by anyone. Mr. and Mrs. Earl Haupt and Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Johnson and party of friends were also visitors at the Grotto.

If you have any old hens or roosters to sell, call Joe. S. White, Phone 272.

Mrs. Wm. Harbinson returned last week to the hospital at Rochester for futher treatment. She recently returned from a month's stay at the hospital, where she underwent an operation.

The Community Club meeting is postponed till July 7, on account of Prof. Shimek being unable to be here this week.

The Misses Jean and Betty Haven, of Charles City, were visitors in town Sunday evening of this week, driving over with some friends.

If you want to ride on a real honest-to-goodness road, one that illustrates what gravel will do, ride over the Solsburg to Clarion stretch. If you close your eyes you will be unable to tell whether you are riding on pavement or not. This road, formerly one of the worst in the country, is certainly a splendid argument in favor of gravel as the solution of the Iowa road problem, and is beyond question one of the best in the state.

Miss Nellie Kessler of Cornelia accompanied by Mrs. Peter Weaver and Frank Kessler of Cairins Alberta Canada were calling on friends at Belmond Friday.

Miss Francis Richards and Katherine Bussel of Clarion spent the week end with Eloise Brooks.

Quite a number from here drove to Rowan Saturday evening and enjoyed the "Sheik."

The Class of 1916 enjoyed a picnic dinner at Morse Lake on Sunday.

PROF. SHIMEK AT COMMUNITY CLUB FRIDAY

Meet To Gravel Morse Lake Road

Belmond Township Trustees To Grade And Furnish Gravel Free Of Charge

MEETING SATURDAY EVE.

To all those interested, and who would be benefitd by the graveling of the road west of town from the Martin corner to the road leading to the lake (two miles in all).

The township will grade the road this summer, and after corn husking this fall, will furnish the gravel and load it on the wagons free of charge.

This is a fine opportunity for the town and the country to get together and have this road graveled.

There will be a meeting at the Belmond Twp. Hall Saturday evening July 8th, at 8 o'clock to consider the matter, and a full attendance will be appreciated.

Signed,
Trustees of Belmond Twp.

The Independent enthusiastically endorses the sentiments of the foregoing article, and hopes that there will be a crowded house at the meeting next Saturday evening. This road is one much traveled by Belmond people as well as farmers, and in the manner suggested the improvement of the road, which is badly needed, can be made at a minimum of expense to all concerned. It will be a fine thing for the town and country to get together on it. Belmond people and business men can boost this proposition and know they are getting value received for every penny expended and every minute of time. Be at the Meeting Saturday night, July 8th, and help put it across.

COUNTRY CLUB ACTIVITIES

The first of the season's ladies' days at the Clarmond country club was held Wednesday afternoon. The time was spent with cards and the ladies who cared to, brought their fancy work while some of the more energetic ones engaged in playing golf. The husbands arrived in time for a six-thirty picnic supper. About one hundred and fifty were present. The club plans on holding an event of this kind every two weeks.

Another pleasant social affair held at the club house during the past weeek was the dancing party Monday evening.—Monitor.

BARRY FOR REPRESENTATIVE

M. C. Barry, of Belmond, was given the honor of the Democratic nomination for State Representative at the Demoncratic convention held in Clarion last Saturday.

The convention was insistive that Matt take the nomination, and in the end, despite his protests, forced it upon him. Matt would make a mighty good official in the capacity, and if elected will serve Wright County voters to the best of his ability. He has had considerable experience in public office, knows the game, and would make a fitting representative. He has a host of friends in Belmond who are glad he has been accorded this honor, and who wish him success in his campaign We are not informed as yet what his plans are, whether he intends to make an active campaign or not. But anyway, Matt, here's now.

COURT HOUSE NOTES

Monitor: Eighteen wrote the rural teachers' examinations given three days last week.

Miss Blanche Bock is in attendance at the National Educational convention now in sesson at Boston. Miss Bock joined the Iowa delegation at Chicago, two Pullmans having been provided for them. They proceeded to Boston by way of Niagara Falls and Montreal. On the return trip Washington, New York and other points of interest will be visited.

An error was made last week in stating that J. F. McClelland, candidate for sheriff, had not filed his expense account. The same was overlooked. His total expense was $103 being for publicity, cards, bills and the usual incidentals.

Marriage lcenses were issued the past week to Issac Luther Clark and Ila May Campbell, Ivan D. Anderson and Irma Donly, Hilber Carlton Bryson and Ethel Daggett, Ivan Pearl Heart and Minnie Phares.

The contract for the new storm sewer was awarded last week to the Belmond Construction Co., of Belmond. Nine firms made bids for the job. At the time of going to press figures are not available on the work except for section two, which amount is $56,636.03.

Quite a number of local people attended the celebration held at Kanawha last week.

FARM BUREAU TO MEET AT STATE FAIR

The mid-summer gathering of farm bureau members from all parts of Iowa will be held at the State Fair this year, according to announcements of plans made by State Fair and Farm Bureau officials.

The Farm Bureau gathering will be held August 28, the fourth day of the State Fair. National speakers of prominence will come to Iowa to address the gatherings and leaders from every county in the state will assemble here to discuss farming problems of 1922-23 and consider the coming year's work of the organization.

All of the meetings will be held at the fair. The programs will be arranged so that the farmer visitors may get away in time to enjoy all of the exposition attractions and study the exhibits.

Plans were also announced this week for a special Farm Bureau camp at the State Fair. This will be located in the 80 acre free camping tract immediately adjoining the fair and will be plotted out by counties, in order that farm neighbors may be together during the exposition. Camping space will be provided free of charge. Another special camp is to be provided for all county agents in Iowa. The dates of the Iowa State Fair this year are August 23 to September 1.

EAGLE GROVE FARMERS ASK FOR RELEASE

Around forty farmers in the independent school district of Eagle Grove have filed a petition with the Eagle Grove school board asking that they be permitted to withdraw from the independent district of Eagle Grove and establish a rural school district of their own. We understand the petition embraces territory around the town. The petitioners feel that the cost of the Eagle Grove school is more than they can afford. What action the school board there will take in the matter is problematical. If the board refuses the petitioners' request, they will undoubtedly appeal to the county superintendent's office. Senator Chase, of Webster City is representing the petitioners, and this indicates they are going to exhaust every resource to make the change. In the event the county superintendent denies the petition, an appeal to the state superintendent will be in order.

The farmers feel that the cost of the grade and high school is more than they can affrd to pay. The school tax is said to be around a dollar an acre.

It is said withdrawal from the district would automatically throw the burden of unpaid indebtedness on the Eagle Grove district as it would then be constituted. At present it costs the district around $1,000 per year for bus hire for transportation of the country pupils to the schools in town.—News.

ELDORA BOYS LEAVE

The Eldora Industrial School Boys' band furnished the music at the Creamery Day celebration held at Kanawha last Thursday, and it is reported that several of the boys took advantage of the opportunity and escaped. The last reported they were headed towards Britt with officers on the trail.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP FARM BUREAU MEETING JULY 12

The Pleasant township Farm Bureau will hold the regular monthly meeting July 12 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Jenison. A speaker from Woodbine, Harrison county, is to addreses the audience. Farmers are requested to make an effort to attend for they will have a real treat. Everybody is invited and welcome.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

A birthday party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Sorenson last Sunday, the occasion being the birthday of Mrs. Sorenson. Some 25 guests were present, the out of town guests being Mr. and Mrs. Bert Sorenson and family, Claude Meacham, and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Collinske and family and a friend from South Dakota, Mr. and Mrs. Clair Meacham and daughter Mildred from Titonka, and Mr. and Mrs. Len Wilson and family from Goodell. A big dinner was enjoyed and a fine time was had.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Collinske, who have been at Beebee, Sout Dakota where Mrs. Collinske was keeping house for her brother, Walter Sorenson for the past year, have moved back to their home in Clear Lake. Mrs. Collinsk states that they had nice rains there every week and the crops are looking fine. Walter Sorenson has 480 acres with fine crops.

INTRODUCING THE NEW EDITOR

Ye ed is taking a vacation for the next two weeks, visiting relatives in Kansas, and during his absence the Independent will be in charge of his sister, Mrs. Wm. Leonard, of Swaledale.

BELMOND TEAM WINS SUNDAY AND TUESDAY

Belmond Wins From Humboldt By Heavy Score And Then Trims Garner.

The Belmond ball team hit their stride Sunday, and eradicated the Humboldt Rats to the sweet and satisfying tune of 20 to 1.

It was a massacre of the most horrible nature, without mercy and without quarter. Scoring four runs in the first inning, the local team continued to run races around the bases for eight frames, scoring in nearly every inning. Fourteen runs had crossed the plate in the first three innings, and at this stage some of the crowd left for greener pastures.

The Humboldt team, the "Rats" must have thought the rat crusade was still on, and altho they tried hard they were unable to do anything until the fifth, when a hit and an error gave them their one run. John Chapman, the farmer pitcher, stood the Rats on their heads with his curves, and allowed three hits. John pitched a splendid game, and a game worthy of a much better apponent than he had. The boys played real ball, making very few errors, and they all pounded the ball to the four corners of the lot, two-baggers being a common occurance. They ran bases like they used to, in fact their playing was like unto that of the first part of last season.

The line-up was as follows:
Fulton, Catcher.
Chapman, Pitcher.
Packard, 1st base.
Jones, 2nd base.
Thomas, 3rd base.
Madsen, short stop.
Dillon, left field.
Foss, center field.
Wenzell, right field.

C. C. Christie played with the Humboldt outfit, and relieved the Humboldt pitcher in the third inning. He was swatted for five runs in his first inning but tightened up after that and the boys only secured six more runs from his delivery the remainder of the game.

On the Fourth, at the Klemme celebration, the Belmnd team took the measure of the Garner bunch by 4 to 3, in a real game featured by air-tight playing and the heavy hitting of Belmond. Garner, having no team, had hired the best players they could find, and with Becker in the box were prepared to feast on the bacon. Simerson, pitching for Belmond proved his superiority over his apponent, allowing about three or four hits, while his team mates gathered nearly a dozen from Becker, long, heavy drives for two and three bases. Thomas, Packard, Foss, Jones Fulton, and Dillon gathered two-baggers, every man swatting the ball. In the field they were a frozen wall, but very few errors being made. Ground rules alone kept Packard from a home run. Belmond led by 1 to 0, then 2 to 0, when Garner evened it, then went ahead a run. With two on Louie Foss leaned against Becker's slants for a long two-base hit, placing Belmond in the lead where they stayed. In the 9th, Simerson hit the first man, and the second went out on a long fly to Nelson in left, and the next two batters fanned the breeze, with the result 4 to 3 for Belmond. The game was a real one, with real ball playing by Belmond, and desperate trying on the part of Garner.

Klemme had a nice little celebration, with something doing all the time, and a good sized crowd.

IOWA MAGAZINE NEW WEEKLY PAPER FEATURE

A number of weekly newspapers in the state, and in this part of the country the Eagle Grove Times and the Garner Signal, commenced last week the Iowa Magazine, a supplement to the regular issue. The magazine, an attractive little sheet, contains fiction and articles of interest to Iowa readers, besides the various other features of such magazines. The outcome of the venture will be awaited with interest by the other papers of the state, inasmuch as the foreign advertising which this magazine is expected to carry, cuts a lot of ice in the income of the average weekly. Should the advertising be placed in the magazine, instead of the paper, it will be a losing proposition. The magazines are sydicated. not published by the papers individually.

NO RAIN—BUT FINE CROPS

The vicinity of Belmond has not had a real rain for several weeks, but in spite of the lack of it the crops are coming nicely. Corn is in excellent shape, better than knee high, and small grain is doing good. Oats are expected to turn out better than was anticipated, and beets are coming in good shape. Pastures of course are nil, and hay very short. All thru this part of the country there are very few fields of either corn or small grain which do not look good. Potatoes appear to be doing nicely despite the lack of moisture, and a pretty fair crop is looked for.

FOURTH IN BELMOND IS QUIET AFFAIR

Some Celebrated At Grove Or Lake, Others At Klemme FARM BUREAU

Belmond was a quiet place the Fourth, the streets being more deserted than on a Sunday. A large number of people observed the day quietly by picnicing in the grove or at the lake, a number of them went to Klemme to witness the ball game between Garner and Belmond, out the large majority of them attended the Farm Bureau picnic on the Warner estate near the Harvey church. The picnic was a fine success, with a large crowd in attendance. The entire program was pronounced excellent, and very good order was maintained. The stands on the grounds were run on a reasonable price basis and had a good run of business. The ball games were interesting and the sports program exciting. All reports give the picnic as being the best attraction of any during the day. Klemme had a nice celebration with a good crowd, as did Sheffield. A few from here were at Clear Lake.

BIG SCRAP DEVELOPES COUNTY CONVENTION

The county convention held at Clarion last Saturday developed some real interest, according to reports, and the Old Guard, or "machine" as it has been styled, was given a large size wallop thru the efforts of Atty. Jensen of Belmond. It seems that the "machine" had things all lined up on the delegates and considered that it was sittin' pretty, when J. M. heaved a monkey wrench in the wheels and completely gummed up the works, especially as to the judgeship. As a result, the delegates were uninstructed and go to Hampton, July 10, with J. M. as chairman, to choose between Clarence Hanson, of Fort Dodge and E. H. Lindy, of Eldora, between whom the fight seems to rest to fill Judge Wright's shoes in the district court. J. M. is some scrapper when he gets going, and apparently there are a number of folks in the county who are beginning to believe maybe there is something in it, at that. Jensen was for letting the peolpe have a hand in the affairs of the cenvention, and backed by Oscar Ulstad, of Holmes, another go-getter, and others, they did.

GOODELL NEWS ITEMS

Wednesday morning Dr. and Mrs. Snearly left for their vacation. They were accompanied by the doctor's brother and wife of Fort Dodge, Iowa. They will spend their vacation in the Northern part of Minn.

Miss Alva Matson who has been in Des Moines for some time studying dress making returned on June 27.

Doc Robbins remains about the same. He is rather weak from the dicease.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Allaben returned Wednesday from their visit with their son, who lives at Brainerd, Minn. He says that the fishing was fine.

Mr. and Mrs. Monroe Graeber attended the Creamery Picnic at Kanawha last Thursday.

Last Thursday Dr. Steele of Belmond, in the absence of Dr. Snearly, was called to see Mr. S. S. Matson who is weakened and run down condition.

On June 27 Mrs. O. Olsen departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Anna Wilson, of Cornelia. Death was due largely to old age. She was born in Denmark in 1844 and came to this country in her youth and first setted at Oshkosk where she was married to Mr. O. Olson. In the late seventies they moved to New Amsterdam, Iowa, where she livd until a few years ago.

The funeral was conducted by Rev. Burress of Madrid, Iowa, from the United Brethern in Christ church at Goodell of which she had been a members for twenty-five years. Her remains rest beside her husband in the cemetery at New Amsterdam just across the road from her old home.

Mr. John Savogue and son, Harold and Earny Wilkins were at Kanawha on Thursday enjoying the Creamery Picnic.

Mr. and Mrs. O. Nelson drove to meet Mrs. Nelson's sister from Decorah.

Mrs. Frank Clark is still at the hospital in Hampton.

FATHER COMES FROM ACROSS

Louie Tokman spent the week end at Mason City at his home, where he met his father for the first time in 20 years. His father, who lived in Roumania, arrived in this country about two weeks ago. Louie has been trying for several years to get him to come over, and finally convincing him had a bunch of red tape to untangle before the necessary papers and passports could be secured. The arrival of Mr. Tokman is of course one of the greatest pleasure to Louie and his many friends will rejoice with him in his father's coming.

COUNTY REPUBLICAN CONVENTION SAT.

The county republican and democratic conventions were held at Clarion Saturday afternoon. There was little to be done except select delegates to the state convention, the judicial convention at Waterloo and the district judicial convention at Hampton. The judges are nominated in regular delegate convention instead of at the primary.

The following is the complete minutes of the republican convention:

Clarion, Iowa, July 1, 1922.

The convention was called to order by County Chairman . P. Morton. In the absence of Burt Harwood, secretary of the county central committee H. W. Barnes was appointed temporary secretary.

It was moved and seconded that O. P. Morton act as permanent chairman and H. W. Barnes permanent secretary. Motion carried. The chairman stated that the business and purpose of the convention was to select delegates to the state convention at Des Moines on August 2, to the state judicial convention at Waterloo and to the district judicial convention at Hampton.

It was moved and seconded that the delegates to these conventions be selected by having each precinct elect a member of a committee, said committee to select the delegates, subject to the approval of the convention. The motion was amended as follows: That the chairman appoint a committee of seven to select the delegates, subject to the approval of the convention. After a short discussion a roll of the precincts was ordered on the amendment. There were 49 votes for and 62 against. The chair declared the amendment lost. The original motion then carried without a dissenting vote. The following were named on the delegate selecting committee:

Belmond township—A. C. Hinman
E. Blaine—Ole Hogue
W. Blaine—E. E. Paxton
Clarion Ward 1—M. F. Birdsall
Clarion Ward 2—W. H. Trowbridge
Clarion Ward 3—F. J. McCoy
Clarion Ward 4—A. Richards
Dayton—E. A. Shillington
E. Grove Ward 1—Andrew Midland
E. Grove Ward 2—H. B. Cole
E. Grove Ward 3—F. B. Andrews
E. Grove Ward 4—Hallvard Kloster
E. G. Twp.—Miller Nelson
Grant—J. E. Lamb
Iowa—J. E. Rowen
Lake—M. J. Lokersee
Liberty—A. A. McCurry
Lincoln—Mrs. L. Richards
Norway—J. Thompson
Pleasant—W. E. Bullard
Troy—W. O. Jones
Vernon—W. F. Schroeder
Wall Lake—J. L. Nickle

Woolstock—no representative in the convention.

It was moved and seconded that M. F. Birdsall be elected the judicial chairman. Motion carried. Motion to adjourn to 1:30 carried.

1:30 p. m.

Chairman Morton called the convention to order and had the list of candidates nominated in the primary read to the delegates. The chair called for nominations for congressional committeeman. J. A. Rogers was elected. On motion Ray Birdsall of Dows was elected senatorial committeeman.

It was moved that in cases where no committeeman had been elected in the primary, the delegates present from such precincts nominate a committeeman and that the convention approve the selection. Motion carried.

The following committeemen were then nominated and elected by the convention:

Clarion Ward 3, F. J. McCoy.
Clarion Ward 2, J. H. Ramsay.
Clarion Ward 4, O. J. Pardun.
E. Grove Ward 1, Andrew Midland.

The report of the nominating committee was then presented and unanimously adopted. The following delegates were selected for the state convention at Des Moines:

Hallvard Kloster, Eagle Grovee.
M. F. Coons, Goldfield.
Ward Barnes, Eagle Grove.
Harry Summers, Clarion.
Mrs. R. H. Keith, Goldfield.
Arthur Richards, Clarion.
E. G. Reed, Belmond.

Geo. P. Hardwick, Belmond.
J. D. Reed, Woolstock.
W. M. Mantle, Goldfield.
F. H. Peterson Dows.
A. L. Middleton, Eagle Grove.
W. H. Trowbridge, Clarion.

The following were named alternates to the state convention: H. B. Cole, W. F. Meacham, Wm. Christensen, John McDonald, Jr., John Ross F. B. Sheldon, S. A. McCreery, J. E. Lamb, S. C. Brace, A. E. Martin, E. Caquelin, J. F. Keely, Ole Hogue, Fred Allen, J. L. Lunnstad.

The following were named delegates to the state judicial convention: M. F. Birdsall, W. E. Bullard, J. W. McGrath, R. W. Birdsall, Sylvester Flynn, Miller Nelson, C. P. Luick, Grant Trask, H. B. Cole, A. R. Ladd, Ed. Overbaugh, Mrs. Jos. Holman, Mrs. B. W. McElhinney, Oscar Hobbet, Mrs. H. B. Cole.

The following were named delegates to the district judicial convention: J. M. Jensen, Mrs. Lydia Richards, Hjalmar Jansen, L. N. Aichard, J. E. Richardson, Oscar Ulstad, C. J. Nagle, J. H. Abernathy, Mrs. A. E. Weber, J. A. Rogers, Evert McGrath.

After the formal election of the convention delegates Chairman Morton announced a meeting of the county central committee immediately following the adjournment of the convention. It was moved and seconded that the convention adjourn. Carried.

O. P. Morton Chairman.
H. W. Barnes, Secretary.

County Central Committee Meeting

The meeting was called to order by O. P. Morton, Chairman. The chairman read his financial report and then called for the election of a county chairman. F. M. Koons and O. P. Morton were placed in nomination. Mr. Koons received four votes and O. P. Morton ten votes. Mr. Koons moved that the election of Mr. Morton be made unanimous. Carried.

On motion Burt Harwood of Clarion was elected secretary of the county central committee. Adjourned.

O. P. Morton, Chairman.
H. W. Barns, Secretary.

Iowa City Man To Give Address

To Address Club On The Conservation Of America's Natural Scenery.

ALL SHOULD BE PRESENT

The Community Welfare club will meet Friday of this week, July 7th, at the library parlors. The meeting will be called promptly at 8 o'clock.

Prof. Shimek, of Iowa City, will be here to address the meeting, his subject being the Conservation of Natural Scenery, a topic which every real American should be interested in. Prof. Shimek will be in town only between trains, and the chairman will call the busness meeting of the club promptly in ordr to get thru with this feature of the program and allow Prof. Shimek as much time as possible.

The club is fortunate in being able to secure Prof. Shimek for this meeting. He is an interesting and instructive speaker, well informed on his subject, and his address will be well worth an effort to hear. This meeting is a postponed one from the regular time, owing to a trip which Prof. Shimek made East to deliver an address on these same lines.

The serving committee for the day are:

Mrs. E. E. Boughton, Mrs. Riley, Mrs. A. E. Martin, Mrs. Louis Hauge, Mrs. C. J. Johnson, Mrs. L. N. Foster, Mrs. T. N. Davenport, Mrs. Thiltgen.

JENISON—GRAHAM

Miss Gladys Leone Jenison and Joseph L. Graham stole a march on their many friends when they were quietly married last week Tuesday, June 27th at the St. Francis' Rectory, Rev. Father Eardley performing the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Harley Thompson acted as best man and bridesmaid.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Jenison, prominent farmers of Pleasant township and one of this city's best known and talented young ladies. She has been prominent in social circles here, and is very popular among the younger people.

Mr. Graham is well known in Belmond, where he has resided for many years, and where he was for a time in business, having a barber shop. He is an ex-service man, industrious and capable, and will take his bride to his new location, Titonka where he has a shop and where the happy cuple will be at home to their host of frinds after July 1st.

The Independent takes pleasure in joining with the many friends in extending congratulations and best wishes for a happy prosperous life together.

KANAWHA'S BIG DAY GOES OVER FINE

Kanawha's Creamery Day last Thursday went over big, with immense crowds and a variety of attractions. The Eldora Boys Band rendered the music, which was pronounced excellent, and the sports program was highly entertaining. The feature of this was the ball game between Belmond and Kanawha which the latter won 4 to1 in a hotly contested battle replete with heavy hitting and sensational fielding on both sides. All reports are highly commendatory of the day.

A SUGGESTION

A farmer's wife makes the suggestion that Belmond could have a band by soliciting for one among the farm people. How about it?—Contributed.

Battery Touring-Foresight

The best reason we can give you for having your battery looked to before you start to tour is that it's just plain common sense. A good deal the same as taking along a spare tire, or an extra set of spark plugs, or a couple of headlight bulbs.

If it's right we'll say so. If it isn't we'll do what's necessary to bring it up to the mark.

Whether it's a Willard or not it will be given the benefit of Willard Standards of Battery Service.

PATTERSON'S TRAINED WILD ANIMAL CIRCUS

"You can always size up a circus by its 'Bulls,'" says the old Circus man, Bulls by the way, being improved circus vernacular for Elephants.

While this it not an infallible rule, the Elephant is an important factor in the modern tent show, just as he contributed in no small degree to the pageantry of Old Rome and the circus specticacles of Ancient Greece.

The "Patterson's Trained Wild Animal Circus" which is to display its wonders in Garner, Monday July 10 announces that it makes a specialty of its trained Elephants, and according to all accounts their big pacjyderms are as multitudinous as they are educatedly clever. The Elephants are utilized in the big specacular entree, which introduces the performances. They are presented in a series of stunts in the three rings, they make a brave showing in the Menagerie, and they play an important part in the "Sun-Bright" and gorgeous free street parade, that ushers in Circus Day. A novel angle in "Patterson's Trained Wild Animal Circus" Elephant offering is the fact that the three herds are directed by as many clever girls, fearless and agile young women who are said to display an aptness in handling their big charges that mere men rarely acquire. Under their direction the Elephants are said to go through their difficult performances with the tractability of burros.—Advt.

ARE WE GETTING BETTER?

What do you think about this old world, anyway? Are we getting better, or worse? Is the human race progressing, standing still or going back? It cannot stand still; it must either go forward, of go back. Sometimes, when one views such happenings as the mine riots in Illinois; the selfish aims and views of the old world in attempting to grab everything not nailed down; the race riots of our own South; and the scores of bickerings and quarrels and fights going on thruout the world, one is tempted to think that the world is going backwards.

We are but little removed from those ancestors who killed with a club and knawed their meat raw. The veneer of civilization is thin, and when something occurs, such as the Herrin riots, which appeal to our inherant instincts of making right by might, we slip back into the dark ages, ages which were not so very long ago. We have progressed far, it is true, in the past 20 centuries; we have gained in knowledge, in art, in literature, in a better understanding of God; yet, in a moments' time, we can slip back to the days when every man was his own law, recognizing no other, and obeying no other.

We like to think that the world is getting better; that it is going ahead, for only by going ahead can we ever reach the goal towards which the strive. To think that we were going backwards; that our efforts towards progress were unavailing; would be unbearable. A hopeful viewpoint is half the battle, and by keeping it, by thinking that we are going ahead, we will.

EXPENSE OF COUNTY CAMPAIGN

Monitor: F. W. Walker's total election expense for renomination to the office of county auditor was $71.50, which amount was spent for newspaper announcements.

For his campaign for re-nomination to the office of county treasurer E. A. Allen expended the sum total of $170.60, being about $100 for printing and postage, balance for announcements.

F. H. Peterson's total expense foots up $137.80. The items include board, gas, car fare and publicity.

Clerk Goslin's total expense was $113.00. Of this sum $50 was spent for movie advertising, carfare, and cards.

His opponent, Chas. DeVore reports a total expense of $83.00. The major portion was for printing and advertising, $10 being for gasoline.

Sheriff Lang spent $2.80 for gas and railroad fare. The remainder of the total, $107.95, was spent for printing and advertising.

Clifton Campbell says the race he made for sheriff cost him $116.50. In addition to the usual advertising the sum of $15.50 was spent for gas and oil.

The third candidate for sheriff, Jack McClelland, has filed no report.

Will Dunn, candidate for sheriff on the democratic ticket, reports a total expense of $52.50. He was nominated without opposition, receiving 120 votes in the entire county. Only 150 democratic votes were cast this year.

Miss Edith M. Vaughn was unopposed for county recorder. Her expense for publicity was $60.00.

J. A. Rogers enumerates the usual expense items in his report, the total being $84.41.

The whirlwind camgaign of his successful opponent, J. M. Jensen of Belmond, cost him $224.22. L. A. Jensen of Forest City contributed $20.10 of this amount. One-half of this sum was spent for circulars, postage, cards, gas, meals and lodging, the remainder being for newspaper advertising.

Dr. H. P. Walker of Clarion reports no expense whatever in being renominated for coroner.

Supervisor Grattiage spent $19, while J. C. Peterson the successful nominee reports a total expense of $22.50.

Ed Evans of the Fourth district reports $22.50 expended. He had no opposition.

In the First district J. D. Baker the successful candidate reports $34.50, of that sum $12.60 was for gas and oil. D. E. Harris spent $19.00 and R. C. Morse, the democratic candidate, an even one dollar bill.

For the year ending June 30 Auditor Walker reports a total of 1203 hunting licenses issued, the receipts being $1212.00. Only one nonresident license at $10 was issued.

RADIO

THIRD ELEMENT IN THE VACUUM TUBE

Grid Added to Fleming Valve by Dr. Lee DeForest Was a Big Improvement.

Any device which will pass electricity in one direction and will wholly or partially obstruct the flow in the opposite direction is termed a rectifier, because when connected in the path of an alternating current it will suppress one-half of each cycle and therefore the circuit will be traversed by pulsating direct current. A rectifier also is said to possess unidirectional conductivity, meaning, of course, that it will conduct electricity in one direction only. Its ability to rectify currents of extremely high frequency determines its application in radio.

Due to its ability to rectify high frequency alternating currents the two-element (filament and plate) vacuum tube can be used in a radio receiver as a detector.

Fig. VI is a simple radio receiving circuit employing this type of two-element vacuum tube in place of a crystal detector.

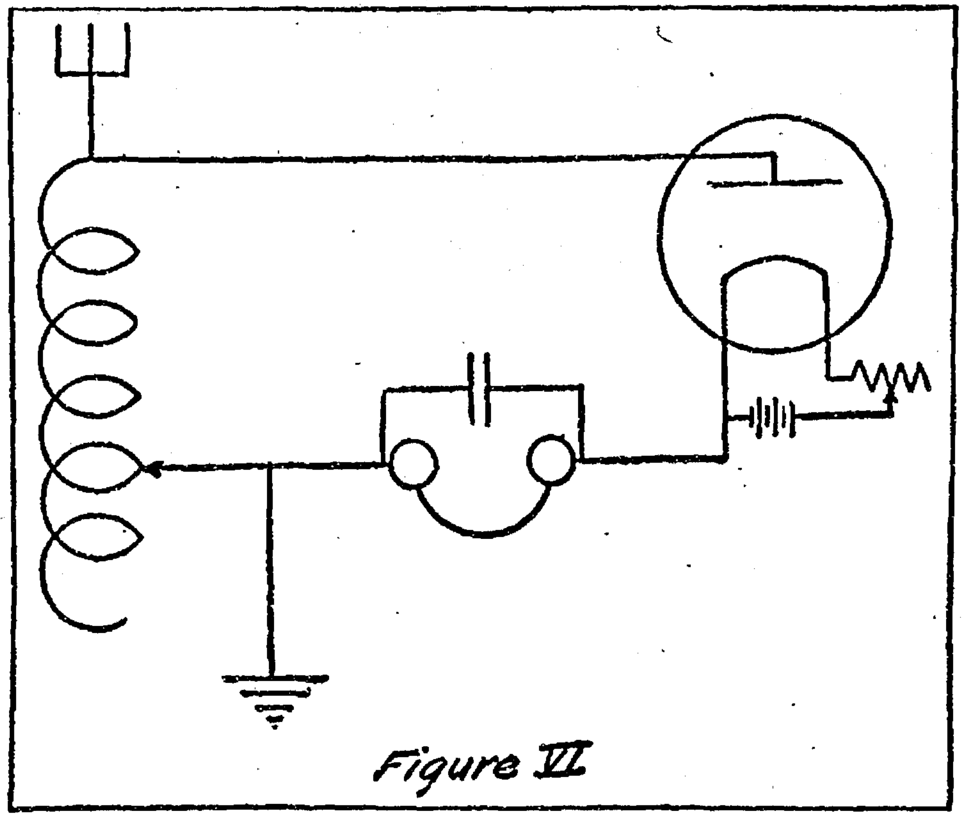

Figure VI

Dr. J. A. Fleming of London, England, was the first to use a two-element tube of the type just described as a medium of rectifying high frequency radio currents. Fleming called his product a valve because it would let current flow in one direction but not in the other direction. The Fleming valve as a forerunner of the vacuum tube of today marked a very important step in the progress of the radio art. The Fleming valve, however, in its original form was not much better than other forms of rectifiers then in use and, owing to the greater ruggedness and ease of manipulation of the latter, did not come into general use as a detector.

Dr. Lee DeForest, an American, greatly improved the Fleming valve by adding a third electrode called the grid, which served the function of a control element and thus made it possible to utilize the feeble incoming signal currents to control more powerful local currents. The three-electrode vacuum tube of DeForest is the tube used so extensively today.

The third element which is called a grid and from which the three-electrode vacuum tube derives its name was placed by DeForest between the filament and the plate in the path of the electrons. The grid is a perforated plate or mesh of fine wire through the openings of which the electrons must pass in their journey from the filament to the plate.

Fig. VII is a diagrammatical sketch of the circuits of a three-electrode vacuum tube and is identically the same as the sketch in Fig. III for a two-element vacuum tube with the addition of the grid circuit I-J-K-L. The battery in the grid circuit is called the "C" battery.

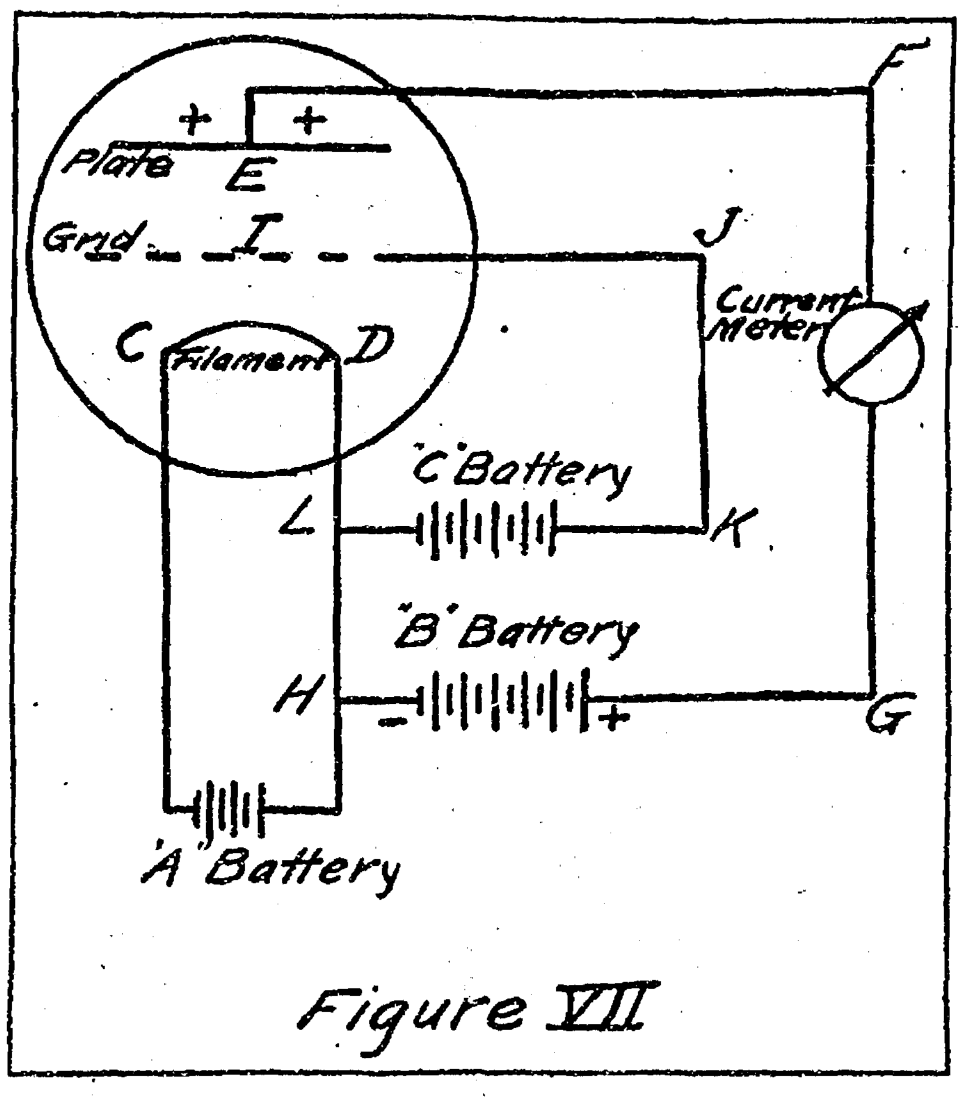

Figure VII

As a start let us suppose that "C" battery voltage is zero. The operation of the three-electrode tube would then be exactly like that of a two-electrode tube, just as though there were no grid. Like a two-electrode tube when the filament C-D is brought to incandescence by the "A" battery a steady stream of electrons will be given off, which will be drawn over to the plate E. Plate E is maintained at a positive potential with respect to the filament by the "B" battery.

Now if the grid is made positive with respect to the filament, it is possible to accelerate the flow of the electron stream from the filament to the plate; if the grid is made negative with respect to the filament, the flow of the electron stream from the filament to the plate will be retarded. Or in other words, by making the grid positive or negative with respect to the filament, it is possible to increase or counteract the space charge. The third electrode or grid thus offers a means of controlling the current in the plate circuit without changing the plate potential or the filament temperature.

The characteristic curve of a three electrode vacuum tube is shown in Fig. VIII. This diagram shows the relation of grid potential to plate current, assuming that the filament temperature and plate voltage remain constant.

It can be seen from the curve that by applying a negative potential of value E to the grid, the plate current can be reduced to zero. The negative charge on the grid will have the effect of a negative potential E with respect to the filament, making the negative charge so strong around the filament that the electrons cannot leave it. On the other hand, if a positive potential of value F be applied to the grid with respect to the filament, the maximum or saturation current will flow in the plate circuit. Applying a greater positive potential than F to the grid with respect to the filament will not cause an increase in the plate current because the electrons given off are being attracted to the plate and grid.

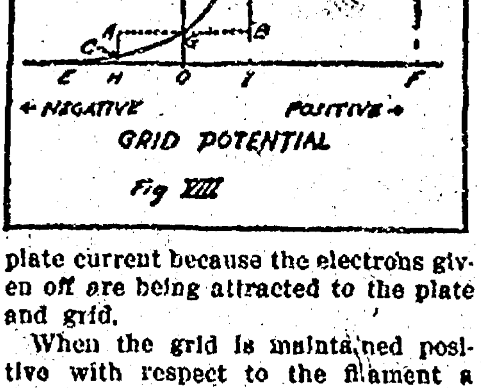

Fig VIII

When the grid is maintained positive with respect to the filament a small current will flow in the grid circuit. Because of its being positive it will attract the electrons and have a charge given up to it by them.

CHANCE OF A LIFETIME

The occupants of the parlor car of the limited were startled by the abrupt appearance of two masked bandits.

"T'row up yer hands!" commanded the bigger of the two. We're gonna rob all the gents and kiss all the gals."

"No, pardner," remonstrated the smaller one, gallantly. We'll rob the gents, but we'll leave the ladies alone."

"Mind your own business young fellow," snapped a female passenger of uncertain age. "The big man is robbing the train."—American Legion Weekly.

BOYS ENTER CREAMERY

A couple of small lads entered the Clarion creamery via the coal room door the other evening and were making away with a goodly supply of cream and ice cream when Manager Anderson appeared on the scene. They had first ransacked the office for money, scattering his papers all over the floor. When caught the smaller of the two lads says, "You can't do nothing to me, I ain't old enough to know better." When asked where he lived he refused to tell until told he would be put in jail. These and other lads are responsible for a great deal of the pilfering going on of late.—Monitor.

ROWAN NEWS

"THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL" JULY 14-15

Nothing like this cast in the way of aggregate talent has ever been assembled before. The drawing power of almost any of the names on the roll has been sufficient to awaken the interest of the discriminating public. Here, for the first time, they are appearing in a single production under the direction of a master producer.

Peter Schreck, of Hayfield was a Rowan visitor on Monday of last week.

Henry Williams was a Fort Dodge business caller Tuesday.

Mrs. L. A. McCallum visited at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Clyde Jennings and family, in Clarion Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bingham, Mrs. J. D. Pritchett and Mrs. E. Bingham were Iowa Falls visitors Tuesday.

Mrs. L. W. Stevenson was a Clarion shopper between trains Wednesday.

Mrs. Julius Goos and daughter Anna, of St. Paul, arrived last week for a visit at the Henry Rietz home and with other relatives.

Mrs. Guy Sheldon and children visited at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Schroeder at Clarion, Thursday.

The Misses Izetta Fletcher and Celia Azeltine were at Hampton several days last week where they were taking teacher's examinations.

Miss Fay Swartzendrover, of Clarion spent a few days at the home of her friend, Mrs. Jesse Agnew.

Mrs. J. S. Farren and children returned Wednesday from their visit at the home of their son, Duncan and wife in Los Angeles, Calif. They also visited relatives in Utah.

Miss Dollie Riley was a Clarion visitor Friday.

Dr. Brown and famiy, Mrs. S. A. Packard and family of Belmond, and S. W. Smith and family, of Fort Dodge spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Steffens.

Mrs. Ida Ryder went to Grundy Center this last week to visit at the homes of her children Ralph and wife and Mr. and Mrs. P. Fuller.

Mrs. J. F. Howell and children spent the past week at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Howell at Humbodlt. Mr. Howell motored over Sunday after them.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bingham and Mr. and Mrs. E. Bingham left Thursday for a trip thru So. Dak. They will visit relatives at Viborg Parker and Wessington Springs.

Mrs. M. M. Snyder spent a few days in Clarion the past week at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fred Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Simons and family spent Sunday with relatives it Eagle Grove.

Word received from Mrs. Fred Williams the past week states that their oldest daughter, Bernice was operated on for appendicitis last Sunday. At last reports she was doing nicely.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Baldwin, of So. Dak. are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Hardley.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Fowler went to Storm Lake Monday to spend the 4th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Matt Shanner.

J. A. Whitten is improving his town property by the addition of a new porch.

Friends who remember Mrs. Henry Cowley, who formerly resided at this place will be sorry to learn that she is at Rochester, Minn., where she has undergone a very serious operation but will be glad to learn she is doing nicely.

Rev. Hardcastle of Iowa Falls preached at the Congregational church Sunday. Mrs. Hardcastle and son attended the services also. There will be regular services next Sunday. Every one is invited to attend.

The Misses Laura McCallum and Susan Duffy were week end visitors at the home of their parents.

Mrs. J. A. Whitten and daughter, Billie returned from their visit at St. Peter Minn., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jurden Brinkman and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Gay Fletcher, Mrs. Dan Fletcher and Mrs. Morris Sulliwan returned from their auto trip to Bruce, Wis. where they visited at the Tim Weld home.

Mrs. Edith Hanson and granddaughter Kathern went to Kanawha Wednesday to visit at the home of her daughter.

The pastor last Sunday evening delivered a patriotic sermon on "The Birth of a Nation." It was strongly and deeply patriotic, and could not but help the people to appreciate their privileges as citizens of America.

The members of Mrs. Bert Pelley's S. S. class were entertained last Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hubbel at Dows. There were some 40 young people present who enjoyed themselves with games and music. At the close of the social hour ice cream and cake were served. All voted the affair a real good time.

The local tennis tournament is in full swing, with lots of interest from the players and people. There are three different competitions, one for the boys, a second for business men, and a third free-for-all. The medals for the winners will be on view in a few days in the window of Fred Hackley's drug store. The winners will be proud of their prizes.

The Auxiliary of the American Legion are planning on assisting in the campaign for new members.

Quite a large number of the citizens witnessed the horseshoe pitching competition last Saturday afternoon between Hampton and Rowan. The local players will enter the competition at the county celebration and expect to capture some of the prizes.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bingham and daughter Faye left Monday for Clear Lake where they will camp out for a few days and fish, also renew old acquaintances.

Miss Angie Baines is taking a short vacation from her duties at the central office.

Wm. McCallum has been enjoying a visit from a brother from Nebraska.

Mrs. J. E. Bollinger of Sioux Falls, S. D., is visiting at the homes of her sisters, Mrs. Amos Cowley and Mrs. Mary Braden.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Lent and children of Vinton visited Wednesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. Bingham.

Mrs. Sarah Fothergill of Armstrong spent the week end at the Will Whitten home.

Mrs. Hannah Whitten, Laurel Baines and Miss Angie Baines are spending the week at Spirit Lake visiting relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Whitten and daughter and Mrs. Fothergill spent Sunday at Goldfield visiting Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Snow.

J. A. Whitten sells Goodyear tires.

Fred Hackley was an Eagle Grove business caller Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Heit Pennings of Ackley were calling on old friends in Rowan on Monday.

Fred Hackley went to Hampton on Monday, returning with a new automobile.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Miller and daughter Blanche of Clarion visited Rowan relatives Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Berger were Belmond callers Monday.

THE CO. NURSE QUESTION

The writer is afraid that a second submission of the county nurse question to the voters of Wright county will not have the easy victory some of its staunch supporters expect. It will require lots of hard, individual work, and we doubt very much of the wisest kind of publicity will overcome the prejudice which exists in many quarters against the proposition. The vote in the primary was, it is true, a vote of protest, not so much against the individual nurses as it was against the expenditure of county funds for the maintenance of the work. Conditions may change mightily between now and November, but the promptness with which a second vote is asked on the question has tended to crystallize the opposition and may serve to defeat the very ends the friends of the county nurse work are seeking.—News.

It's getting so nowadays a farmer can't tell which political party he belongs to until he reads the market report.

Farm Bureau News

By R. M. Edwards

Directors Purchase "Movie"

At the regular board of directors meeting Saturday, June 24th, the directors voted to buy the movie machine to be used in conducting the farm bureau meetings. A committee of three was appointed to investigate the different kinds of machines and place the final order.

This machine has been demonstrated in the various townships for the past two week with the result that wherever it has been shown the members have voted unanimously in favor of the purchase. Forty-two counties in Iowa are now using the movie machine, in fact it seem to indicate that its use is bringing results in the farm bureau work. It is estimated that it will require about a month's time to get the machine after the order is placed, so that it is quite probable that the movie will not be shown in the regular farm bureau meetings until about August.

Exchange Discontinued

At the last board of directors meeting it was decided to discontinue the printing of the monthly publication, the "Farm Bureau Exchange." The directors felt that the exchange, in a sense, is a duplication of the weekly farm bureau notes which are printed in the various county papers. The thought was expressed that all farm bureau notes of any consequence are printed in the local papers, in fact, everything except the advertising appears in the county papers.

Harding Likes Us!

From the White House to president J. R. Howard of the American Farm Bureau Federation comes the following letter bearing the signature of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America:

"Almost from its earliest beginnings I have been quite intimately apprised of the developing work of the Farm Bureau Federation. It has taken its place in an astonishingly brief period among the most important and influential factors in behalf, not only of the best agricultural development but also of shaping the community sentiments of the country. Its policies have been directed with a uniform wisdom and breadth of understanding which have been well earned the high place which the federation holds in the confidence of the country. I feel that it has been worthy of especial commendation by reason of the broad view it has been taking of national problems and industrial relationships. This liberality of vision has been particularly illustrated in its broad and comprehending interest in behalf of an adequate merchant marine, and its favorable attitude toward the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project.

"Particularly in regard to the encouragement of the merchant marine, I feel that the federation, by recognizing the vital community of interest between the agricultural concerns of the nation and the development of a great and prosperous merchant marine, has demonstrated an understanding of economic fundamendals which deserves highest commendation. No particular department of industry or commerce will in the long run be promoted by an attitude on the part of those immediately concerned for it, which excludes an accurate view of the common interest among them all. Being thus convinced, I have especial satisfaction in expressing my commendation of the federations' work and attitudes, and my sincere hope for its continuing and increasing prosperity."

President Harding was invited by President Howard to attend the Farm Bureau Decennial at DeKalk, Ill., on June 30. Because Congress remains in session at that time the president is unable to attend the tenth birthday anniversary, but he expresses his regret as follows:

"I am very sorry, indeed, for a number of reasons, that engagements heretofore made render it impossible for me to accept the invitation which would afford an opportunity to present some suggestions which are very prominent in my mind."

Kinseth's Store News

Well, the Fourth is over. What kind of a time did you have? So did we! And we're still here on the corner ready with the same good bargains as ever.

Lots of fruit for you—cherries, raspberries, gooseberries, and some peaches too in a week or so. Prices within reason, and you can see the reason. And while we're talking on fruits don't forget to order canning sugar NOW—it's going up, which is good news for our sugar factory but poor for you. Better buy a supply before it hops another notch.

We have some dandy overalls for the harvest fields, just the thing and at bargains. And shoes and socks and ginghams and percales, everything guaranteed. And our guarantee is a promise, not like the guarantee of the colored person who sold a brother negro some kink remover. It didn't work and Rastus complained "yo gahanteed it." "Yas," replied his fellow, "but Ah didn't promise nuthin."

Don't forget the store on the corner.

P. S.—A few glasses of those real preserves left at 23c a glass. Hurry!

When The Day Is Hot

When the day is miserably hot, and the hours linger long and weary through the swealtering heat, and the old binder limps and rattles along skipping bundles here and clogging there, giving no end of trouble, while a storm is brewing in the distance, and finally the thunder roars and the rain falls, leveling and tangling the once even heads of golden grain—then's "when a feller needs a friend." On the other hand, suppose you came to town before you start harvesting, and get a new McCormick or Deering binder, and even though the day may be disagreeably hot the work will go on smoothly as it should, and then, after the last bundle is safely shocked, the rain comes down—"ain't it a grand and glorious feelin'?"

Before you become unreasonably stubborn, make sure you are right. Talking without thinking is like shooting without aiming.

Think of Quality—Buy Wisely

It is not the price you pay that counts, it is the service you receive. Why take chances with an inferior or short length twine? It will prove expensive and you will pay dearly for it during the busy harvest season when you cannot afford to lose time. Buying good binder twine is always true ecomomy in the long run. Twine is one commodity that is bought very much on honor. The ball of twine is non-committal; one ball of twine looks very much like any other ball of twine and you must take it on trust. That is why it is essential that you must depend upon twine reputation in your purchase. Good twine will add much to the success of your harvest. Poor twine will be costly, out of all proportion to the difference in price. Buy the reliable Deering twine.

Some men get credit for being courageous, when they are merely lacking in sense.

Are YOU a Pitchfork Farmer?

The one thing that will bring better times: KWITCHERBELLIAKIN.

Besides being hard work, "pitchfork farming" is a long, long way from being efficient farming. It makes a "four-operation" job out of work that should be done in one opereation with an up-to-date machine. Think how much time an International Spreader would save on your farm—and at the same time it would do the work better than you can possibly do by hand. The new International Manure Spreader will lay the manure on the ground evenly, in any quality desired. There is no more comparison between the work done by the International Spreader and a man with a pitchfork than there is between the speed of an automobile and a wheelbarrow. They simply are not in the same class. Why be a "pitchfork farmer" when International Spreader prices are so attractively low? It has been six years since we have been able to offer you such remarkable values.

Isn't it fierce to be the wife of a man who isn't popular, or the husband of a woman who is?

How would you like to own a "Big Brother" of our own "Red Baby?" You can get a "Brother" equiped with an enclosed cab and general purpose box, enabling you to do all your farm hauling quickley, at the right time, and at low cost. The body consists of top boards and end gate added to the regular express body, and is grain tight. The end gate goes clear to the bottom of the body. The lower portion is of the Comstock type so it can be removed to allow grain to be dumped. The top box is well made, braced at the corners, and bolted securely to the express body. Eleven other body and cab combinations are also included in the "family" of "Red Baby" Brothers. Let us tell you more about them.

A fellow with loose habits very often gets into a tight place.

COAL SITUATION NOT FAVORABLE

Manager Kellogg, Iowa Falls Electric Co., Thinks Price Will Advance Till Strike Ends

The people in this locality seem to show very little concern over the existing coal strike, and the fact that the situation is practically the same as when the strike was called. The only interest they seem to have in the matter is whether they will be able to get coal for domestic purposes during the coming winter, and they seem to believe that the matter will be settled before that time. They apparently do not realize that the matter is of the greatest importance to them especially if they are being furnished with electric current for lighting and heating purpose by the Iowa Falls Electric company and other similar companies.

A representative of this paper called on H. F. Kellogg, manager of the Iowa Falls Electric company, who made the following statement in regard to the local conditions: "You remember that at the time the strike was called our company made a statement which appeared in this paper in regard to the supply of coal then on hand at Iowa Falls. A short time ago we made a new inventory of the coal on hand and found that on June 1 we had in storage at Iowa Falls about 1,855 tons. This is about three months' supply at our present rate of consumption. As there seems to be no chance of an immediate settlement of the strike we believe that it was not wise to deplete our stock of storage coal, so went into the market and bought whatever coal we could find that was suitable for our purposes. We were able to buy ten cars of Kentucky screenings, the first of which has just been delivered. This coal cost the company $2.50 more per ton than the coal which we had in storage, but we preferred to pay the advanced price and thereby be assured that we can furnish service for at least a month longer than we could by using our storage coal. We are now in a position to assure our customers that we will be able to furnish service until Oct. 1, and it is our intention to continue to purchase coal so that we will not be obliged to close down in the event that no settlement of the strike is agreed upon..

The price of coal is advancing daily and the amount that is offered is very limited, and this is being bought as rapidly as offers are made. In spite of the fact that there has been a slight reduction in freight rates which will become operative on June 1, the coal which we will buy will be at an advanced price. The decrease in freight rates will amount to about forty cents per ton, but the advance in price of coal will more than offset this saving. It is my opinion that the price of coal will continue to advance until the strike is settled. All of the coal that is being offered is from the Kentucky and Virginia fields and the freight rates are much higher than what we had been paying on Illinois and Iowa coal. There is no question that we will be obliged to shoulder a considerable loss in buying coal under present conditions but we feel that we owe it to our customers to furnish service as long as it is possible to do so."—Adv.

Unless you are interested in the Lord's mighty and wonderful works.

While I have been home all week hoeing potatoes and picking bugs in the day time and studying the heavens and measuring the apparant distances of the stars and planets from each other at night, and after meditating and figuring and charting a great deal I came to the conclusion that I would write once more on this subject as I have done often in former years, but it was not much appreciated apparantly.

But lately several evenings groups of men and ladies have been here for obsrvations and stating this coming relestial phenomenon one man expressed the desire "I wish I could see those two stars go by each othere." This induced me to write this time, as there may be more persons interested in seeing two heavnly bodies from different directions coming nearer each other every few days and finally passing each other at a certain place and date.

We presume tht most people know that all stars rise in the eastern sky and get higher and set on the western horizon. But that all stars rise 4 minutes earlier, or to be more exact 3 minutes and 56 seconds, every evening, only few people know, and only by this means the heavens with all their beautiful clusters of stars shift over our heads westward and in the course of a year we have seen every constallation from east to west of the whole magnificent universe, and we have the same stars as landmarks or mileposts at the very spot we saw them a year ago. Or a century ago. As the most brilliant of all, "Sirius," will be at 8:40 p. m. in the middle of Feb. right straight south of you about 1-3 of the horizon to the zenith. The first magnitude star "Regulus" will be at 8 p.m. in the middle of April on the meridian 2-3 up in south. The great "Arcturus" will be at 8:15 p. m. in the middle of June quite a little south of the zenith. The pearl white Vega will be at 8:30 in the middle of Aug-Lagittarius holds the point of his arrow on the meridian at 8 p m. in the middle of August low down on the south.

While from 9 to 10 p. m. the great square of Pegasus stands right south of you in the middle of October 2-3 of the sky to zenith. And in the middle of December the most interesting star is Algol or the blinking demon, and will be at 9 p. m. squarely above your head.

Excuse me for giving so much of a sample on stars, But planets do not work that way. You never see them in exactly the same spot, they are constantly shifting their location or they all move with different speeds which can not be perceived by the naked eye only at intervals. Our beautiful Venus appeared in the western sky above the horizon on April in the constellation Aries working higher at her speed of 22 miles per second. She is now above the horizon after sunset in the west, northwest, and Saturn and Jupiter, the two greatest planets of our system Saturn 750 times cubic contents that of our earth and gigantic Jupiter 1300 times of the earth became visible on our eastern sky in April or 180 degrees apart. They both are located in the constellation Virgo. These two giants passed each other last Sept. and as Saturn can make only 5 1-2 miles per second Jupiter with his four moons has a speed of 8 1-3 miles per second and has outrun Saturn since that conjunction time up to 10 degrees.

To make the long story short these latter two will be seen at the present time 1-2 hour after sunset about straight south of you a little over half way up in the sky. Jupiter is a real bright star, and a little N. W. on hand wide on outstretched arm you see the little [illegible] golden orb of Saturn with his ring system. Now try and try again until you have them thoroly located in the sky and in your mind that you can find them all three at a single glance in a few moments' time. The wonders and astounding part of it is you see them now 81 degrees apart but they will get nearer each other right along and on Aug. 15 Venus and Saturn will pass, Venus about one inch south of Saturn, and on Aug. 27 Venus will pass Jupiter on the south side too, about the same distance. Now watch and see as it may be the first conjunction you ever witnessed. Whereas:

"The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handiwork." And furthermore, His word says: "Lift up your eyes on high and see who hath created these, that bringeth out their host by number; He called them by name; by the greatness of His might, and for that He is strong in power, not one is lacking." 'Consider the work of God, for who can make that straight which he hath made crooked."

And close and meditate. "For the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

Your Amateur,
J. C. JANSSEN.

SOME TRAFFIC RULES

Don't make any signal as you leave the curb with your car. Sooner or later some one will run into you and then you can sue him.

Don't make a signal when turning a corner. It might be considered courteous and courtesy is weakness in the average autoist. Then, it's the law anyway. Why encourage legislation?

Don't fail to park your car exactly opposite another on a narrow or the main street. Put it exactly across. That assists in keeping the traffic alert and is excellent for the other driver's hands and eyes.

Don't miss driving up and down the streets where there is the heaviest traffic. Joy ride 'em. Drive slow—very slow. If any other car turns out to pass just step on her a little. Then the girls in your car will giggle and think you are a regular devil.

At night always park your car as close to the corners of the streets as possible. When the other fellow swings around and suddenly sees your old boat right under his radiator it gives him a chance to test out his brakes. Brakes should be tested often.

If any person should call your attention to the law at any time tell him to remove to the lower regions. That is imperative. No discourteous driver will ever fail to do that. Be a hero.

If you drive a truck take advantage of your opportunity. No truck driver worthy the name ever gives an inch of the road until he absolutely has too. They'll get out of your way—just be firm.

If you haven't a dollar in the world except the payment you made on an old jitney and the three gallons of gas in its tank, slam into 'em. They can't collect a cent from you—and your feelings don't count.

Where the road is rough and there is only one track, of course, it belongs to you—even if on the wrong side of the road. Stick to it brother. The chances are that the other driver will have sense enuff to avoid a collision. And, he may be of the courteous type to which you are a sworn enemy.

If you happen to be a lady, always keen in mind that mere man is supposed to take care of himself and a lady. Crowd him into the curb. He should be polite enuff to like it. If he isn't—why, make him like it anyway!

it you are pedestrian jaywalk across the street anywhere. Take your time. Make 'em brake. If he happens to hit you you can sue for a million dollars at the least, and, maybe, you'll get something. At the least it is worth trying—when a lawyer will take the case on a contingent fee.

After ten o'clock at night, on all residence streets, always run with your cutouts wide open. Why should they sleep when they might be up just to see you go by?

If you happen to get pinched you can always tell the mayor that you will never vote for him again; and if you happen to live outof town you can threaten to take your trade elsewhere.

Study the automobile law. Ponder the laws of courtesy. The more you know of them the more you can break.

Flights of Fancy

"That poem of yours doesn't show any imagination," said the editor.

"More imagination than you think for," retorted Mr. Penwiggle. "I imagined I was going to get $50 for it."

"DIRTY POLITICS"

Chicago Tribune: The sudden tragic death of Mrs. Len Small, wife of the governor of Illinois, following what her husband described as the happiest day of her life, is a matter of deep regret to the people of Chicago and of the state. The Tribune sympathizes sincerely with the bereaved family and with Mr. Small as a private citizen mourning the loss of the helpmate of a lifetime. That sympathy is felt and extended as in a tragedy sadly closing long years of domestic happiness. It is for the man, not for the office holder.

When Len Small was nominated for the governorship of Illinois, this newspaper opposed him because it believed his political record and associations were such as did not promise a good adminstration. Nothing he has done confirmed it. No tragedy, however deeply it may move our emotions, can alter that opinion any more than it can alter the record on which the opinion is based.

Such gratuitous expressions of sentiment as that contained in The Chicago American's report of Mrs. Small's death, that "her life paid the price of the despicable political conspiracy led and fostered by The Chicago Tribune," or the statement by Coporation Counsel Ettelson that her death was "nothing but murder, done by dirty politics," are entirely beside the point. They reveal nothing but a desire to make political capital of the death, such as they accuse The Tribune of making of circumstances prior to the tragedy. The same is true of the editorial from The Herald and Examiner of June 27.

The facts are that Mrs. Small was the wife of a man who arose to an important place in Illinois politics. It was her misfortune that the methods he employed to reach that place prompted strong arverse criticism. Eventually this criticism disclosed the fact that durng Mr. Small's incumbrancf as state treasurer, millions of dollars in his custody were put into the hands of borrowers, who paid from 5½ to 8 per cent for their use, while the state received only 2 per cent. Indictment by a grand jury on a charge of criminal conspiracy followed.

In the course of the trial in which the former treasurer, now governor, was a defendant, it was disclosed that approximately $1,500,000 was earned on these funds, which was never turned into the state treasury. The state sought to prove that part of this money went to Mr. Small. It did not find the money in his pockets, the book sought by the prosecution to prove beyond question that he had received the money was destroyed, and the jury decided that other evidences to that effect was inadequate. But Mr. Small never took the stand to deny under oath that he had received any of the money. Neither did the defense put any other witness on the stand to make such denial. And he was acquitted.

Great was the rejoicing among his friends and political adherents. At the close of the demonstration the wife, who had stood by him, and who naturally had been under great strain, suffered a stroke which, at the age of 61, proved fatal. That is sad, but it should not cloud the issue, any more than it should cloud the civil suit now pending to recover the missing money.

The processes under which this indictment was returned, and this trial held, and this defendant acquitted, were the normal orderly processes of a civilized society. To deny prosecution of an indicted crime because it might cause acute sorrow to a wife or a mother would destroy the operation of all law. No murderer and no bandit could be punished under such a theory. It would be sentimentality gone mad.

SIGNBOARD IS BASIS $5,000 DAMAGE SUIT

News: The Eagle Grove store, which bought a prominent display signboard on the main street of Clarion, only to have the Fort Dodge Poster Co. remove the sign when it was seen the sign in the location it had was poor business for the company, is now suing the Fort Dodge concern for $5,000 damages, alleged to be due as a result of the violation of the contract.

We understand that the store claims that it contracted for the sign, with ten or twelve others ot similar size, for a period of three years. This sign in Clarion especially was one specified in the contract. The store alleges its removal will damage its business.

For this breach of contract the owners of the stre are asking damages in the sum of $5,000.

The outcome of this suit, which Frank Wixom, of Eagle Grove informs us, has actually been filed in district court at Fort Dodge, will be awaited with interest.

CLARION MAY HAVE KU KLUX KLAN

News: The time is not far distant when Clarion will possibly be represented among the cities of the land where a local branch of the Ku Klux Klan will be organized. Iowa has a head kleagle, or goblin, or whatever it is, that is expected to organize the state. The best thot of individual should be given to the subject before joining the Klan. It is not as bad as some men claim. Men, ministers of the gospel and attorneys, business men, leaders in public life, say it is not antagonistic to color or creed, but it does demand fair play for things American and Americanism. Much is done contrary to law which is laid at the door of the Klan. The average man in this locality knows little of it. He has read much of surmise and alleged disclosure, but the actual workings of the Klan are not a matter of public record. A Klan is said to have been recently rganized in the writer's d me town. A minister of the Methodist church in a sermon as late as Sunday, a week ago, publicly praised the Klan and prayed for divine blessing on its membership and aims. This would not indicate that it was a lawless organization. The organizer for that territory stated that the Klan was doing much good for the younger people. Members patrolled the roads around the larger cities, watching cars which contained young people who were promiscuously spooning. Parents were notified of the danger the young folks were facing and the Klans claim that the young people will be safeguareded through its activities. The Klan is against an influx of foreigners to this country. Many people can commend this stand. That the Klan is having a tremendou growth is admitted by those who most strongly oppose it. It is only a question of time until it will reach this section and when it does people should make certain that they know what their aims are, and what it offers. It is dmittedly not the ordinary secret society founded on fraternalism. It's purpose is more than fraternalism.

IT'S COMING!

"Well, the big day is gettin' pretty near," remarked Fred Middleage as he sat in the club reading the newspaper.

"How-so?" asked Mr. Oldone, adding, "Which day do you mean?"

"Why circus day, of course," replied the former.

"Oh, yes, that's right. That big one—what's its name—"

"Hagenbeck-Wallace—"

"Yes. It's due in Hampton Wednesday July 12. Wonder where it will show?"

"Why at the Fair Grounds, according to the paper,"

Charley Oldone sat meditating for a second or so. Then turning to Fred, remarked, "You know, Fred, there's nothing like circus day to bring back happy recollections. We old ones don't like to admit we crave for the show. It seems childish, but, dog-gone it, to be truthful, we have to say we do. What is there like the smell of that saw-dust and that atmosphere to bring back our boyhood days? It certainly is a season which does us good. Remember that day back in the old town we skipped school and carted water to the elephants, just for a ticket? That would be real work for us today, but then—yeh, then—it was the greatest thing in our lives—it certainly was. Remember, it was the first circus we ever saw. And remember how you fell in love with that wire-walker. Ha—ha—she was a pipen, at that. I suppose you will tke in this one?"

"I'll never niss it."

"Same here."

What a lot of truth there is in that conversation. Circus day surely does bring back many fond recollections to the grown-ups and is something long to be remembered by the kiddies.

But Mr. Middleage or Mr. Oldone never had the opportunity to see such a marvelous exhibition in their younger days as is promised by the majestic Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus this season. Nothing has been left undone, according to the management in surpassing their exhibitions of former years. It surely will be a glad day for many.—Advt.

A lady from Monona drove her car into a light pole in front of the Garner Trust & Savings Bank Saturday evening, breaking the globe and damaging her car several dollars worth. She paid the damage to the pole as well as her own repair bill. She was an experienced driver but her brakes refused to work properly. —Signal.

BOY IS INJURED IN BAD EXPLOSION SUNDAY

Just because 16 year old John, son of Mrs. E. Teder of Britt, wanted to hear a dynamite cap make a lot of noise Sunday afternoon may now mean the loss of one eye. The lad tried to explode the cap by hitting it with a rock. John in company with some other boys found the cap which had been bought last spring with dynamite for blasting rocks on the farm. John placed the cap on a rock and then hit it with another rock and the terrific explosion blew up fragments of rock which struck him in the face, a piece of rock lodging in his right eye and he also received other wounds in the face and about the body. He was rushed to a Mason City hospital to have the injured eye tended to but it is very doubtful if the eye can be saved.—Klemme Times.

Mr. and Mrs. Chris Jacobs, of Garner, accompanied by their daghter, Mrs. C. J. Papousek, of Belmond, visited at the Ed. Jacobs home here Saturday evening.—Klemme Times.

BOOTLEGGERS PREYING ON YOUNG FOLKS

A well know Clarion man, whose business is to keep in touch with law enforcement, was at Cornelia Friday night of last week and came home pretty well imbued with the idea that if the general run of people knew what the bootleggers were doing out in that vicinity, there would be something a-popping. The victims of the bootleggers, who are about as ornery a bunch as you can find anywhere, are not exactly grown-up men, who should have sense enough to take care of themselves, but are mostly young men in their teens. Friday night this man hung around Cornelia and was unable even to wobble. They were some of these mere boys dead drunk, pretty well dead to the world.

The dance was being properly conducted, and no one who was under the influence of liquor was inside the dance pavilion. We do not wish to be misunderstood, for the dance cannot be blamed for the drinking."

This man, describing his visit Friday night, said: "When I got out of the car Friday night the smell of liquor was as plain as in the old-time saloon. I could see the boys who had all they could handle. A car, with a Hardin county number, was pointed out by one of the boys as the car whose occupants had sold him some of the booze. The price was $2 per pint.

The bootleggers do not actually take the liquor in their cars. They generally hide it out and spread the word that it can be had. Then the buyer and seller fade away and it's a pretty hard matter to locate them.

Conditions are said to be worse than any time in Iowa's history. You can buy booze in any quantity in Mason City and Fort Dodge "leggers" sell the stuff in wholesale lots.

The same man who visited Cornelia Friday night was in Council Bluffs and Omaha a short time ago. There, he says, conditions are worse than here. Negroes, who, a year or so ago were depending on charity turned to bootlegging and are now riding in expensive motor cars. The profits are enormous. And if you will read the court proceedings you will generally find that the penalty for selling is a fine, which can be made back in a week's selling.

Ivor Iverson, federal prohibition officer for the Fort Dodge territory, recently told the News that while the traffic was enormous, it was hard to get the co-operation from the public. Most folks know it is being sold, but do not want to become involved in the prosecution or arrest of leggers. Tuesday a raid in the vicinity of Carrol unearthed $50,000 of the illicit booze. Iverson and a state agent staged the raid. They got big stills and little stills, operating full blast.

In the old days of the saloon you would see men of mature ages drunk. Now the men seem to leave it alone, but the young men and boys are getting drunk. Unless conditions change, it is very likely the sentiment for licensed beer and wines will force a change in the present prohibitory.—News.

NO HARD TIMES

Algona Advance: Spencer had a big Ford day week before last, and A. H. Avery, who used to conduct Algona's Independent chautauqua was the speaker of the day. A synopsis of Mr. Avery's remarks follows:

My fellow poverty-stricken citizens of Iowa: As I look into your faces, with your sunken eyes and hollowed cheeks, living in this garden spot of the world, I wonder what ails us. Here in Iowa we have automobiles enough to make a procession 25,000 miles long, and we can load every man, woman and child in the state for one great joy ride, and still have enough left to reach from Spencer to Chicago. And yet to hear the people bellyaching you would think we were just two jumps ahead of the sheriff. What ails us?

We have just emerged from the greatest war the world has ever known which cost the people of the world 40 billions of dollars. We can't comprehend that sum. If old Noah, born 7,000 years ago, had started counting the minute he was born at the rate of 100 dollars a minute, working eight hours a day, 300 days a year, he'd still have to live 3,000 years to count it out.

Hard Times? Ask Adam, Eve

The other night I sat down to a meal here in Iowa that King Soloman in all his glory never ate. He didn't know what corn or Irish potatoes were for. They didn't have them until America was discovered. He didn't have the kind of bread that I had—and yet we think that we're having hard times! I can remember as a boy out on the farm when, many a time I sat down to fried pumpkin and molasses. I wonder if any of you men, women and children have sat down to a meal like that since the war.

Hard times! Ask some of these old grayheads what hard times are. What did Adam and Eve have in the Garden of Eden to what we have? They never had a telephone, a moving picture show, an automobile—they never even enjoyed a ride in a Ford.

Luxuries Cost Fortune

If we had all the money we have spent in Iowa since January, 1920, for automobiles, and two hundred million squandered for blue sky, we'd be quite comfortable, thank you. Our desires have changed since the days of Adam and Eve. We have bought a lot of things we didn't have to have, and we have gone into debt at high war prices. Now we are paying and we are having a hard time.

Everything in this world came into existance to satisfy some human desire. I can remember when there were livery stables in every town. They satisfied the human desire. Now I don't know where there is one. Why? Because they have ceased to satisfy human desire and all things failing to satisfy human desire cease to exist.

Defends School Expense

I cannot let this opportunity pass without entering a protest against the propaganda going around against the school taxes. Why, they say, Spencer spent $75,000 last year for her schools! That is just $75 for each boy and girl who was in school. But what can you hire a maid for? Then figure what a small cost the schools were. For nine months 1,000 boys and girls were educated at a cost of only $75 per head.

When I can't pay my school taxes I'll sell my Ford, and pay that into the taxes to educate the boys and girls. I'll go without gasoline and oil, and the accessories that go with it. When you hear someone yelling about the cst of education, ask him how much he is paying to run an automobile. That which is spent in education is stored up, preserved, safeguarded for the future maintenance of our nation. That which is spent for automobiles is gone.

No Collections For Iowa

I haven't heard yet of any collections being taken in Russia, Mexico, or any other place to help the starving people of Northwest Iowa. The farmer of Northwest Iowa, that garden spot of the world, who sticks to the farm for the next ten years and limits some what the purchases of things for which he can't pay, will be on easy street.

Some years ago I prohesied, in one of my speeches in the opera house that Clay county land would sell for $500 an acre. The farmers and other friends joshed me about it but we all know it went above that mark. I want to prophesy now that in ten years more we will again for $500 an acre right here in Clay County.

Always On the Job

We are still here selling more goods than ever. This week we are selling 1 gallon cans of fruit—just the thing for haying and harvesting, and cheaper than you can can them. Peaches, Apricots, Pineapples and Logan berries. They are good.

Do you know all woolen goods are higher—also cotton goods. The mills have shut down, waiting for prices to stabilize. You know that means higher prices. We are not going to raise while our present stock lasts, but you better hurry and get in as it is going to raise.

Remember hogs went to $11 last week. (We don't eat meat at our home.) but shoes are one-half times lower than two years ago. Come in and see these patent leather Oxfords and canvas slippers—just the thing for hot weather.

We pay higest prices for all produce—cash or trade.

Don't forget Opal coffee, 3 lbs for $1. A good standard corn at 95c per dozen cans. All kinds of fruit. FRESH CHERRIES THIS WEEK.

Bring in your eggs.

Look over our stock—WE WILL NOT BE UNDERSOLD.

Yours for a square deal,

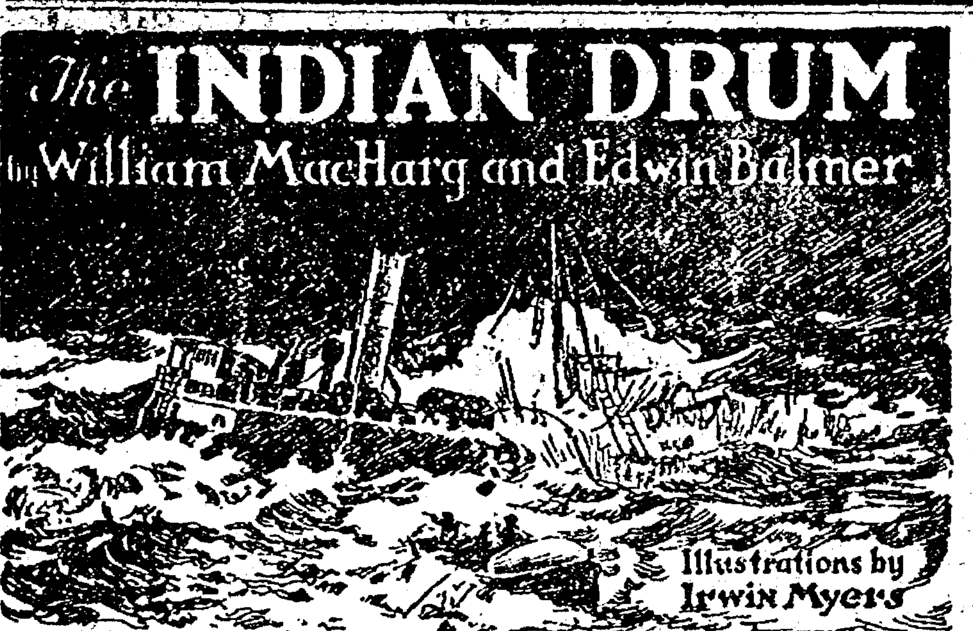
The INDIAN DRUM

by William MacHarg and Edwin Balmer



Copyright by Edwin Balmer

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes his employer is dead. He also tells him the legend of the Indian Drum, which according to old superstition beats once for every life lost on the Great Lakes. Twenty years before, the great freighter Miwaka had gone down with twenty-five on board, but the Drum had sounded for only twenty-four, leaving the inference that one person had been saved, since it was general belief that the drum never erred. Pursuing a stranger who had made a disturbance at his house, Alan is slugged and rendered unconscious.

CHAPTER IX.—Conrad recovers, and the affair remains a mystery.

CHAPTER X.—Alan learns from Wassaquam that it was Corvet's habit to keep the sum of $1,000 in the house, apparently to meet the demands of a certain "Luke," who appeared periodically. In the absence of Wassaquam, "Luke" comes to the house demanding to see Corvet. He is evidently in a dying condition, due to alcohol and exposure. Conrad tries without avail to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. The man dies. Wassaquam gives Conrad a paper on which is a list of names.

CHAPTER XI.—From the document Alan thinks he may have a clue to the mystery surrounding Corvet's life and disappearance. He leaves Chicago to visit Lake Michigan ports in search of the persons whose names were on the list.

CHAPTER XII.—Constance receives a package wrapped in a muffler which she recognizes Corvet was wearing on the day he went away. It contains a few coins, a watch, and woman's wedding ring. She believes them to have been the property of Corvet, and accepts them as a proof of his death. Spearman urges Constance to marry him. She consents, but refuses his demand for an immediate ceremony.

He had found that no one of the persons whom he saw had known Benjamin Corvet personally; many of them did not know him at all, the others knew him only as a name. But, when Alan proceeded, always there was one connotation with each of the original names; always one circumstance bound all together. When he had established that circumstance as influencing the fortunes of the first two on his lists, he had said to himself, as the blood pricked queerly under the skin, that the fact might be a mere coincidence. When he established it also as affecting the fate of the third and of the fourth and of the fifth, such explanation no longer sufficed; and he found it in common to all fourteen, sometimes as the deciding factor of their fate, sometimes as only slightly affecting them, but always it was there.

In how many different ways, in what strange, diverse manifestations that single circumstance had spread to these people whom Alan had interviewed! No two of them had been affected alike, he reckoned, as he went over his notes of them. Now he was going to trace those consequences to another. To what sort of place would it bring him today and what would he find there? He knew only that it would be quite distinct from the rest.

The driver turned aside from the road across a cleared field where ruts showed the passing of many previous vehicles; crossing this, they entered the woods. Little fires for cooking burned all about them, and nearer were parked an immense number of farm wagons and buggies, with horses unharnessed and munching grain. Alan's guide found a place among these for his automobile, and they got out and went forward on foot. All about them, seated upon the moss or walking about, were Indians, family groups among which children played.

Alan saw among these looking on, the bright dresses and sport coats of summer visitors who had come to watch. The figure of a girl among these caught his attention, and he started; then swiftly he told himself that it was only his thinking of Constance Sherrill that made him believe this was she. But now she had seen him; she paled, then as quickly flushed, and leaving the group she had been with, came toward him.

He had no choice now whether he would avoid her or not; and his happiness at seeing her held him stupid, watching her. Her eyes were very bright and with something more than friendly greeting; there was happiness in them too. His throat shut together as he recognized this, and his hand closed warmly over the small, trembling hand which she put out to him. All his conscious thought was lost for the moment in the mere realization of her presence; he stood, holding her hand, oblivious that there were people looking; she too seemed careless of that. Then she whitened again and withdrew her hand; she seemed slightly confused. He was confused as well; it was not like this that he had meant to greet her; he caught himself together.

Cap in hand, he stood beside her, trying to look and to feel as any ordinary acquaintance of hers would have looked.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Owner of the Watch.

"So they got word to you!" Constance exclaimed; she seemed still confused. "Oh, no—of course they couldn't have done that! They've hardly got my letter yet."

"Your letter?" Alan asked.

"I wrote to Blue Rapids," she explained. "Some things came—they were sent to me. Some things of Uncle Benny's which were meant for you instead of me."

"You mean you've heard from him?"

"No—not that."

"What things, Miss Sherrill?"

"A watch of his and some coins and —a ring." She did not explain the significance of those things, and he could not tell from her mere enumeration of them and without seeing them that they furnished proof that his father was dead. She could not inform him of that, she felt, just here and now.

"I'll tell you about that later. You—you were coming to Harbor Point to see us?"

He colored. "I'm afraid not. I got as near as this to you because there is a man—an Indian—I have to see."

"An Indian! What is his name? You see, I know quite a lot of them."

"Jo Papo."

She shook her head. "No; I don't know him."

She found a spot where the moss was covered with dry pine needles and sat down upon the ground.

"Sit down," she invited; "I want you to tell me what you have been doing."

"I've been on the boats." He dropped down upon the moss beside her. "Until yesterday I was a not very highly honored member of the crew of the package freighter Oscoda; I left her at Frankfort and came up here."

"Is Wassaquam with you?"

"He wasn't on the Oscoda; but he was with me at first. Now, I believe, he has gone back to his own people—to Middle Village."

"You mean you've been looking for Mr. Corvet in that way?"

"Not exactly that." He hesitated; but he could see no reason for not telling what he had been doing. He had not so much hidden from her and her father what he had found in Benjamin Corvet's house; rather, he had refrained from mentioning it in his notes to them when he left Chicago because he had thought that the lists would lead to an immediate explanation; they had not led to that, but only to a suggestion, indefinite yet. He had known that, if his search finally developed nothing more than it had, he must at last consult Sherrill and get Sherrill's aid.

"We found some writing, Miss Sherrill," he said, "in the house on Astor street that night after Luke came."

"What writing?"

He took the lists from his pocket and showed them to her. She separated and looked through the sheets and read the names written in the same hand that had written the directions upon the slip of paper that came to her four days before, with the things from Uncle Benny's pockets.

"My father had kept these very secretly," he explained. "He had them hidden. Wassaquam knew where they were, and that night after Luke was dead and you had gone home, he gave them to me."

"After I had gone home? Henry went back to see you that night; he had said he was going back, and afterward I asked him, and he told me he had seen you again. Did you show him these?"

"He saw them—yes."

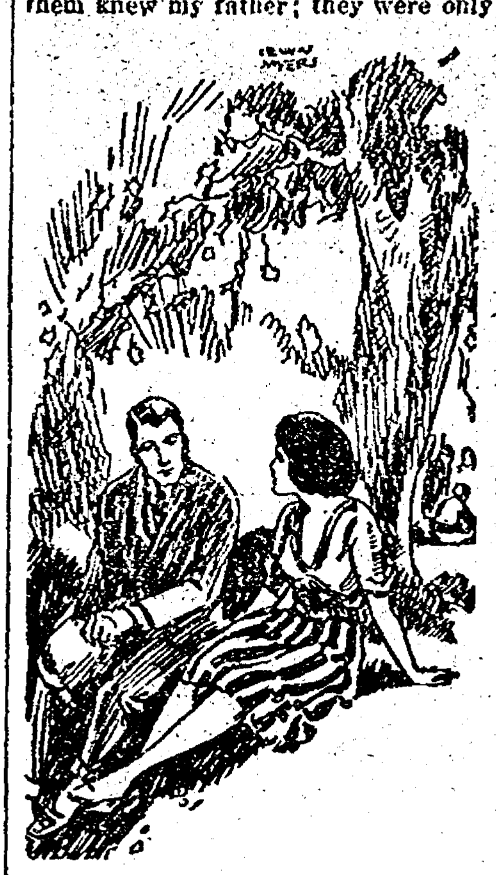
"He was there when Wassaquam showed you where they were?"

"Yes."

A little line deepened between her brows, and she sat thoughtful.

"So you have been going about seeing these people," she said. "What have you found out?"

"Nothing definite at all. None of them knew my father; they were only



"Nothing Definite At All. None of Them Knew My Father."

amazed to find that anyone in Chicago had known their names."

In her feeling for him, she had laid her hand upon his arm; now her fingers tightened to sudden tenseness. "What do you mean?" she asked.

"Oh, it is not definite yet—not clear!" She felt the bitterness in his tone. "They have not any of them been able to make it wholly clear to me. It is like a record that has been—blurred. These original names must have been written down by my father many years ago—many, most of those people, I think—are dead; some are nearly forgotten. The only thing that is fully plain is that in every case my inquiries have led me to those who have lost one, and sometimes more than one relative upon the lakes."

Constance thrilled to a vague horror; it was not anything to which she could give definite reason. His tone quite as much as what he said was its cause. His experience plainly had been forcing him to bitterness against his father; and he did not know with certainty yet that his father was dead.

"You'll lunch with us, of course," she said to Alan, "and then go back with us to Harbor Point. It's a day's journey around the two bays; but we've a boat here."

He assented, and they went down to the water where the white and brown power yacht, with long, graceful lines, lay somnolently in the sunlight. A little boat took them out over the shimmering, smooth surface to the ship; swells from a faraway freighter swept under the beautiful, burnished craft, causing it to roll lazily as they boarded it. A party of nearly a dozen men and girls with an older woman chaperoning them, lounged under the shade of an awning over the after deck. They greeted her gaily and looked curiously at Alan as she introduced him.

"Have you worked on any of our boats?" she asked him, after luncheon had been finished, and the anchor of the ship had been raised.

A queer expression came upon his face. "I've thought it best not to do that, Miss Sherrill," he replied.

She did not know why the next moment she should think of Henry.

The yacht was pushing swiftly, smoothly, with hardly a hum from its motors, north along the shore. He watched intently the rolling, wooded hills and the ragged little bays and inlets. His work and his investigatings had not brought him to the neighborhood before, but she found that she did not have to name the places to him; he knew them from the charts.

"Grand Traverse light," he said to her as a white tower showed upon their left. Then, leaving the shore, they pushed out across the wide mouth of the larger bay toward Little Traverse. He grew more silent as they approached it.

"It is up there, isn't it," he asked, pointing, "that they hear the Drum?"

"Yes; how did you know the place?"

"I don't know it exactly; I want you to show me."

She pointed out to him the copse, dark, primeval, blue in its contrast with the lighter green of the trees about it and the glistening white of the shingle and of the more distant sand bluffs. He leaned forward, staring at it, until the changed course of the yacht, as it swung about toward the entrance to the bay, obscured it.

"Seeing the ships made me feel that I belonged here on the lakes," he reminded her. "I have felt something—not recognition exactly, but something that was like the beginning of recognition—many times this summer when I saw certain places. It's like one of those dreams, you know, in which you are conscious of having had the same dream before. I feel that I ought to know this place."

They landed only a few hundred yards from the cottage. After bidding good-by to her friends, they went up to it together through the trees. There was a small sun room, rather shut off from the rest of the house, to which she led him. Leaving him there, she ran upstairs to get the things.

She halted an instant beside the door, with the box in her hands, before she went back to him, thinking how to prepare him against the significance of these relics of his father. She need not prepare him against the mere fact of his father's death; he had been beginning to believe that already; but these things must have far more meaning for him than merely that. She went in and put the box down upon the card table.

"The muffler in the box was your father's," she told him. "He had it on the day he disappeared. The other things," her voice choked a little, "are the things he must have had in his pockets. They've been lying in water and sand—"

He gazed at her. "I understand," he said after an instant. "You mean that they prove his death."

She assented gently, without speaking. As he approached the box, she drew back from it and slipped away into the next room. She walked up and down there, pressing her hands together. He must be looking at the things now, unrolling the muffler. . . . What would he be feeling as he saw them? Would he be glad, with that same gladness which had mingled with her own sorrow over Uncle Benny, that his father was gone—gone from his guilt and his fear and his disgrace? Or would he resent that death which thus left everything unexplained to him? He would be looking at the ring. That, at least, must bring more joy than grief to him. He would recognize that it must be his mother's wedding ring; if it told him that his mother must be dead, it would tell him that she had been married, or had believed that she was married!

Suddenly she heard him calling her. "Miss Sherrill!" his voice had a sharp thrill of excitement.

She hurried toward the sun room. She could see him through the doorway, bending over the card table with the things spread out upon its top in front of him.

"Yes."

He straightened; he was very pale. "Would coins that my father had in his pocket all have been more than twenty years old?"

She ran and bent beside him over the coins. "Twenty years!" she repeated. She was making out the dates of the coins now herself; the markings were eroded, nearly gone in some instances, but in every case enough remained to make plain the date. "Eighteen-ninety — 1894 — 1889," she made them out. Her voice hushed queerly. "What does it mean?" she whispered.

He turned over and re-examined the articles with hands suddenly steadying. "There are two sets of things here," he concluded. "The muffler and paper of directions—they belonged to my father. The other things—it isn't six months or less than six months that they've lain in sand and water to become worn like this; it's twenty years. My father can't have had these things; they were somewhere else, or some one else had them. He wrote his directions to that person—after June twelfth, he said, so it was before June twelfth he wrote it; but we can't tell how long before. It might have been in February, when he disappeared; it might have been any time after that. But if the directions were written so long ago, why weren't the things sent to you before this? Didn't the person have the things then? Did we have to wait to get them? Or—was it the instructions to send them that he didn't have? Or, if he had the instructions, was he waiting to receive word when they were to be sent? You thought these things proved my father was dead. I think they prove he is alive! Oh, we must think this out!"

He paced up and down the room; she sank into a chair, watching him. "The first thing that we must do," he said suddenly, "is to find out about the watch. What is the 'phone number of the telegraph office?"

She told him, and he went out to the telephone; she sprang up to follow him, but checked herself and merely waited until he came back.

"I've wired to Buffalo," he announced. "The Merchants' exchange, if it is still in existence, must have a record of the presentation of the watch."

"Then you'll stay here with us until an answer comes?"

"If we get a reply by tomorrow morning; I'll wait till then. If not, I'll ask you to forward it to me. I must see about the trains and get back to Frankfort. I can cross by boat from there to Manitowoc—that will be quickest. We must begin there, by trying to find out who sent the package."

She helped him put the muffler and the other articles into the box; she noticed that the wedding ring was no longer with them. He had taken that, then; it had meant to him all that she had known it must mean. . . .

In the morning she was up very early; but Alan, the servants told her, had risen before she had and had gone out. The morning, after the cool northern night, was chill. She slipped a sweater on and went out on the veranda, looking about for him. An iridescent haze shrouded the hills and the bay; in it she heard a ship's bell strike twice; then another struck twice—then another—and another—and another. The haze thinned as the sun grew warmer, showing the placid water of the bay on which the ships stood double. She saw Alan returning, and knowing from the direction from which he came that he must have been to the telegraph office, she ran to meet him.

"Was there an answer?" she inquired eagerly.

He took a yellow telegraph sheet from his pocket and held it for her to read.

"Watch presented Captain Caleb Stafford, master of propeller freighter Marvin Halch for rescue of crew and passengers of sinking steamer Winnebago off Long point, Lake Erie."

She was breathing quickly in her excitement. "Caleb Stafford!" she exclaimed. "Why, that was Captain Stafford of Stafford and Ramsdell! They owned the Miwaka!"

"Yes," Alan said.

A great change had come over him since last night; he was under emotion so strong that he seemed scarcely to dare speak lest it master him—a leaping, exultant impulse it was, which he fought to keep down.

"What is it, Alan?" she asked. "What is it about the Miwaka? You said you'd found some reference to it in Uncle Benny's house. What was it? What did you find there?"

"The man—" Alan swallowed and steadied himself and repeated—"the man I met in the house that night mentioned it. He seemed to think I was a ghost that had haunted Mr. Corvet—the ghost from the Miwaka; at least he shouted out to me that I couldn't save the Miwaka!"

"Save the Miwaka! What do you mean, Alan? The Miwaka was lost with all her people—officers and crew—no one knows how or where!"

"Save the Miwaka! What Do You Mean, Alan?"

"All except the one for whom the Drum didn't beat!"

"What's that?" Blood pricked in her cheeks. "What do you mean, Alan?"

"I don't know yet; but I think I'll soon find out."

"No; you can tell me more now, Alan. Surely you can. I must know. I have the right to know. Yesterday, even before you found out about this, you knew things you weren't telling me—things about the people you'd been seeing. They'd all lost people on the lakes, you said; but you found out more than that."

"They'd all lost people on the Miwaka!" he said. "All who could tell me where their people were lost; a few were like Jo Papo we saw yesterday, who knew only the year his father was lost; but the time always was the time that the Miwaka disappeared!"

"Disappeared!" she repeated. Her veins were pricking cold. What did he know, what could any one know of the Miwaka, the ship of which nothing ever was heard except the beating of the Indian Drum? She tried to make him say more; but he looked away now down to the lake.

"The Chippewa must have come in early this morning," he said. "She's lying in the harbor; I saw her on my way to the telegraph office. If Mr. Spearman has come back with her, tell him I'm sorry I can't wait to see him."

"When are you going?"

"Now."

She offered to drive him to Petoskey, but he already had arranged for a man to take him to the train.

She went to her room after he was gone and spread out again on her bed the watch—now the watch of Captain Stafford of the Miwaka—with the knife and coins of more than twenty years ago which came with it. The meaning of them now was all changed; she felt that; but what the new meaning might be could not yet come to her. Something of it had come to Alan; that, undoubtedly, was what had so greatly stirred him; but she could not yet reassemble her ideas. Yet a few facts had become plain.

A maid came to say that Mr. Spearman had come up from his boat for breakfast with her and was downstairs. She went down to find Henry lounging in one of the great wicker chairs in the living room. He arose and came toward her quickly; but she halted before he could seize her.

"What's wrong, dear?"

"Alan Conrad has been here, Henry."

"He has? How was that?"

She told him while he watched her intently. "He wired to Buffalo about the watch. He got a reply which he brought to me half an hour ago."

"Yes?"

"The watch belonged to Captain Stafford who was lost with the Miwaka, Henry."

He made no reply; but waited.

"You may not have known that it was his; I mean, you may not have known that it was he who rescued the people of the Winnebago, but you must have known that Uncle Benny didn't."

"Yes; I knew that, Connie," he answered evenly.

"Then why did you let me think the watch was his and that he must be—dead?"

"That's all's the matter? You had thought he was dead. I believed it was better for you—for every one—to believe that."

She drew a little away from him, with hands clasped behind her back, gazing intently at him. "There was some writing found in Uncle Benny's house in Astor street—a list of names of relatives of people who had lost their lives upon the lake. Wassaquam knew where those things were. Alan says they were given to him in your presence. Why didn't you tell me about that?"

He straightened as if with anger. "Why should I? Because he thought that I should? What did he tell you about those lists?"

"Nothing—except that his father had kept them very secretly; but he's found out they were names of people who had relatives on the Miwaka!"

"What?"

Recalling how her blood had run when Alan had told her that, Henry's whiteness and the following suffusion of his face did not surprise her.

"I told that fellow long ago not to start stirring these matters up about Ben Corvet, and particularly I told him that he was not to bring any of it to you. It's not—a thing that a man like Ben covered up for twenty years till it drove him crazy is sure not to be a thing for a girl to know. Let it alone, I tell you."

She stood flushed and perplexed, gazing at him. She never had seen him under stronger emotion.

"You misunderstood me once, Connie!" he appealed. "You'll understand me now!"

She had been thinking about that injustice she had done him in her thought—about his chivalry to his partner and former benefactor, when Uncle Benny was still keeping his place among men. Was Henry now moved, in a way which she could not understand, by some other obligation to the man who long ago had aided him? Had Henry hazarded more than he had told her of the nature of the thing hidden which, if she could guess it, would justify what he said?

She had made Alan promise to write her, if he was not to return, regarding what he learned; and a letter came to her on the fourth day from him in Manitowoc. The post office employees had no recollection, he said, of the person who had mailed the package; it simply had been dropped by some one into the receptacle for mailing packages of that sort. Alan, however, was continuing his inquiries.

She wrote to him in reply; in lack of anything more important to tell him, she related some of her activities and inquired about his. After she had written him thus twice, he replied, describing his life on the boats pleasantly and humorously; then, though she immediately replied, she did not hear from him again.

A new idea had seized Constance. Captain Caleb Stafford was named among the lost, of course; with him had perished his son, a boy of three. That was all that was said, and all that was to be learned of him, the boy.

Alan had been three then. This was wild, crazy speculation. The ship was lost with all hands; only the Drum, believed in by the superstitious and the most ignorant, denied that. The Drum said that one soul had been saved. How could a child of three have been saved when strong men, to the last one, had perished? And, if he had been saved, he was Stafford's son. Why should Uncle Benny have sent him away and cared for him and then sent for him and, himself disappearing, leave all he had to—Stafford's son?

Or was he Stafford's son? Her thought went back to the things which had been sent—the things from a man's pockets with a wedding ring among them. She had believed that the ring cleared the mother's name; might it in reality only more involve it? Why had it come back like this to the man by whom, perhaps, it had been given? Henry's words came again and again to Constance: "It's a queer concern you've got for Ben. Leave it alone, I tell you!" He knew then something about Uncle Benny which might have brought on some terrible thing which Henry did not know but might guess? Constance went weak within. Uncle Benny's wife had left him, she remembered. Was it better, after all, to "leave it alone?"

A telegraph envelope addressed to her father was on the table in the hall. A servant told her the message had come an hour before, and that he had telephoned to Mr. Sherrill's office, but Mr. Sherrill was not in. There was no reason for her thinking that the message might be from Alan except his presence in her thoughts, but she went at once to the telephone and called her father. He was in now, and he directed her to open the message and read it to him.

"Have some one," she read aloud; she choked in her excitement at what came next—"Have some one who knew Mr. Corvet well enough to recognize him, even if greatly changed, meet Carferry Number 25 Manitowoc Wednesday this week. Alan Conrad."

Her heart was beating fast. "Are you there?" she said into the phone.

"Yes."

"Whom shall you send?"

There was an instant's silence. "I shall go myself," her father said.

She hung up the receiver. Had Alan found Uncle Benny? He had found, apparently, some one whose resemblance to the picture she had showed him was marked enough to make him believe that person might be Benjamin Corvet; or he had heard of some one who, from the account he had received, he thought might be. She read again the words of the telegram . . . "even if greatly changed," and she felt startling and terrifying warning in that phrase.

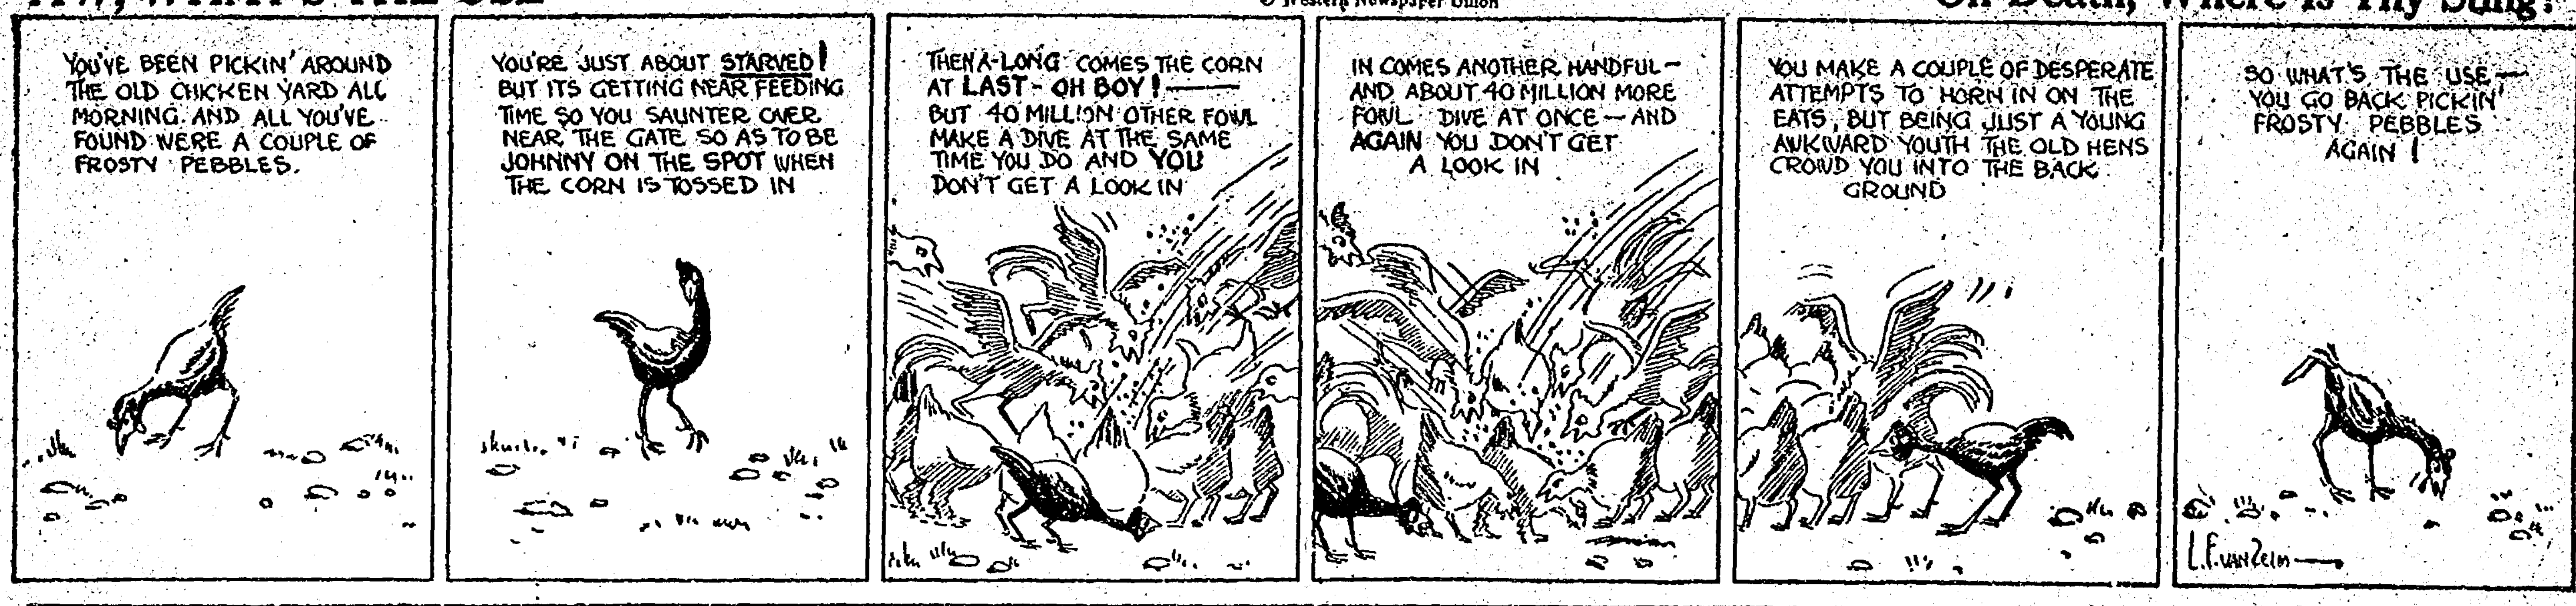
Oh Death, Where Is Thy Sting!



YOU'VE BEEN PICKIN' AROUND THE OLD CHICKEN YARD ALL MORNING AND ALL YOU'VE FOUND WERE A COUPLE OF FROSTY PEBBLES.
YOU'RE JUST ABOUT STARVED! BUT ITS GETTING NEAR FEEDING TIME SO YOU SAUNTER OVER NEAR THE GATE SO AS TO BE JOHNNY ON THE SPOT WHEN THE CORN IS TOSSED IN
THEN A-LONG COMES THE CORN AT LAST - OH BOY! —— BUT 40 MILLION OTHER FOWL MAKE A DIVE AT THE SAME TIME YOU DO AND YOU DON'T GET A LOOK IN
IN COMES ANOTHER HANDFUL - AND ABOUT 40 MILLION MORE FOWL DIVE AT ONCE — AND AGAIN YOU DON'T GET A LOOK IN
YOU MAKE A COUPLE OF DESPERATE ATTEMPTS TO HORN IN ON THE EATS, BUT BEING JUST A YOUNG AWKWARD YOUTH THE OLD HENS CROWD YOU INTO THE BACK GROUND
SO WHAT'S THE USE — YOU GO BACK PICKIN' FROSTY PEBBLES AGAIN!

IT CAN BE DONE

Somebody said that it couldn't be done,
But he with a chuckle replied
That maybe it couldn't, but he'd not be one
To say until he had tried—
So he buckled right in with a bit of a grin
On his face—if he worried he hid it
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done, and he did it.

Somebody scoffed—"Oh, you'll never do that,
At least no one has ever done it."
But he took off his coat and took off his hat,
And the first thing we knew he'd begun it—
With a bit a of a grin and a lift of his chin,
Without any doubting or quitit,
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done, and he did it.

There are thousands to tell you it can not be done,
There are thousands to prophesy failure—
There are thousands to point
The dangers that wait to assail you.
But just buckle in with a bit of a grin,
Take off your coat and go to it—
Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing,
That can not be done, and you'll do it.

VOL. 3 BELMOND, IOWA, THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1922 NO. 34

TYRRELL PARK DAY THURSDAY JULY 20TH

Short Review Of Splendid Address

Subject In Which Every Citizen Should Take Intelligent Interest

LARGE AUDIENCE ATTEND

The lecture by Prof. Shimek, ot Iowa City, on the subject "Conservation of Our Natural Scenery" was enjoyed by a large audience of Community Club members.

Iowa has taken the lead in her attempt to preserve thenatural beauty spots and many other states are besieging us with questions for plans to carry on a similar work.

Prof. Shimek linked his subject with Citizenship and gave an ideal picture of the true citizen who realized both his rights and his obligations and the rights of his neighbors in moral and sentimental way as well as legally.

A few quotations from the lecture are given below upon topics which are worthy the consideration oi every serious-minded citizen.

"We are too prone to measure things by what we call a practical standard and ask, 'Can we eat it? or 'How much is it worth?' Many things which cannot be estimated by this standard are "practical."

"We have paid little attention to ethical teaching and the cultivation of reverence for the beautiful and have driven into minds of our children and the foreigner coming to us, the fact that America is a great country to make money—the land of material advancement in wealth, position, and achievement.

"When we see the man strutting about boasting of his rights as a free American citizen, we wonder to what entent he is thoughtful of the duties and responsibilities ot that citizenship."

"Though the citizen may claim he has a right to destroy the forests, undergrowth and flowers, if he will consider the question from the unselfish point of view, he will form a very different conclusion. The state should own or control every acre of land bordering the streams and the natural timber and shrubs should be preserved just as given us by God. Much of this land is unfit for agricultural purposes, and, if cleared of timber, would be washed away by the streams, not even a mortgage being able to hold the soil in place."

"Teach little children the love of flowers which does not mean the picking of them but an appreciation of their marvelous beaty of form and color in their natural setting."

"The spirit of destructiveness is an evil, and when allowed to go unrestrained in the little child, must bear the fruit of destructiveness in the spirit of the man."

"A child who learns to be kind and sympathetic to the bird, the creeping worm, the nodding flower, will learn kindness and sympathy for the human being."

Professor Shimek called his address a sermon and he simply appealed to his audience for a higher standard of living, for a greater reverence for God's creation and for a more complete surrender of the interests of the individual to the cause of general good. He deplored the graft that is prevalent today and declared that selfishness was at the bottom of all the problems that are demanding a solution at the present time.

One unfortunate thing about the effect of such a wholesome address is the habit of many of listening to the words of caution and advice with approval and then thoughlessly committing the same wrongs that they had done before.

Will we continue to make that cattle path across our neighbor's lawn? Will we continue to view the devastation of wild flowers and shrubs with indifference.

Prof. Shimek concluded his talk with an earnest plea to every women voter to exercise her right in an intelligent way, to be a good citizen and to be a good partisan if the two did not conflict.

COMMUNITY CLUB NOTES

The regular meeting of the Community Club was held in the library parlors last Friday with a very large attendance.

Thursday, July 20, was the date decided upon for the combined celebration of Tyrrell Park Day and the Annual Club Picnic.

The following committees were appointed to make the necessary plans for the celebration:

Executive, Mrs. J. J. Flynn, Mrs. E. F. Bailey, Mrs. W. C. Tyrrell, Miss Mary Barry, Mrs. C. Jennings, Mrs. H. L. Gowdy, Miss Maye Tracy, and Mrs. Cecil Jones.

Program, Mrs. M. C. Barry, Mrs. Howard Moore, and Mrs. Herman Schultz.

The committee which has charge of the funds from the sale of Red Cross seals reported that a part of the money had been used to purchase a tent for a tubercular patient. The County Nurse had been called to take charge of the case and had rendered very valucable services.

The Club voted to purchase a new Congoleum rug for the Rest Room.

Mrs. Foster was given a rising vote of thanks for the ice cream which was donated by the Foster Cafe.

A motion was carried to revise the constitution and by-laws.

THE AMERICAN'S CREED

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable, established upon the principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it; to support its constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its flag; and to defend it against all enemies,

William Tyler Page.

On April 3, 1918, at a joint meeting of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, this creed, which had won the $1,000 prize, was formally accepted in the name of the United States Government.

At a recent meeting of the Community Club of Belmond the above creed was adopted and will be repeated in unison by all the members at the beginning of each meeting.

ALEXANDER FREE MOVIES

An unusual and highly successful method of arousing community interest is the free movies being staged by the Alexander Booster Club. Besides being free, the movies are given out of doors, thus adding to the pleasure and comfort of the audience.

At the head of Main street of this village, just outside their city hall is a gentle slope of vacant land. The movie machine is placed inside the city hall and a screen and seats arrnged upon the green slope, making an ideal setting.

Every Saturday night from five to eight hundred people enjoy this little out door theatre.

The funds for carrying on this project are furnished by the Booster Club in which the membership fee is one dollar. This club is composed of the business men and all wide awake citizens who realize the benefit ot be derived from the good will thus created.

The free movie began last summer and has proved a fine stimulus to trade and community pride.

Seven reels are shown at each performance and while the crowds are enjoying the show the merchants are busy filling the orders placed earlier in the evening. In this way, all goods are wrapped and ready when the show closes and the farmer and his whole family go home praising the Alexander merchants for their excellent service and generosity.

STORM SEWER CONTRACT IS $56,000 JOB

The Board of Supervisors let the storm sewer contract last Friday to the Belmond Construction Co., the firm which put in the outlying drains, at a total price of $56,636.03. This bid is for both labor and materials. It was the lowest bid for both material and labor, but a joint bid made by the Belmond Construction Co., for the tile material and the Blackmore & Jensen firm for the labor was approximately $2,600 lower than the Belmond firm's bid for the complete job.

The city council and mayor of Clarion filed a written statement with the Board of Supervisors, recommending that the Belmond firm's bid be accepted.

The council feels that the company is on the ground and can complete the job more satisfactorily and possibly with as small a total expense as the job could be completed working thru the joint contract.—News.

BASE BALL SUNDAY

Sunday July 16th
Garner vs. Belmond

Belmond is going after Garner's scalp the second time, having won by a score of 4 to 3 against them on July 4th. Becker, the State University star, will be on the mound for Garner. Belmond has started a fine string of victories and is sure to add another trophy at the Sunday July 16th game.

PICNIC FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Special attention is called to the announcement in the Farm Bureau Notes to a county wide picnic for all boys and girls. This picnic is planned, not only for members of boys and girls clubs, but for all youngsters who enjoy a good time.

The place will probably be, Goldielf Park and the date is Thursday, July 27th.

HEAVY RAIN THURSDAY SAVES SUGAR BEETS

All Crops Benefitted By Million Dollar Rain

Belmond and the adjacent territory was visited by a heavy rain last Thursday, the first we have had for many weeks, and as a result, the crops are looking up and the pastures which had completely dried up, are coming back.

The sugar beets were reached in the nick of time. They had not suffered much from the drought so far, but a few more days of dry weather and would have been seriously damaged. With this rain, however, they are in fine shape and a bumper yield is expected.

This will be most welcome news to Belmond and vicinity for it means that our sugar factory will have a heavy tonnoge of beets for the coming campaign.

The corn was doing splendidly in spite of the long stretch of dry weather and this rain placed it in tip-top shape. You could almost see it grow next day. This part of the country should have a big corn crop —and the price is going up.

Oats are being cut and are a much better yield than was anticipated. S. A. Bohning showed us some the other day that were very well filled out and many other farmers report a better crop than they had thought.

Hay, of course, was short, but barley and wheat are good and the rain will make a good potatoe crop as well as doing a world of good to practically all the garden stuff. It was a million dollar rain truly enough, and came just in time.

Everybody is wearing the smile that won't come off and feeling a hundred percent more optimistic and cheerful.

Ames Radio report Friday, gives corn all over the state excellent, clover and timothy good quality but light, rye good. Potatoes over the state reported seriously hurt by draught as whole. Least amount of rain in some parts of state for June in twenty-eight years.

THIEVES ROB CLEANING PLANT

Eagle Grove Eagle: Thieves entered the Eagle Cleaning Plant Sunday night and made way with several hundred dollars worth of clothing. Included in the lot were thirty pairs of men's pants, several coats, ladies' dresses and other garments. Entrance was made thru the rear door and the goods taken were in a wall case, all cleaned and pressed ready for delivery.

No definite clew has been found.

Kenefick's drug store was also entered between eight and nine o'clock Sunday evening. Entrance was made by forcing up a back window and prying off the hasp on a lock from a door which opens into the paint and store room. Mr. Kenefick entered the store himself about nine o'clock and thinks perhaps the thieves heard him coming in and made their get-away. He left the store earlier in the evening and personally locked the door on which the lock was broken.

He thinks the thieves were after dope as he turned down a very urgent request of a strange dope fiend that afternoon. Nothing in the store was taken and nothing molested.

SUGAR BEET SAMPLES

There are several fine samples of sugar beets at the State Bank. Some brought in by J. M. Sampson about July 1 are large and well developed and of ideal type as to shape. These would eventually mature into a beet weighing ten pounds or more.

Fred Alison has a sample of the better type. There is also an example of the beet with sprangle roots which are the result of shallow plowing. This beet when matured would not weigh more than four or five pounds as the body of the beet practically stops growing when these secondary roots appear and the life goes into producing useless sprawling roots.

SMALL FIRE WEDNESDAY MORNING

A small fire which might have resulted in a serious loss, originated in a closet in the second story of the Si Packard restaurant, Wednesday morning about ten o'clock.

The whole inside of the closet partition was burned out before the smoke showed on the outside.

Cato Greisy noticed what seemed to be dust coming down from the ceiling of his store building, and after watching a few minutes, discovered it was smoke.

Upon making investigation in the two buildings, he found clouds of smoke in the second story and sounded the fire alarm. The fire was quickly put out by the fire company and no damage done except the burning of the small partition. No cause can be learned for the blaze as there was not even any electric wiring in the closet where the fire started.

BELMONDERS INITIATED BY O. O. H. AND P.

Mysteries and Stunts Give the Boys Plenty of Thrills

What is said to have been the largest initation ever staged in Mason City was put over Thursday night at the Armory when 488 neophytes were obligated and took the initiation in the Oriental Order of Humility and Perfecton. Many and varied, as well as fearful were the stunts they were called upon to do and one candidate said there was mighty little humility about the degree team, while the only perfection he saw was the instruments of torture used.

A monster banquet in the high school gymnasium followed the work of installing the lodge in the afternoon. There were 603 plates laid for the first table and many were seated after others had finished.

The parade, held in spite of the rain, was enjoyed by a crowd that lined the sidewalks. There were wild men in cages, an elephant and a camel, both of which seemed to have an excellent eye for feminine beauty, neophytes in all sorts of fanciful costumes and a farmer in a somewhat descrepid flivver with a corn sheller in the rear. The manner in which this sheller turned out frankfurters from the old shoes, wrenches and rags fed it was the marvel of the spectators and a source of delight to the number of tramps who consumed the output as fast as they were able.

The festivities at the Armory did not end till nearly 2 o'clock in the morning. The midnight lunch at the Armory served by S. M. Decker, who also served the banquet, came at an apportune time and it is stated spurred both candidates and drill team to reneived efforts.—Globe-Gazette.

A number of Belmond men attended the initiation described above and received the obligation of the O. O. H. and P. They were: F. P. Dibble, Ray Brewer, Lawrence Gealow, T. A. Davenport, Dr. A. W. Russel, Dr. R. G. Brown, Wm. Hembd, J. H. Fetrow, Percy Smith, Mike Luick, and Henry Groen.

BELMOND BOYS HURT WHEN AUTO TRUNS OVER

Early Friday morning when several Belmond boys were driving home from the Creamery Day celebration at Kanawha their Ford roadster turned over when it struck the loose gravel on the road south of that town and the boys were thrown into the bank. Although some of the boys were quite severely hurt there were no serious results.

Dave Finn and Charles Jones were taken to the Judd Hospital where their injuries were examined. The later returned home but Dave Finn remained in the hospital over a week having received a badly twisted neck and several minor injuries.

John Tiara had one bone of his arm fractured near the wrist, being thrown from the car so as to throw his whole weight on his arm.

Clair Schultz, who was another occupant of the car, was not injured.

The boys were certainly very fortunate in escaping so easily but would not care to have a similar experience soon.

FREE CONCERT

The Lakeside Concert Company of St. Paul gave a free concert Monday evening, before a large audience of people who lined both sides of the street. This company was here last spring under the name of Orpheus Orchestra Company. Their concert Monday evening was surely a fine advertisement should they wish to return for a future engagement.

They also gave a free informal concert of sacred music at St. John's Luthern church on Sunday evening.

The members of the company are boys who are earning their way through college by their music and stopped here on their way to their next engagement at Rockwell City.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

The Ladies Aid Society will hold their regular monthly business meeting on Thursday afternoon in the parlors of the church. A social hour will be held after the business session is over.

Next Sunday for a record breaker in attendance and also in every one coming with a well prepared lesson. We are now studying one of the most interesting of the Old Testament characters, let us try and see how much more we can learn about him.

The regular morning worship at 11:00. The young peoples meeting beginning at 7:30 and the evening sermon at 8:15. Our evening services are being well attended and are full of interest. Something new next Sunday night so be sure to be there.

Our annual Sunday School picnic is not far off. Let us plan to make this year the best picnic that we have ever had.

FARM BUREAU MEETING

The women of the Farm Bureau of Belmond and Pleasant townships met in the City Hall last Thursday. Miss Martha Foster, extension work from the Iowa State College at Ames gave a very instructive demonstration on the renovation of women's hat's including the steaming and pressing of velvets and the re-tinting of old flowers.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

During the storm Saturday night A. J. Mayfield, held to the grand jury for laicency of some clothing, from the store of McCarty & Cole, of Eagle Grove, made his escape. He, with other prisoners, had been given the freedom of the corridor during the day and when time came to lock them in their respective cells for the night all were in bed, supposedly. A casual glance at their cots showed them to be occupied, but after the trick had been pulled one of the forms proved to be a dummy —a lot of clothing arranged under the covers to represent a man asleep. With the aid of an ordinary table fork Mayfield had picked the lock in the door leading to the woman's cell above. Here he hid until the noise of the storm permitted him to begin operations. This cell is warmed with a stove when occupied in cold weather, the stove pipe going thru an ordinary steel ceiling and about four inches of cement to the attic above. The prisoner removed the thimble and with his bare hands tore away the cement, which had become rotten and crumbled like so much sand. He was soon in the attic and gained the roof thru a small window and from there to the ground via the gutter spout. His escape was not discovered until the next morning. Mr. Lang had warned the other two prisoners, two Belmond young men, that Mayfield was a bad man and to let him know if he attempted to pull off anything, which they promised to do. As their bunks are only a few feet apart they evidently "forgot their promise. Had the roof of the women's cell been in good repair the prisoner would not have made the escape.

A Milestone In Belmond History

Capt. W. C. Tyrrell Gives A Beautiful Park To Citizens of Belmond

PARK OPENING JULY 20TH

Thursday July 20th, has been the day set for the formal opening of Tyrrell Park and its dedication to the comfort and enjoyment of the citizens of Belmond and surrounding country, and to the wayfarer within our midst.

This beautiful park of natural timber is the gift of one of our former citizens, Capt. W. C. Tyrrell, Sr., of Beaumont, Texas. It consists of a tract of about ten acres located at the corner of Franklin Grove.

Through the co-operation of the Park Committee and the Community Club, the park has recently heen provided with a well, three "dutch" ovens and several rustic benches and tables.

The opening of Tyrrell Park will mark one of the milestones in the history of the development of Belmond. Other dates in her history have marked her advancement in business, educational nd spiritual life. This day will give to all, both young and old, a wonderful playground, which is as necessary to the well-rounded life as business and education. To those who view the park of the Great Gardener with reverence, it will also prove a spiritual blessing, "The groves were God's first temples."

Capt. W. C. Tyrrell, the guest of honor, will be present at the opening of the Park and an invitation is extended to all to be present and meet the donor of this beautiful gift. A special invitation is given to the old settlers who were Mr. Tyrrell's neighbors of former years. An invitation is also extended to the people of surrounding towns, especially Rowan and Clarion, in which places the donor at one time resided. The program will be given in the evening so that everyone will be at liberty to attend.

Capt. W. C. Tyrrell has proved a generous giver. Let us prove to him by a large crowd and a hearty spirit that we can be "generous receivers."

The Community club has arranged to have their annual picnic in connection with the Park opening and the ladies of the Club will look after the comfort and enjoyment of all guests and have charge of the picnic supper which will be served at six o'clock.

Members of the Community Club will be solicited for food. Others are requested to bring dishes and sandwiches for their family and a dish of the following:

Salad, cake, baked beans, or creamed potatoes. Ice cream will be sold by the dish or in cones. A program will be given after the supper.

REPUBLICAN DISTRICT JUDICIAL CONVENTION

S. A. Clock, of Hampton, Iowa, was nominated by the Republican party on Monday, July 10th, at the 11th District Judicial Convention held at Hampton on the 58th ballot. The candidates who were voted upon as successor to R. M. Wright, of Ft. Dodge were Boyd Bryson, of Iowa Falls; S. A. Clock, of Hampton, and Clarence M. Hanson, of Ft. Dodge, Iowa. The final vote on the 58th ballot was 44 for Clock, 30 for Hanson and 12 for Bryson. The Wright county delegation stood 6 for Clock and 5 for Hanson. There were 86 delegates to this convention and it took 44 delegates to make the choice. The convention re-nominated Judges E. M. McCall, H. E. Fry and G. D. Thompson unanimously.

The delegates from Wright county were J. M. Jensen, of Belmond; Lydia Richards, of Clarion; Mrs. A. E. Weber, of Clarion; C. J. Nagle, J. A. Rogers, L. N. Archerd, all of Clarion; Evert McGrath, of Eagle Grove, Oscar Ulstad, of Holmes; J. E. Richardson, of Goldfield, J. H. Abernathy, of Boone township and Hjalmer Jansen, of Norway township.

The Cemetery Aid Society will meet at the home of Mrs. Willard Morse on Friday July 14.

Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Rankins, Miss Mary Gealow and R. A. Rankins, editor of the Independent left Saturday morning for a trip across the country to Caldwell, Kansas. They expect to be gone about two weeks.

Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Russel and family have been enjoying a visit from the formers sister, Miss Ella Russel, who teaches in Austin, Minn. Miss Russell formerly lived in Meservey.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

THE CONSUMER AND THE COAL STRIKE

Many press articles are being circulated through the large press service organizations and other mediums which are truely nothing more nor less than portions of organized propaganda fathered by the owners of the coal industry with the object of making it possible to sell coal at an extortionate price.

Many of our public service institutions and factories are beginning to number the days that they can contnue to operate without replenishing their supply of fuel. Many of them are issuing and causing to be published, articles calling the attention of their patrons to the fact that the securing of coal is becoming daily more difficult. They do not neglect to inform us of the increased costs of fuel, and to call our attention to the fact that it is in some instances causing them financial loss. This looks to us to be nothing but general propaganda, intending to pave the way for future increases in the price of service and product as the heads of these various institutions cannot help but know that the lock out of the coal miners and the consequent cessation of production of coal will not last into the winter months, and there will, in the very nature of things, be an adequate supply of fuel for all who need it.

The coal mining industry, like every other industry or business, is operated primarily for the profit of the owners of the industry. A cessation of production for a period long enough to deplete the reserve supplies built up by the over production of the mines would bring the owners of the mines to the point where there would be no profits rolling in and at that point the strike will end PRONTO. The Lock Out of the miners would not have occured if it had not been a fact that the coal industry of the country is over developed; there are so many mines opened up for production that a surplus supply of coal rapidly accumulates when all are running. There must at times be some let up in production in order to decrease the surplus stocks. This Lockout is just that and no more—A let-up in production to reduce existing stocks. When the stocks are cut to the point where more coal than is above ground is needed, the mines will again start to work, regardless of the wage arrangements which the operators may be compelled to make with their miners—an increase or decrease in miners wages means little to the mine owners, as it is passed on to the consumer—so when it comes to the point where it is to the interests of the operators to resume production, agreements will be made and operations resumed. The over-development of the coal industry will prevent any shortage next winter, as the mines of the country will be able to and will produce, coal faster than it is consumed. It is mined for profit, and when the market is good profits are good; so in our opinion we should not be stamped into buying coal at "Jesse James" prices. We should buy for current use only. The government has set a maximum price upon coal and it cannot cost more ~~than that~~ price whether we buy now or next winter.—Contributed.

The Independent agrees in a large measure with the contributor's ideas as to the available coal supply—it has been worked so often that a change in tactics would be in inovation—but that commerical companies supplying the public with utilities are boosting the coal operator's plans and spreading their propaganda we do not believe. All concerns dealing with the public are not hogs, and such tactics on their part could only do them harm in the end.

If you want fair prices you should support the dealer who gives fair prices. This kind of encouragement is strictly up to you.

RADIO

POSITION AND SIZE OF GRID IMPORTANT

Determine Value of Negative Potential Necessary to Reduce the Plate Current to Zero.

In using a three-electrode vacuum tube in a radio set it is preferable to maintain the grid negative with respect to the filament in order to require the minimum amount of energy in the control of the plate circuit.

The relative position of the grid with respect to the filament and the plate and the size of the mesh of the grid, determine the value of E. E is the negative potential which must be applied to the grid in order to reduce the plate current to zero. The value of F, which is the positive grid potential that will cause the maximum or saturation current to flow in the plate circuit, is also determined by the relative position of the grid with respect to the filament and plate. If the grid is of very fine mesh, the value of E is small because the electrons in passing through the small mesh of the grid on their journey from the filament to the plate will negatively charge the grid and will be repelled. Similarly a small positive charge applied to a fine mesh will tend to accelerate the velocity of the electrons.

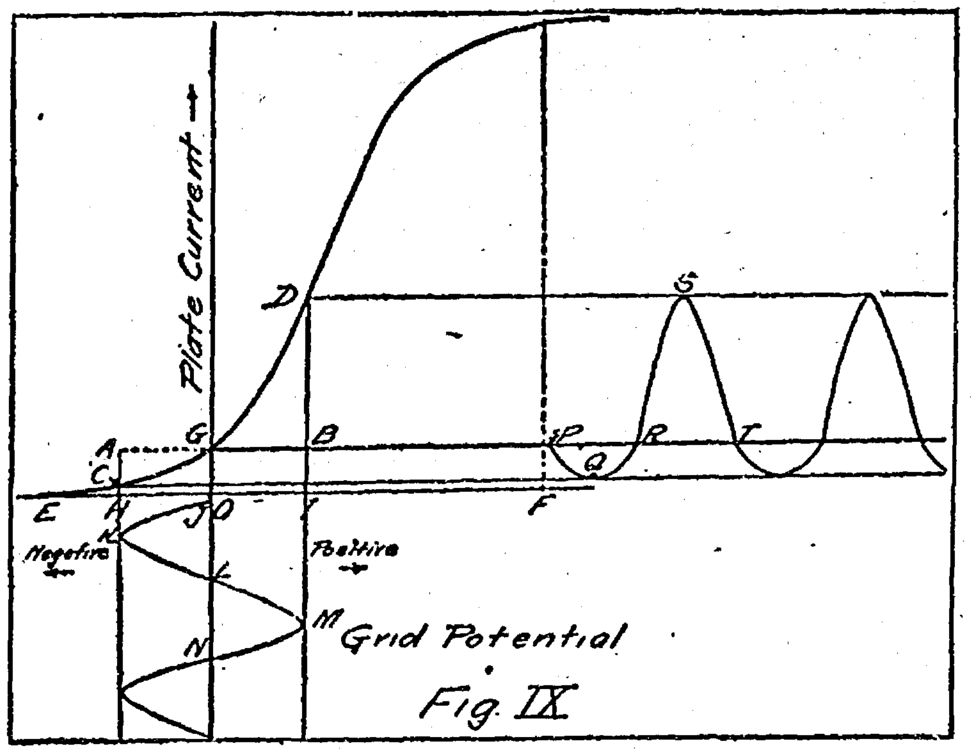

Fig. IX

In case of a very coarse mesh grid, the electrons can pass through the apertures in the grid without coming in so close to the charge on it and a relatively high potential will be required on the grid to control the electron stream, or in other words, the current flowing in the plate circuit.

Referring to Fig. VIII, O-G, is the current that will flow in the plate circuit when there is no potential applied to the grid. Suppose a positive potential as O-I is applied to the grid. The corresponding plate circuit current will be I-D or B-D, more than it was when the grid had no potential applied to it.

A negative potential of O-H is now applied to the grid where O-H is equal in value to O-I, but opposite in sign. The application of the negative potential when applied to the grid will cause the plate current to be reduced to a value H-C or A-O, less than it was when there was no potential applied to the grid. So it is seen that a negative potential when applied to the grid does not reduce the plate circuit current as much as the same positive potential increased the plate circuit current. This irregular conductivity of the tube is made use of when the tube is used as a detector or rectifier of radio signals.

The incoming radio signal is a high frequency alternating current. Let us apply an alternating difference of potential whose maximum positive value is equal to O-I and whose maximum negative value is equal to O-H, to the grid of the three-electrode tube whose characteristic curve is the same as that shown in Fig. VIII. In Fig. IX is shown the alternating difference of potential applied to the grid. Through the first quarter of a cycle, from zero at J to a maximum negative value at K, equal to O-H, the plate circuit current will vary from O-G, its value at P when no grid potential is applied to a value at Q equal to H-C.

During the next quarter of a cycle the grid potential changes from a maximum negative value at K to zero at L. The corresponding values of plate circuit current are shown by the portion of the plate current curve Q-R.

During the next or third quarter of a cycle the applied grid potential increases from zero at L to a maximum positive value at M, equal to O-I, and causes the plate circuit to increase from I-B, its value when the plate potential is zero, to I-D, an increase in plate current equal to B-D.

During the remaining fourth quarter of a cycle as the applied grid potential varies from a maximum positive value at M to zero at N, the plate circuit current varies from a value S to T.

Assuming that the characteristic curve as shown in Fig. VIII and Fig. IX was with a potential of 40 volts on the plate, then, if the plate current is to be reduced to zero by a variation of plate voltage—with no potential applied to the grid—the plate voltage must be reduced to zero or a reduction of 40 volts must be made. If the 40 volts is maintained on the plate and a negative potential of E-O is applied to the grid, it will reduce the current to zero.

Suppose O-E represents five volts. It can be seen then that a change of five volts in grid potential will accomplish the same result that 40 volts will in the plate circuit. The ratio of the voltage change in the plate current is called the factor of the tube and is denoted by the letter "K."

In the tube just discussed the amplification factor would be 40 divided by five or eight. The amplification factor of the tubes available for amateur use at present is usually between 4 and 10. The amplification factor is a function of the dimensions and relative positions of the elements in the tube.

An incoming radio frequency alternating current applied to the grid of a three-electrode vacuum tube is not only rectified but the variation in the plate is multiplied by "K," the amplification factor of the tube. This makes the three-electrode vacuum the most sensitive detector available.

In actual tubes the point "G" on the characteristic curves as shown in Fig. VIII and Fig. IX may not fall on such a point of the curve that symmetrical changes in grid potential will cause a symmetrical change in plate current, starting with zero potential on the grid.

It then becomes necessary to apply a constant potential to the grid by means of a battery in the grid circuit, called the "C" battery, to maintain the grid at such a point on the characteristic curve that symmetrical changes in grid potential will cause the maximum symmetrical current to flow in the plate circuit.

Big Ships' Radio.

The radio equipment of the ships Paris and Lafayette is described in a recent issue of Radioelectricity. On both steamers a five-kilowatt tube transmitter has been installed with a wave range of between 2,000 and 9,000 meters. A five-kilowatt motor-generator set is used to produce the plate-high tension for four rectifying and four oscillatory tubes, and the low voltage current for the heating of the filament of these tubes. Both vessels are equipped with a radio range-finder, or "radio goniometer," which, reduced to plain English, means a radio compass. A distance of 3,400 kilometers has been covered safely by messages sent from the transmitter of the Paris.

Radio for Animal Training.

Experiments with the radiophone as an aid in animal training are to be made at the Hippodrome, New York city, by George Power, trainer of the elephants, to determine whether it will be possible for his big pets at some future date to execute his orders on the stage while the trainer himself is absent.

Professor Bell a Radio Fan.

Finding the telephone, his own invention, a source of annoyance to him, Alexander Graham Bell had it removed ffrom his home. With the radiophone there is a difference, it seems, for Mr. Bell, now seventy-five years old, is said never to tire of "listening in" and experimenting with the new device. There are few more ardent enthusiasts, declare his friends.

RADIO DON'TS

Don't expect the circuit to oscillate with equal strength over a great range if you tune the grid circuit with capacity alone. Keep the ratio of L to C as near constant as possible while tuning.

Don't expect a circuit to oscillate if the natural period of the tickler circuit is equal to the natural period of the grid circuit.

Don't place the tickler or plate variometer tight against the grid coil or a change in the plate circuit will detune the grid circuit.

Don't expect high impedance tubes to oscillate freely in a circuit designed for low impedance tubes.

Don't discard a regenerative receiver until you have tried more than one detector tube.

Don't forget that a soft gaseous tube is the best detector, and that a hard tube is the best oscillator.

Don't treat inductance coils with shellac or any other varnish or compound that will absorb moisture.

Farm Bureau News

Picnic Great Success

The county wide picnic celebration which was held at the Warner estate grove July 4th, proved to be a great success especially grom the standpoint of attendance. The weather and road conditions were ideal and everyone seemed to enjoy the occasion to the fullest extent. Everyone seems to be agreed that a celebration of this type is more economical as well as more enjoyable when compared with the usual type of celebration.

The able address by Congressman L. J. Dickinson and the most eloquent address by Mrs. Ellsworth Richardson were the features of the occasion. The program was not carried out as advertised for the reason that the speakers did not arrive as scheduled but with the special numbers of music and other numbers of the program the large crowd was entertained until the arrival of the speakers.

The success of this county wide picnic celebration is due in a large measure to the splendid cooperation of the various towns of the county with the farm bureau organization. This is a splendid example of how the people of any community can cooperate with one another in holding a county wide entertainment. Due credit should be given the various committees for their efforts in working out a program for the occasion. To work up a county wide affair of this kind requires considerable time and energy on the part of those who are responsible for the plans. The picnic as a whole was a great success and let us hope it will not be the last celebration of this type.

Millinery Specialist

Miss Martha Foster, clothing and millinery specialist from Ames spent three days last week in the county demonstrating and lecturing on "Renovation of Hats" and "Alternation of Commercial Patterns."

The rainy weather interferred somewhat with the attendance at these meetings but those who had the courage to face the weather seem to be pleased with the work as presented by Miss Foster.

Ladies who are interested in the work by the specialist will be interested to know that Miss Foster will return to Wright county August 14, 15, and 16 to demonstrate and lecture on remodeling of clothing and it is suggested that those who are interested bring embroidery floss and materal for making some fancy stitches.

Picnic for Boys and Girls

A county wide picnic for all boys and girls of Wright county is being planned for Thursday July 27th. It was planned originally to hold a picnic for members of the garment and poultry clubs of the county but it has been decided since that all boys and girls in Wright county would enjoy a get-together of this kind. The picnic will probably be held in the Goldfield park and all boys and girls are urged to begin planning for this occasion.

Members of the poultry club will be pleased to know that Mr. J. L. Gordon, poultry specialist from Ames will be in Wright county Wednesday July 26th, to meet with the members of the poultry clubs to talk over the poultry work and make plans for the county wide poultry exhibit for the month of August. Members of the garment clubs will be pleased to know that Miss Hazel Spencer, assistant leader of girl's club work will be in the county Wednesday July 26th, to conduct a school of instruction for the leaders of girls' clubs in the county.

Will Entertain Bankers

Directors of the Wright county farm bureau are planning a get-together meeting of the bankers of the county and surrounding territory with the directors of the farm bureau. This meeting which is being planned for the latter part of July and will be in the nature of a round table discussion with the view of bringing about a better feeling between the banking interests and the county farm bureau.

Since the interest of the farmers and the bankers are so closely allied it has been thought that a meeting between these two organizations would bring about a better understanding of one another's problems and a closer cooperation in the activities of the community which aim towards better homes better agriculture and better living condition in the community.

Capper-Tincher Bill Passes

The new Capper-Tincher bill, which overcomes the unconstitutionality of the previous law of that name and regulates grain exchanges passed the House of Representatives on June 28. It goes now to the Senate.

The Farm Bloc was successful in preventing amendments which Representative Tincher and other members of the bloc did not desire. The only amendment which passed, of all of those which were offered, was one by Representative Mann of Illinois to which no objection was made. The amendment struck from the bill paragraph F, section 5 which would have authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to approve certain forms of contracts used upon grain exchanges.

The bill seeks to re-enact certain passages in the grain futures bill passed last August and which the Supreme court on May 15 held to be unconstitutional since it attempted to regulate the exchanges by the taxing system. Both Senator Capper and Representative Tincher have worked strenously to have the new bill passed quickly.

STAR THEATRE
JULY 14-15
"THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL"

Securing $30,000 worth of furniture for a single interior setting and then smashing the outfit before the camera produces photoplay realism, but at a well-nigh prohibitive cost. Yet that it what Cecil B. DeMille did in his Paramont production, "The Affairs of Anatol," which will be shown at the Star theatre July 14-15.

The setting in question serves as a background for a part of the story portrayed by Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Bebe Daniels,, Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts and other all-star players. It is in ultraluxurious apartment and Howard Higgin, production manager for Cecil B. DeMille productions was instructed to spare no expense.

The result was an attractive suite designed by Paul Iribe—furnished withapproximately $30,000 worth of furniture. This included a valueable set of Louis XVI chairs, a magnificent carved photograph case of unique design, a grand piano, lamps mirrors, tables, a desk, lounge, pictures and bric-a-brac.

At the climax of this episode, Wallace Reid was instructed to run amuck, smashing everything breakable in the set. The orders were comprehensive and Reid obeyed them to the letter. Not one stick of furniture remained in its original shape when the vandalism was complete! Using the small pieces of furniture as bludgeons, Reid shatterer everything in sight while the camera clicked just out of range of his blows. Mirrors, lamps, chairs, phonograph and piano were demolished one by one. As a conclusion to the scene, the husky star seized the huge overstuffed divan and hurled it bodily through the French doors at one end of the set.

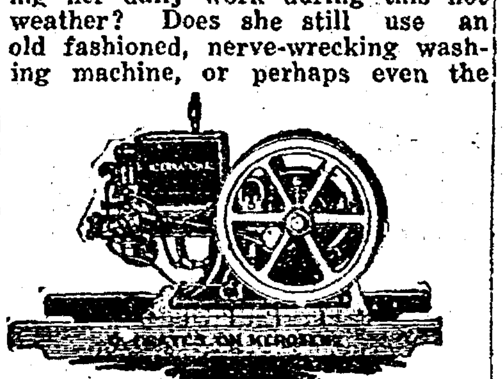
If one woman had all the clothes she wanted, more than likely the rest of them would have to go around in barrels.

Taking the line of least resistance is what makes rivers—and some men—so crooked.

A "Mother's" Helper

You believe in having up-to-date labor saving machinery on the farm. You know it pays. But does "Mother" have the means of lightening her daily work during this hot weather? Does she still use an old fashioned, nerve-wrecking washing machine, or perhaps even the old back breaking tub and washboard? Is she still using the old hand churn? "Mother" deserves something better and she would appreciate it if you would hitch a good washing machine together with other conveniences to a small International Kerosene Engine—an engine she can easily operate—a real "Mother's" helper. Try it, and watch her smile.



Character is what you are. Reputation is only what men think you are.

It Runs in the Family

Our "Red Baby" and all its Brothers are real Go-Getters. Take our "Red Baby" for instance, it's on the job every minute hustling around and doing honest-to-gosh work. You may not be in the same business we are in, but it's a ten to one shot that whatever your business one of "Red Baby's" Brothers would be just the candy for you. They are great trucks—these Internationals—and there's more honest-to-goodness service in them than in any other truck we've ever seen. Come in or stop our "Red Baby"—let's talk it over.

Did you ever catch the man who finds fault with his wife's cooking trying his hand at it himself? Hardly, he knows better.

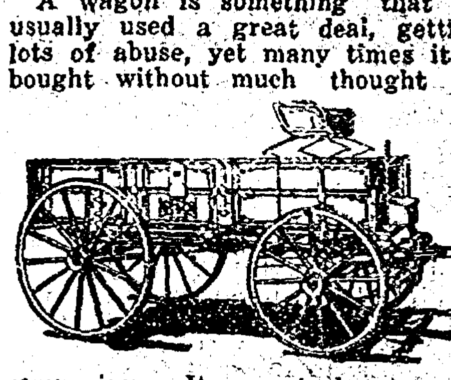
Weber—King of All

A wagon is something that is usually used a great deal, getting lots of abuse, yet many times it is bought without much thought or comparison. It pays to buy a good wagon—one with exclusive features, good workmanship, and high-grade materials. The Weber meets all these requirements. It is truly "The King of All Farm Wagons."



Nature's Smiling

Doesn't it make a fellow feel good to see how the corn has been growing the last week or two? It sure does. One just can't help feeling fine when all Nature is smiling and trying to outdo herself.

Give the Cow a Chance

A good cow and a Primrose cream separator will turn green grass into golden butter fat—producing a cash crop every day of the year. The Primrose gets ALL the cream.

NEW ELECTRIC LIGHTS

H. F. Kellogg, manager of the Iowa Falls Electric Co., and Oliver Longueville, attorney, were in town Monday and met with the council to assist in perfecting the necessary legal papers in connection with electric light proposition to be submitted to the voters of Thornton. The council took favorable action on the petition asking for an election, and the two proclamations by Mayor Young in furtherance of the proposition as adopted appear in this issue of the enterprise. Thornton now has an opportunity of securing a high tension electric light service and the indications are that the proposition will command a majority vote.—Enterprise.

CLARION MAN TO RUN HOTEL AT ROCHESTER

J. H. Moore has closed a deal for the lease of the Martin hotel at Rochester, Minn., taking possesion on July 1. The Martin is one of the largest and best hotels in the famous hospital city.

It has nearly 400 rooms and is well located, being directly south of the Mayo clinic. The price of the lease is said to have been $25,000 a year.

I. L. Walls, of Clear Lake, another former well known Clarion man, negotiated the deal.—Globe Gazette.

ALEXANDER BOY SERIOUSLY INJURED

Lewellyn Dunn, 5-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dunn of Alexander, was struck by the front wheel of a Charles City car bearing the license number 39-3279, Tuesday as he was crossing the interurban loop on the north shore.

The lad was picked up unconscious and rushed to a physicians care, where an examination revealed that he was seriously injured. The rear wheel of the car had passed over his body.

The Fred Dunn and George Dunn families of Alexander drove here Tuesday for the celebration, camping in the space by the interurban loop. Lewellyn was sent across the highway for a pail of water and was struck down as he crossed.—Globe Gazette.

At this writing little Lewellyn is still in the hospital in Mason City suffering with blood clots on the lungs but is improving rapidly and may soon be moved to his home in Alexander.

CAREFUL CROSSING CAMPAIGN

The following letter regarding the "Careful Crossing Campaign" has been received from President Harding by the chairman of the safety section, American Railway Association:

"My attention has been called to the fact that under the auspices of the American Railway association, an intensive campaign is to be waged for eliminating accidents at rail road highway crossings.

"The complete success of such an effort would mean the saving of thousands of lives, the prevention of many more thousands of injuries and incidentally the prevention of a great property loss. Of course, the ideal solution is elimation of grade crossings, to which all possible energy and means should be unceasngly directed. But the extent of our country and its railroad mileage make apparent that not for many years of utmost effort should this be effected. There should be constant pressure for elimation of these danger spots, particularly in the more populous areas, pending which there is need for just the kind of a preventive effort that your association is planning. Among these measures, the most effective would be to arouse in the minds of drivers a sense of their personally responsibilities. When thoughtlessness is allowed to usurp theplace of vigilance, as too often happens, the scene is set for tragedy. Reminders and still more reminders, of the need for caution at railway crossings are needed.

"Surely, the effort you are undertaking is appealing, and it ought to have the most generous and general support."

Most of us have probably noticed the pictures which have been placed near every railroad crossing through the efforts of the American Railway Association.

It will be worth your time to go down to the railway crossing and make a careful inspection of those picthres.

Meservey, as well as other towns, has had some serious crossing accidents in the past.

Use your imagination. Suppose it were yourself and family in the perilous position shown in that crossing sign.

Congress has spent more energy and ingenuity in dodging the bonus than the whole American army did in earning it.

There may be such a thing as luck, but if so it is the off-spring of wisdom, energy and perseverance.

HOW WOULD YOU VOTE?

Some of our readers have received through the mail an individual secret ballot sent out by one of the leading literary magazines, in a nation wide poll, asking them whether they favor dry, moist or wet policy, and whether they are for or against the bonus.

These ballots have been mailed to more than ten million men and women voters throughout the United States. They require no signature, no condition, no obligation. Every voter is thus allowed to express his free, uninfluenced, secret preference unknown to anyone but himself or herself.

No propaganda of and kind is connected with this great nation poll. It will simply be a revelation of the real will of the people which will point, in advance of the election, to the defeat or victory of many candidates.

Millions of citizens are pondering and discussing these questions with intense feeling. And those who are not doing so, should be.

Here are two questions. How would you vote in regard to them?

PROHIBITION: (Which one of these three policies do you favor? Can you give an intelligent reply as to why your favor is thus expressed?

1. Do you favor the continuance and strict enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Law?
2. Do you favor a modification of the Volstead Law to permit light wines and beers?
3. Do you favor a repeal of the Prohibition Amendment?

SOLDIERS BONUS: Do you favor a Federal Bonus for all American Soldiers and Sailors who wore the uniform during the World War?

HOTEL CLOSED

The Hotel Thornton, operated for several years past by Mrs. Archie McCallum, was closed last Friday and Mrs. McCallum is now visiting with relatives. We are not reliably advised, but it is reported that the family will reside at Mason City. It is to be hoped that the hotel is to be closed but temporarily. It is a public need that energetic effort should be made provide. Perhaps the Chamber of Commerce can help in this direction.—Enterprise.

Alexander Local News

Mrs. E. E. Butler and two children Edwin and John of Hampton have spent the past week with relatives and friends at this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Azeltine of Rowan were visitors at Alexander last Sunday.

Miss Lillie Cornwell of Hampton came last Friday for a visit with friends in this vicinity.

Jap Riis of Coulter was a business caller in town last Saturday.

Dick Blau has been visiting at the home of his sister, Mrs. Charles Nelson at Clarion for the past week.

Miss Emma Eickmeyer of Sheffield was a Sunday visitor at this place.

Miss Nettie Benson of Belmond came Sunday to keep house for the Foughty family during the summer.

Miss Gertrude Berninghausen of Eldora is visiting with friends here this week.

Mr. and Mrs. B. K. Kinseth of Belmond were Sunday visitors at the Clarence Bohlen home.

Misses Ruth and Alma Johnson of Latimer visiter at the Fred Greenfield home on Sunday.

Jim Siberts of Dows was a business caler in town on Monday.

Misses Anna Beenen and Gertrude Berninghausen were shoppers at Hampton Saturday.

Miss Carrie Baxter who has been teaching school at Milwaukee, Wis., for the past year has returned and is visiting at the home of her sister, Mrs. A. C. Lieuwen.

Arthur Thomas of Iowa Falls was a Sunday visitor at Alexander.

Little Lewellyn Dunn the five year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dunn who was seriously injured internally at Clear Lake on Independence day when the rear wheel of an auto ran across his body is reported to be improving rapidly, which their many friends are glad to hear.

Mr. and Mrs. O. N. Schultz of Latimer were callers in town last Sunday evening.

SNEAK THIEVES ENTER HOME AT GOLDFIELD

Miss Laura Whyte, of Goldfield, entered her home one afternoon recently, and found a man coolly taking a good view of the place. She asked him what he was doing there, and he asked her if he was in the home of Mr. George Miller. She told him that he was not, and that she never heard of a man by that name in Goldfield. The man excused himself and left, and an examination of the premises showed that he had taken some of the Whyte property with him. He could not be apprehended, and made his escape.—Republican.

GLOBE-GAZETTE WILL GIVE $100 REWARD

The theft of chickens both from the farm and the little plot of ground maintained by the thrifty housewife in town and city has become too prevalent and the only method left to make an example of a few of the marauders to put the fear of punishment in the hearts of the sneaks who would rob women of their means of earning spending money or in some cases of providing food for the family.

The farmer's wife who exercises a tenderly mother care over the broods of chickens from the time they are taken from the brooder or mother hen till they become spring fries, ought to have the protection of the law from the predatory gentlemen who, with the aid of the automobile, rob the hennery and make their getaway. A good many people who lose their fowls say little about it, while the loser of a big consignment has no clew to follow up the loss.

Farmers should organize an anti-chicken thief association, just as the pioneers did a vigilance council for detection and punishment of horse thieves, for the apprehension and conviction of chicken thieves. A few examples would save many a farmer's wife much solicitation and ofttimes grief over her flock of chicks.

In order to give hope and protection to poultry raisers, the Globe-Gazette proposes to offer a reward of $100 to any Globe-Gazette subscriber for the apprehension and conviction of any one guilty of the theft of poultry. This offer is in effect from July 4 for the first conviction and holds good in all Iowa territory where the Globe-Gazette circulates.

The punishment in Iowa for larceny of domestic fowl or poultry is very severe if the court wishes to enforce the maximum penalty and is as follows:

Sec. 4852-d Of Poultry. Any person guilty of larceny of domestic fowl or poultry from any building, shed, coop or enclosed premises shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding two years, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or both fine and imprisonment in the county jail, as above provided, at the discretion of the court.—Globe-Gazette.

SHOP CRAFTS WALK OUT TO GAIN RIGHTS

The shop crafts men employed by the railroads of the United States walked out Saturday morning, in order to establish what they claim is their rights and to cause the railroads and labor board to maintain the wage schedule which was in effect prior to July first. The men claim there is nothing in the present scale of living costs which justfies a reduction in pay; that living costs are actually increasing, rather than being lowered, and that the decision of the railroad labor board is not based on equity and justice.

The walk-out here was practically one hundred per cent strong. Some of the maintenance of way workman also quit their jobs. Rip track foreman, George Ziems, was made a general foreman in order to keep him on the job, and so was Foreman Thorpe at the roundhouse. The general forenmanship carries an advance of $20 per month pay.

The striking shop craftsmen have conducted the strike in an orderly manner. They are loafing around town, and feel confident they will tie up the railroads the country over within a month or so. They believe the time has come for a showdown; that the railroads are determined to destroy the unions and put the employees back on less than a living wage, and feel that the fight must be made sooner or later and one time is as good as another.

There was no work at the roundhouse Saturday afternoon or Sunday. It was as dead out there as a graveyard. The engineers and firemen have received their instructions as to what their duties are to be during the strike of the shop men, and it is thot few will go beyond the usual duties prescribed by the rules of their union and the contracts the unions hold with the roads.

The strikers believe that in a few days the engines will show the lack of attention which will naturally follow the strike. Local men do not believe the company will easily get men to take their place. It was reported two carloads of men had arrived Saturday night to man the roundhouse, but nothing was doing Sunday. The men, mostly colored, went to Oelwein. Locally, sentiment is generally with the men. The Great Western lost heavily in public confidence by puting the maintance of of way work under the Hecker contract. The maintance of way men are expected to strike in a week or two unless the railroads back up on the latest wage schedule.—News.

TOO MUCH SPEED

Trying to drive faster than the car was capable of going caused the new Buick roadster in which Frank E. Barry and John Schmeling was riding, to turn turtle three times near the W. J. Keefe farm east of town this morning about 9 o'clock.

According to reports Mr. Barry declared that they were going fifty-five miles an hour and struck a small patch of soft gravel which caused the car to turn over three times, finally landing ont its top at the side of the highway. Both men, were thrown clear of the machine, Barry over a fence and into an oat field. Schmeling struck his head against a telephone pole. The men, after picking themselves up, went to the Keefe home and succeeded in getting Mr. Keefe to take them to the Luthern hospital where their wounds were dressed. They received only slight injuries. The roadster is said to be a total wreck.—Hampton Recorder.

MYSTERY IN FIRE AT OLD GOODELL

The house in the old town occupied by the Floyd Ackerson family was burned to the ground while the Ackersons were at Fort Dodge, and no one was supposed to have been in it for three days.

William Lester, in driving past noticed smoke at one of the upstairs windows and investigating found the upstairs was on fire which appeared to have orignated from a bed. Neighbors saved most of the contents and the chemical fire engine from Goodell arrived and apparently put out the fire which however, broke out again an hour or so later and totally destroyed the building. The house was partly insured.—Globe Gazette.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes his employer is dead. He also tells him the legend of the Indian Drum, which according to old superstition beats once for every life lost on the Great Lakes. Twenty years before, the great freighter Miwaka had gone down with twenty-five on board, but the Drum had sounded for only twenty-four, leaving the inference that one person had been saved, since it was general belief that the drum never erred. Pursuing a stranger who had made a disturbance at his house, Alan is slugged and rendered unconscious.

CHAPTER IX.—Conrad recovers, and the affair remains a mystery.

CHAPTER X.—Alan learns from Wassaquam that it was Corvet's habit to keep the sum of $1,000 in the house, apparently to meet the demands of a certain "Luke," who appeared periodically. In the absence of Wassaquam, "Luke" comes to the house demanding to see Corvet. He is evidently in a dying condition, due to alcohol and exposure. Conrad tries without avail to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. The man dies. Wassaquam gives Conrad a paper on which is a list of names.

CHAPTER XI.—From the document Alan thinks he may have a clue to the mystery surrounding Corvet's life and disappearance. He leaves Chicago to visit Lake Michigan ports in search of the persons whose names were on the list.

CHAPTER XII.—Constance receives a package wrapped in a muffler which she recognizes Corvet was wearing on the day he went away. It contains a few coins, a watch, and woman's wedding ring. She believes them to have been the property of Corvet, and accepts them as a proof of his death. Spearman urges Constance to marry him. She consents, but refuses his demand for an immediate ceremony.

CHAPTER XIII.—Inquiries show that the watch in the package had been the property of a Captain Stafford, commander of the Miwaka, who had gone down with his ship.

CHAPTER XIV

Old Burr of the Ferry.

It was in late November and while the coal carrier Pontiac, on which he was serving as lookout, was in Lake Superior that Alan first heard of Jim Burr. The name spoken among some other names in casual conversation by a member of the crew, stirred and excited him; the name James Burr, occurring on Benjamin Corvet's list, had borne opposite it the legend "All disappeared; no trace," and Alan, whose investigations had accounted for all others whom the list contained, had been able regarding Burr only to verify the fact that at the address given no one of this name was to be found.

He questioned the oiler who had mentioned Burr. The man had met Burr one night in Manitowoc with other men, and something about the old man had impressed both his name and image on him; he knew no more than that. At Manitowoc!—the place from which Captain Stafford's watch had been sent to Constance Sherrill and where Alan had sought for, but had failed to find, the sender! Had Alan stumbled by chance upon the one whom Benjamin Corvet had been unable to trace?

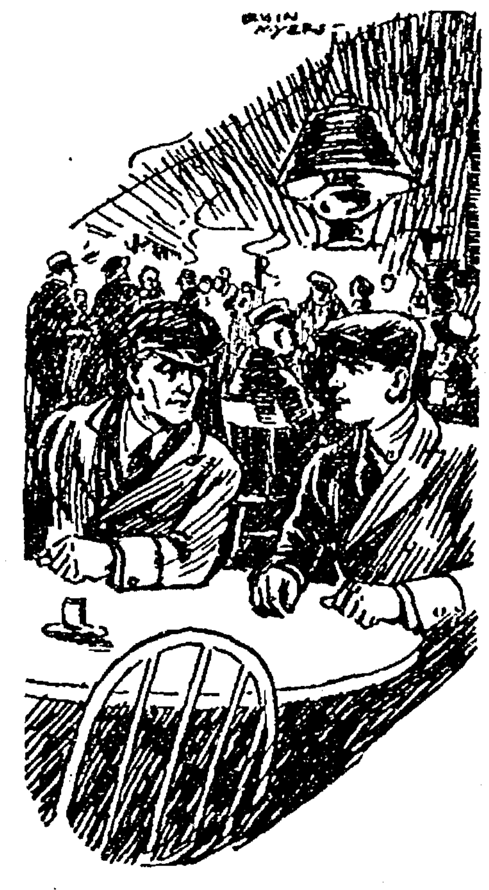
Alan could not leave the Pontiac and go at once to Manitowoc to seek Burr; for he was needed where he was. It was fully a week later and after the Pontiac had been laden again and had repassed the length of Lake Superior that Alan left the vessel at Sault Ste. Marie and took the train for Manitowoc.

The little lake port of Manitowoc, which he reached in the late afternoon, was turbulent with the lake season's approaching close. Alan inquired for the seamen's drinking place, where his informant had met Jim Burr; following the directions he received he made his way along the river bank until he found it.

The proprietor knew old Jim Burr—yes. Burr was a wheelsman on Carferry Number 25. He was a lakeman, experienced and capable; that fact, some months before, had served as introduction for him to the frequenters of this place. When the ferry was in harbor and his duties left him idle, Burr came up and waited there, occupying always the same chair. He never drank; he never spoke to others unless they spoke first to him, but then he talked freely about old days on the lakes, about ships which had been lost and about men long dead.

Alan decided that there could be no better place to interview old Burr than here; he waited therefore, and in the early evening the old man came in. He was a slender but muscularly built man seeming about sixty-five, but he might be considerably younger or older than that. His hair was completely white; his nose was thin and sensitive; his face was smoothly placid, emotionless, contented; his eyes were queerly clouded, deepset and intent.

Those whose names Alan had found on Corvet's list had been of all ages, young and old; but Burr might well have been a contemporary of Corvet on the lakes. Alan moved over and took a seat beside the old man.



"You're From No. 25?" He Asked, to Draw Him Into Conversation.

"You're from Number 25?" he asked, to draw him into conversation.

"Yes."

"I've been working on the carrier Pontiac as lookout. She's on her way to tie up at Cleveland, so I left her and came on here. You don't know whether there's a chance for me to get a place through the winter on Number 25?"

Old Burr reflected. "One of our boys has been talking of leaving. I don't know when he expects to go. You might ask."

"Thank you; I will. My name's Conrad—Alan Conrad."

He saw no recognition of the name in Burr's reception of it; but he had not expected that. None of those on Benjamin Corvet's list had had any knowledge of Alan Conrad or had heard the name before.

Alan was silent, watching the old man; Burr, silent too, seemed listening to the conversation which came to them from the tables near by, where men were talking of cargoes, and of ships and of men who worked and sailed upon them.

"How long have you been on the lakes?" Alan inquired.

"All my life."

"Do you remember the Miwaka?"

Old Burr turned abruptly and studied Alan with a slow scrutiny which seemed to look him through and through; yet while his eyes remained fixed on Alan suddenly they grew blank. He was not thinking now of Alan, but had turned his thoughts within himself.

"I remember her—yes. She was lost in '95," he said. "In '95," he repeated.

"Did you know Benjamin Corvet?" Alan asked.

Old Burr stared at him uncertainly. "I know who he is, of course."

"You never met him?"

"No."

"Did you receive a communication from him some time this year—a request to send some things to Miss Constance Sherrill at Harbor Point?"

"I never heard of Miss Constance Sherrill. To send what things?"

"Several things—among them a watch which had belonged to Captain Stafford of the Miwaka."

Old Burr got up suddenly and stood gazing down at Alan. "A watch of Captain Stafford's?—no," he said agitatedly. "No!"

He moved away and left the place; and Alan sprang up and followed him.

He was not, it seemed probable to Alan now, the James Burr of Corvet's list; at least Alan could not see how he could be that one. Among the names of the crew of the Miwaka Alan had found that of a Frank Burr, and his inquiries had informed him that this man was a nephew of the James Burr who had lived near Port Corbay and had "disappeared" with all his family. Old Burr had not lived at Port Corbay—at least, he claimed not to have lived there; he gave another address and assigned to himself quite different connections. For every member of the crew of the Miwaka there had been a corresponding, but different name upon Corvet's list—the name of a close relative. If old Burr was not related to the Burr on Corvet's list, what connection could he have with the Miwaka, and why should Alan's questions have agitated him so? Alan would not lose sight of old Burr until he had learned the reason for that.

He followed, as the old man crossed the bridge and turned to his left among the buildings on the river front. Burr's figure, vague in the dusk, crossed the railroad yards and made its way to where a huge black bulk, which Alan recognized as the ferry, loomed at the waterside. He disappeared aboard it. Alan, following him, gazed about.

A long, broad, black boat the ferry was, almost four hundred feet to the tall, bluff bow.

Alan thrilled a little at his inspection of the vessel. He had not seen close at hand before one of these great craft which, throughout the winter, brave ice and storm after all—or nearly all—other lake boats are tied up. He had not meant to apply there when he questioned old Burr about a berth on the ferry; he had used that merely as a means of getting into conversation with the old man. But now he meant to apply; for it would enable him to find out more about old Burr.

No berth on the ferry was vacant yet but one soon would be, and Alan was accepted in lieu of the man who was about to leave; his wages would not begin until the other man left, but in the meantime he could remain aboard.

All that was known definitely about old Burr on the ferry, it appeared, was that he had joined the vessel in the early spring. Before that—they did not know; he might be an old lakeman who, after spending years ashore, had returned to the lakes for a livelihood.

The next morning, Alan approached old Burr in the crew's quarters and tried to draw him into conversation again about himself; but Burr only stared at him with his intent and oddly introspective eyes and would not talk upon this subject. A week passed; Alan, established as a lookout now on Number 25 and carrying on his duties, saw Burr daily and almost every hour; his watch coincided with Burr's watch at the wheel—they went on duty and were relieved together. Yet better acquaintance did not make the old man more communicative; a score of times Alan attempted to get him to tell more about himself, but he evaded Alan's questions and, if Alan persisted, he avoided him.

On deck, one night, listening while old Burr talked, excitement suddenly seized Alan. Burr claimed to be an Englishman born in Liverpool. He had been, he said, a seaman in the British navy; he had been present at the shelling of Alexandria; later, because of some difficulty, which he glossed over, he had deserted and had come to "the States;" he had been first a deckhand, then the mate of a tramp schooner on the lakes. Alan, gazing at the old man, felt exultation leaping and throbbing within him. This life which old Burr was rehearsing to him as his own, was the actual life of Munro Burkhalter, one of the men on Corvet's list regarding whom Alan had been able to obtain full information!

Alan sped below, when he was relieved from watch, and got out the clippings left by Corvet and the notes of what he himself had learned in his visits to the homes of these people. His excitement grew greater as he pored over them; he found that he could account, with their aid, for all that old Burr had told him. Old Burr's stories were not, of course, true; yet neither were they fictitious. They—their incidents, at least—were actualities. They were woven from the lives of those upon Corvet's list! Alan felt his skin prickling and the blood beating fast in his temples. How could Burr have known these incidents? Who could he be to know them all? To what man, but one, could all of them be known? Was old Burr . . . Benjamin Corvet?

Alan telegraphed that day to Sherrill; but when the message had gone doubt seized him. Benjamin Corvet, when he went away, had tried to leave his place and power among lakemen to Alan; Alan, refusing to accept what Corvet had left until Corvet's reason should be known, had felt obliged also to refuse friendship with the Sherrills. When revelation came, would it make possible Alan's acceptance of the place Corvet had prepared for him, or would it leave him where he was? Would it bring him nearer to Constance Sherrill, or would it set him forever away from her?

CHAPTER XV.

A Ghost Ship.

Officially, and to chief extent in actuality, navigation now had "closed" for the winter. Further up the harbor, beyond Number 25, glowed the white lanterns marking two vessels moored and "laid up" till spring; another was still in the active process of "laying up." Marine insurance, as regards all ordinary craft, had ceased; and the government at sunrise, five days before, had taken the warning lights from the Straits of Mackinaw, from Ile-aux-Galets, from north Manitou, and the Fox Islands; and the light at Beaver Island had but five nights more to burn.

Having no particular duty when the boat was in dock, old Burr had gone toward the steamer "laying up," and now was standing watching with absorption the work going on. There was a tug a little farther along, with steam up and black smoke pouring from its short funnel. Old Burr observed this boat too and moved up a little nearer. Alan, following the wheelsman, came opposite the stern of the freighter.

"They're crossing," the wheelsman said aloud, but more to himself than to Alan. "They're laying her up here," he jerked his head toward the Stoughton. "Then they're crossing to Manitowoc on the tug."

"What's the matter with that?" Alan cried.

Burr drew up his shoulders and ducked his head down as a gust blew. It was cold, very cold indeed in that wind, but the old man had on a mackinaw and, out on the lake, Alan had seen him on deck coatless in weather almost as cold as this.

"It's a winter storm," Alan cried. "It's like it that way; but today's the 15th, not the 5th of December!"

"That's right," Burr argeed. "That's right."

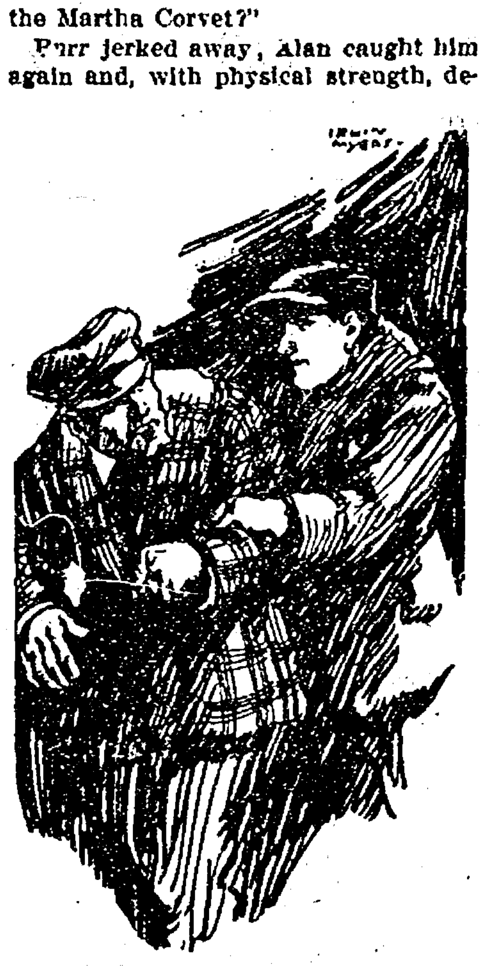
The reply was absent, as though Alan had stumbled upon what he was thinking and Burr had no thought yet to wonder at it.

"And it's the Stoughton they're laying up, not the—" he stopped and stared at Burr to let him supply the word and, when the old man did not, he repeated again—"not the—"

"No," Burr agreed again, as though the name had been given. "No."

"It was the Martha Corvet you laid up, wasn't it?" Alan cried quickly. "Tell me—that time on the 5th—it was the Martha Corvet?"

Burr jerked away, Alan caught him again and, with physical strength, detained him. "Wasn't it that?" he demanded. "Answer me; it was the Martha Corvet?"



"Answer Me; It Was the Martha Corvet?"

The wheelsman struggled; he seemed suddenly terrified with the terror which, instead of weakening, supplied infuriated strength. He threw Alan off for an instant and started to flee back toward the ferry; and Alan let him go, only following a few steps to make sure that the wheelsman returned to Number 25.

Because of the severe cold, the watches on the ferry had been shortened. Alan would be relieved from time to time to warm himself, and then he would return to duty again. Old Burr at the wheel would be relieved and would go on duty at the same hours as Alan himself. Benjamin Corvet! The fancy reiterated itself to him. Could he be mistaken? Was that man, whose eyes turned alternately from the compass to the bow of the ferry as it shifted and rose and fell, the same who had sat in that lonely chair turned toward the fireplace in the house on Astor street? Were those hands, which held the steamer to her course, the hands which had written to Alan in secret from the little room off his bedroom and which pasted so carefully the newspaper clippings concealed in the library?

Alan faced the wind with mackinaw buttoned about his throat; to make certain his hearing, his ears were unprotected. They numbed frequently, and he drew a hand out of the glove to rub them. The windows to protect the wheelsman had been dropped, as the snow had gathered on the glass; and at intervals, as he glanced back, he could see old Burr's face as he switched on a dim light to look at the compass. The strange placidity which usually characterized the old man's face had not returned to it since Alan had spoken with him on the dock; its look was intent and queerly drawn. Was old Burr beginning to remember that he was Benjamin Corvet? Alan did not believe it could be that; again and again he had spoken Corvet's name to him without effect. Yet there must have been times when, if he was actually Corvet, he had remembered who he was. He must have remembered that when he had written directions to some one to send those things to Constance Sherrill; or, a strange thought had come to Alan, had he written those instructions himself? This certainly would account for the package having been mailed at Manitowoc and for Alan's failure to find out by whom it had been mailed. It would account, too, for the unknown handwriting upon the wrapper, if some one on the ferry had addressed the package for the old man.

What could have brought back that moment of recollection to Corvet, Alan wondered; the finding of the things which he had sent? What might bring another such moment? Would his seeing the Sherrills again—or Spearman—act to restore him?

For half an hour Alan paced steadily at the bow. The storm was increasing noticeably in fierceness; the wind-driven snowflakes had changed to hard pellets which, like little bullets, cut and stung the face; and it was growing colder. From a cabin window came the blue flash of the wireless, which had been silent after notifying the shore stations of their departure. It had commenced again; this was unusual. Something still more unusual followed at once; the direction of the gale seemed slowly to shift, and with it the wash of the water; instead of the wind and the waves coming from dead ahead now, they moved to the port beam, and Number 25, still pitching with the thrust through the seas, also began to roll. This meant, of course, that the steamer had changed its course and was making almost due north. It seemed to Alan to force its engines faster; the deck vibrated more. Alan had not heard the orders for this change and could only speculate as to what it might mean.

His relief came after a few minutes more.

"Where are we heading?" Alan asked.

"Radio," the relief announced. "The H. O. Richardson calling; she's up by the Manitous."

"What sort of trouble?"

"She's not in trouble; it's another ship."

"What ship?"

"No word as to that."

Alan, not delaying to question further, went back to the cabins.

These stretched aft, behind the bridge, along the upper deck, some score on each side of the ship; they had accommodations for almost a hundred passengers; but on this crossing only a few were occupied. Alan had noticed some half-dozen men—business men, no doubt, forced to make the crossing, and one of them, a Catholic priest, returning probably to some mission in the north; he had seen no women among them. A little group of passengers were gathered now in the door of or just outside the wireless cabin, which was one of the row on the starboard side. Stewards stood with them and the cabin maid; within, and bending over the table with the radio instrument, was the operator with the second officer beside him. The violet spark was rasping, and the operator, his receivers strapped over his ears, strained to listen. He got no reply, evidently, and he struck his key again; now, as he listened, he wrote slowly on a pad.

"What is it?" Alan asked the officer.

"The Richardson heard four blasts of a steam whistle about an hour ago when she was opposite the Manitous. She answered with the whistle and turned toward the blasts. She couldn't find any ship." The officer's reply was interrupted by some of the others. "Then . . . that was a few minutes ago . . . they heard the four long again. . . . They'd tried to pick up the other ship with radio before. . . . Yes; we got that here. . . . Tried again and got no answer. . . . But they heard the blasts for half an hour. . . . They said they seemed to be almost beside the ship once. . . . But they didn't see anything. Then the blasts stopped . . . sudden, cut off short in the middle as though something happened. . . . She was blowing distress all right. . . . The Richardson's searching again now. . . . Yes, she's searching for boats."

"Anyone else answered?" Alan asked.

"Shore stations on both sides."

"Do they know what ship it is?"

"No."

"What ship might be there now?"

The officer could not answer that. He had known where the Richardson must be; he knew of no other likely to be there at this season. The spray from the waves had frozen upon Alan; ice gleamed and glinted from the rail and from the deck. Alan's shoulders drew up in a spasm. The Richardson, they said, was looking for boats; how long could men live in little boats exposed to that gale and cold?

He turned back to the others about the radio cabin; the glow from within showed him faces as gray as his; it lighted a face on the opposite side of the door—a face haggard with dreadful fright. Old Burr jerked about as Alan spoke to him and moved away alone; Alan followed him and seized his arm.

"What's the matter?" Alan demanded, holding to him.

"The four blasts!" the wheelsman repeated. "They heard the four blasts!" He iterated it once more.

"Yes," Alan urged. "Why not?"

"But where no ship ought to be; so they couldn't find the ship—they couldn't find the ship!" Terror, of awful abjectness, came over the old man. He freed himself from Alan and went forward.

Alan went aft to the car deck. The roar and echoing tumult of the ice against the hull here drowned all other sounds. The thirty-two freight cars, in their four long lines, stood wedged and chained and blocked in place; they tipped and tilted, rolled and swayed like the stanchions and sides of the ship, fixed and secure. Jacks on the steel deck under the edges of the cars, kept them from rocking on their trucks. Men paced watchfully between the tracks, observing the movement of the cars. The cars creaked and groaned, as they worked a little this way and that; the men sprang with sledges and drove the blocks tight again or took an additional turn upon the jacks.

Alan saw old Burr who, on his way to the wheelhouse, had halted to listen. For several minutes the old man stood motionless; he came on again and stopped to listen.

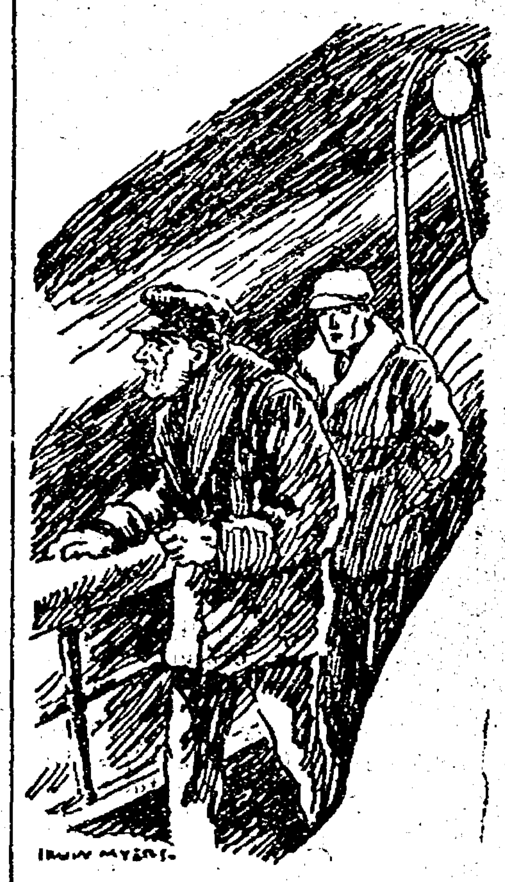
"You hear 'em?" Burr's voice quavered in Alan's ear. "You hear 'em?"

"What?" asked Alan.

"The four blasts! You hear 'em now? The four blasts!"

Burr was straining as he listened, and Alan stood still too; no sound came to him but the noise of the storm. "No," he replied. "I don't hear anything. Do you hear them now?"

Burr stood beside him without making reply; the searchlight, which had been pointed abeam, shot its glare forward, and Alan could see Burr's face in the dancing reflection of the flare. The man had never more plainly resembled the picture of Benjamin Corvet; that which had been in the picture, that strange sensation of something haunting him, was upon this man's face, a thousand times intensified; but instead of distorting the features away from all likeness to the picture, it made it grotesquely identical.



The Man Had Never More Plainly Resembled the Picture of Benjamin Corvet.

And Burr was hearing something—something distinct and terrifying; but he seemed not surprised, but rather satisfied that Alan had not heard. He nodded his head at Alan's denial, and, without reply to Alan's demand, he stood listening. Something bent him forward; he straightened; again the something came; again he straightened. Four times Alan counted the motions. Burr was hearing again the four long blasts of distress! But there was no noise but the gale. "The four blasts!" He recalled old Burr's terror outside the radio cabin. The old man was hearing blasts which were not blown!

He moved on and took the wheel. He was a good wheelsman; the vessel seemed to be steadier on her course and, somehow, to steer easier when the old man steered. His illusions of hearing could do no harm, Alan considered; they were of concern only to Burr and to him.

Alan fought to keep his thought all to his duty; they must be now very nearly at the position where the Richardson last had heard the four long blasts; searching for a ship or for boats, in that snow, was almost hopeless. With sight even along the searchlight's beam shortened to a few hundred yards, only accident could bring Number 25 up for rescue, only chance could carry the ship where the shouts—or the blasts of distress if the wreck still floated and had steam—would be heard.

They were meeting frequent and heavy floes, and Alan gave warning of these by hails to the bridge; the bridge answered and when possible the steamer avoided the floes; when it could not do that it cut through them. The windrowed ice beating and crushing under the bows took strange, distorted, glistening shapes. Now another such shape appeared before them; where the glare dissipated to a bare glow in the swirling snow, he saw a vague shadow. The man moving the searchlight failed to see it, for he swung the beam on. The shadow was so dim, so ghostly, that Alan sought for it again before he hailed; he could see nothing now, yet he was surer, somehow, that he had seen.

"Something dead ahead, sir!" he shouted back to the bridge.

The bridge answered the hail as the searchlight pointed forward again. A gust carried the snow in a fierce flurry which the light failed to pierce; from the flurry suddenly, silently, spar by spar, a shadow emerged—the shadow of a ship. It was a steamer, Alan saw, a long, low-lying old vessel without lights and without smoke from the funnel slanting up just forward of the after deckhouse; it rolled in the trough of the sea. The sides and all the lower works gleamed in ghostly phosphorescence, it was refraction of the searchlight beam from the ice sheathing all the ship, Alan's brain told him; but the sight of that soundless, shimmering ship materializing from behind the screen of snow struck a tremor through him.

"Ship!" he hailed. "Ahead! Dead ahead, sir! Ship!"

The shout of quick commands echoed to him from the bridge. Underfoot he could feel a new tumult of the deck; the engines, instantly stopped, were being set full speed astern. But Number 25, instead of sheering off to right or left to avoid the collision, steered straight on.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Last Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. Ole T. Rikansrud's son, Hjalmer, who is employed at Belmond, and Chester Hanson started, by auto, for the Harold Holm farm where a farm bureau social was to be held. While enroute, when it became necessary, Mr. Hanson turned on the lights of the car and a short circuit caused flames to jump up inside of the car. In the excitement Hjalmer jumped out and was thrown violently to the ground, face downward. He received a badly bruised face and a fractured collar bone. He was taken to Belmond and is at the home of his sister where he is recovering nicely. Mr. Hanson had had the same kind of trouble with the car before so did not try to get out of the auto and escaped injury.—Reporter.

RIDING IS POPULAR

Goldfield is one town in the country where a revival of riding is on in full blast. Credit for this may be given to Dr. Kelly, the Goldfield veterinarian, who is an enthusiastic horseman, and who was formerly an instructor in the United States army in the cavalry service. There are not less than forty people in Goldfield and vicinity who are taking riding lessons, and some of these are developing into mighty good riders. At the picnic, to be held in Goldfield this Friday, there will be a regular cavalry drill put on for the peasure of the picnickers. The od time horseman would enjoy this. But the automobile and the craze for speed has nearly done away with the riding horse, except among the people who have means to gratify their love for this sport.—News.

COUNTY PICNIC FOR YOUNGSTERS JULY 27TH

Hold Tyrrell Park Dedication Tonight

Bring Dishes And Sandwiches And Enjoy A Fine Picnic Supper

PROGRAM AFTER SUPPER

The one great event of the summer will be the formal opening of Tyrrell Park this evening, Thursday July 20th.

The donor of the park, Capt. W. C. Tyrrell Sr., of Beaumont, Texas, will be present to witness the pleasure and enjoyment which his generous and beautiful gift will bring to all.

Those who are co-operating with Mr. Tyrrell in making this opening event a success, wish to impress upon the public the fact that the Park is now yours and it is hoped that there will be a large crowd to participate in this initial Park gathering.

Special invitations are extended to all old settlers and to friends of Mr. Tyrrell in the surrounding towns.

A picnic supper will be served at six o'clock with the ladies of the Community Club in charge. Members of the Community Club will be solicited for food. Others are requested to bring dishes and sandwiches for their family and a dish of the following: Salad, Cake, Baked Beans, or Cream Potatoes. Ice cream will be sold by the dish or in cones.

Cars will be on Main Street in front of the Public Library lawn at 5:30 o'clock and will furnish free transportation for those who have no other means of conveyance. The transportation committee are M. C. Barry, C. O. Fitts, E. Bock and W. T. Gfeller.

The following program will be given after the picnic supper.

I Prelude

Drill by School children, Grasshoppers, Fairies, Butterflies.

II "Our Appreciation of Tyrrell Park," W. R. Ramsay, Pres. of Chamber of Commerce.

III Response, W. C. Tyrrell, Sr.

IV Music by Male Quartette.

V Reading, Elizabeth Leinbach.

VI Solo, Bert Nelson.

VII Community Singing—Leader Beatrice Leinbach. Carol Tyrrell, Accompanist.

Mrs. W. [illegible] Rosecrans, Pres. of Community Club.

O YOU WATERMELLON

If early samples of melons are any indication of the kind we are to get here this summer, "We-all are suah gwine to eat watermillions."

They are appearing in our local markets and the price is cheaper than last year. The late summer melons will probobly go down to a quarter as there will be a larger crop of them.

Cantaloupes, too, are cheaper, selling for 10 cents while last year thay were 2 for 25.

Our local advertisers have been trying to tell you folks that fruit is cheaper than last year and still housewives say, "I can't afford to can anything. Fruit is so much higher." Not true, and this little report is written to convince you differently.

This is the last week for Bing cherries. They are a cheap fruit to can because they are large and there is practically no waste. Last year they were $5.00, this year $3.75. In fact, all fruits are 25 percent lower. The price on berries kept up because they were a local product but the fruit now in the market comes from states where there has been plenty of rain. The recent shipments include peaches, apricots, [illegible] with prices lower than [illegible] are not of a

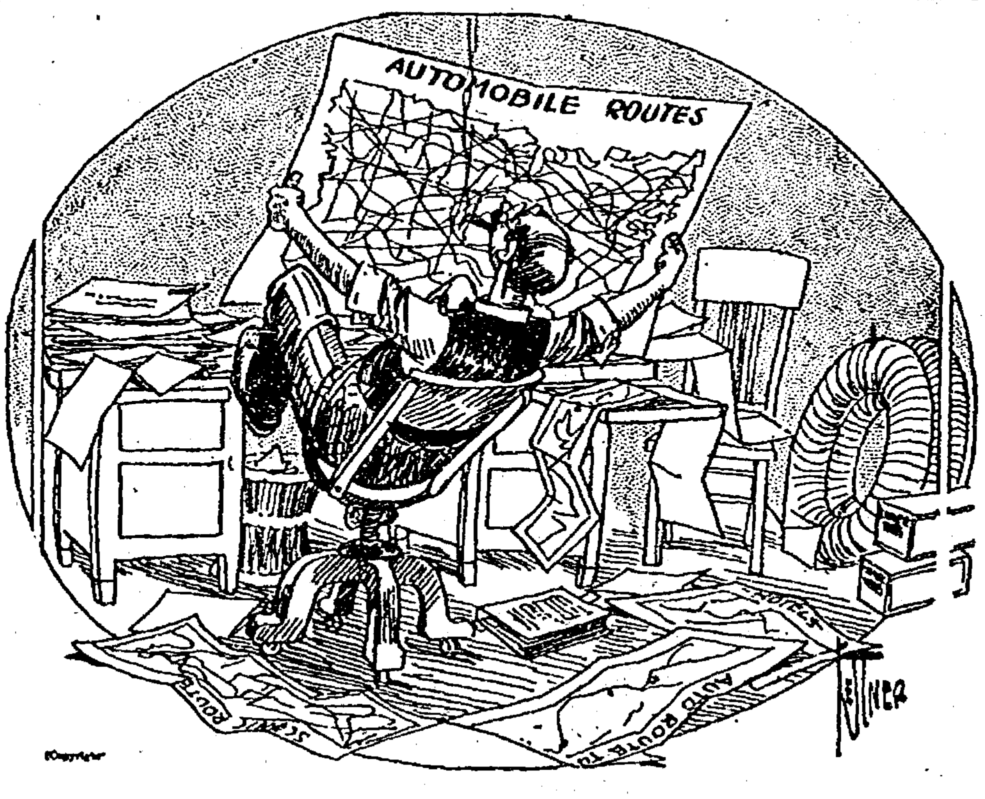
Planning the Summer Campaign



IOWA FALLS ELECTRIC CO. HAS PLENTY OF COAL

The Iowa Falls Electric Company will not be seriously handicapped by the coal shortage, is the opinion of C. E. Bowman, who is at present in charge of the local office of the company. They have a supply which will carry them until the first o the middle of October.

Other Iowa electric companies are not so fortunate as shown by an article in the last week's daily Register of Des Moines.

Thirty-one electric companies of Iowa, replying to the questionnaire sent out during the course of our recent survey, showed that they had on hand only enough coal on an average to last fifty-seven days.

This survey was made by the American Electric Railway Association, and the National Electric Light Association and the American Gas association.

Iowa is a few days better off than the rest of the country, according to the survey, having six days' gas coal supply more than the average for all the states and two days' more coal for electric lighting plants.

The Times-Republican, of Marshalltown, in a recent issue, warns its readers that publication probably will be suspended for lack of power.

Meier defeated Birdsall, 7 up, Geo. Young, Jr., defeated Luick, 1 up Steele defeated Parsons, 4 up, Tyrrell defeated G. W. Young, 2up.

In the second round played in the afternoon, the results were as follows: Meier defeated Geo. Young, Jr. 4 up, Tyrrell defeated Steele, 2 up.

This left a match still to be payed between Meier and Tyrrell for the championship in handicap.

In this match Meier had a handicap of 18 and Tyrrell 10. The final was played last Wednesday evening, with Meier defeating Tyrrell 6 up.

The first event of the golf tournament for the Association of Country Clubs will take place at Eagle Grove, Sunday, July 23rd.

The Clarmond team to meet Eagle Grove consists of W. C. Tyrrell, Jr., Dr. G. H. Steele, Adolph Skovlin, A. L. Luick, Harry Tyrrell, Dr. Meier Mr. Hamilton and Geo. Young, Jr. The alternates are Mr. Birdsall and William Tyrrell.

WARNER—GROH

Miss Lucile Warner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warner, of Parent, Minnesota and Mr. Edmund P. Groh, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Groh of Belmond were united in marriage in Minneapolis, Minnesota by the Rev. Riley, on Friday, July 14th.

After the wedding they left for Bemidji, Minnesota where Mr. Groh has accepted a position in the Egbert Pharmacy.

The bride is a university graduate and formerly taught in Albert Lea, Minnesota. She is a charming and accomplished young woman.

Edmund is a young man whom all Belmond people honor because of his distinguished service in the late World War but, most of all, because he is a model of that type American manhood which we hold as an ideal before our sons.

He enlisted May 9, 1917 at Des Moines and was a pharamists mate, third class, in the navy, until October, when he was detached to the marine corps. He went overseas in April with the Sixth Regiment of the Second Division. For the service rendered his country he has received the Croix de Guerre, the naval Distingu[illegible] Medal, the "Pershing

STRIKEBREAKERS PERSUADED TO LEAVE WORK AT CLAION

Strikebreakers imported by the Great Western railroad to take the place of the shops craft men, who walked out some two weeks ago, were visited at the roundhouse Thursday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, and persuaded to relinquish their work as strikebreakers. The men were escorted to union headquarters in the cement shed west of the Great Western tracks and detained there until the nine o'clock passenger train came in, when most of them departed for Chicago.

Local Great Western officials furnished transportation to the men, some of whom expressed their relief at being out of the roundhouse and off the job.

The Ames college men, recently recruited and sent here, were also among the men working at the roundhouse and they went back to Ames.

So far not much machine work has been handled here or at and of the Great Western division points. The engines are getting in pretty bad condition, and are beginning to be source of alarm to the engineers and firemen.

Clarion wasn't very much excited yesterday. It was rumored around town that the roundhouse was to be visited by a large delegation of employees, and the hour was set at four o'clock. But no one paid much attention to the rumors, which have been flying thick and fast the past two weeks. But shortly after four o'clock it was evident that something was on, and by five o'clock is was generally known up town that the delegation had gone to the roundhouse and asked the men to quit the jobs, and escorted them to the cement shed. The unionists furnished the men their suppers and the railroad company paid them the wages they had coming to them, and things settled down to a normal calm.

Local business men are not curtailing credits because of the strike. They say that any man worthy of credit before the strike will continue to receive it so long as they can possibly furnish it.

Locally, the sentiment favors the men, and there is a feeling that the strike will continue to be conducted without violence. Supt. Fatherson is giving the strikers fair and courteous treatment and the men appreciate his attitude.

It is understood that special deputies appointed for guard duty in the yards, both here and at Eagle Grove, have lost their authority. Sheriff Lang, after learning of the deputizing of these men, found there was no legal basis for such and took up a collection of tin stars.

Today, Friday, local freights in and out of Clarion were annulled, indefinitely. The road will try to continue the thru freights and passenger and mail service, but admittedly the motive power situation is becoming serious. A couple of nights ago No. 6 pulled into Clarion with three engines, two of them having died on the way up. Naturally, trains are running late.

Freight service on the Rock Island has been curtailed to the extent that there is east bound service only every other day and west bound service every day.

Thursday morning around ten strikbreakers were brot to Clarion on No. 5. The train pulled in and passed the station, which was crowded with strikers and curious people, and stopped first near the roundhouse where the strikbreakers car was cut off. Picketing strikers then endeavoring to get in conversation with the strikebreakers, and asked them to come out and discuss the matter, but armed guards on each end of the car prevented the men from coming out. Some also said the strikebreakers were pretty well scared. They seemed to be afraid of being lynched. However, two of the men in the car finally came out and refused to work as strikebreakers.

County Picnic For Boys and Girls

First Picnic Of This Kind Ever Held In Wright County

RADIO PROGRAM GIVEN

Our heading reads, "Picnic for Wright County younsters, July 27th." County Agent Edwards says that means all you folks who feel young at heart and enjoy picnics. The picnic is planned for the boys and girls, but parents are most cordially welcomed and the Radio messages from Ames will interest all.

By R. M. Edwards

All boys and girls of any age, club members, and non-club members, are urged to be thinking about the county wide club rally-picnic, which is being planned for Thursday July 27th at the Goldfield park.

An interesting program, consisting of athletic stunts, club stunts, and demonstrations, and all sorts of supervised games for the smaller youngsters, is being arranged. An interesting list of speakers has been arranged including Paul C. Taff, state leader of boys and girls club work, Miss Hazel Spencer, and probably Miss Josephine Arnquist, state leader of girls club work, also Mr. J. L. Gordon, specialist in poultry club work. An interesting feature of the program will be radio messages received from Ames, given out at the picnic, through a receiving set and amplifier which will be set up on the picnic grounds. Arrangements have been made with the sending station at Ames to have president Pearson and director Bliss give short addresses to the boys and girls at this picnic. This part of the program will be interesting for the youngsters who have never had opportunity to hear radio messages and at the same time they will receive inspirational messages direct from the leaders of our great agricultural institution at Ames.

The program will begin at ten o'clock Thursday morning, July 27th and the day will be filled with loads of fun and good music for the youngsters. Everyone is asked to bring a lunch and come prepared to have a jolly good time. Parents are urged to see that the youngsters get to the picnic. This day may not mean much to the mothers and fathers, but it surely will be a red letter day in the lives of the boys and girls, the men and women, the fathers and mothers of tomorrow. Let us bring the youngsters and make this a real day of jollification for them.

SANDS MEMORIAL CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

On account of the heavy rain of Saturday night and the muddy roads we were considerably below normal in our attendance for last Sunday at all of the services. However we were above the average attendance for the year before.

Next Sunday we hope to make a new high record and then we expect to have our annual picnic the week following. Everyone in his place at 10:00 o'clock next Sunday for Sabbath school and morning worship at 11:00.

The orchestra last Sunday night was greatly appreciated by all and we are going to look forward to our Sundy night services with ag reat deal of expectation from this on. There will be a musical treat in store for us every Sunday night, so come and enjoy the services with us.

The evening services begin at 7:30 and last for one hour and a half.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

WHERE THERE'S A WILL

There comes a time in the experience of every high school graduate when he or she makes the decision for or against a college training. Some of our Belmond young people are pondering that question today, and, it is for the purpose of helping in that final judgment, that this article is written..

The value of college education has often been discussed and most intelligent people are agreed upon that question.

The one great problem which confronts the ambitious young person in these so-called hard times, is "Where shall I get the money?"

Did you know that three-fourths of our Belmond young people who attended college last year, earned all or part of their own expenses?

Then some folks try to tell us that the rising generation are "jazz-mad" and don't know how to work.

In a recent lecture by Dr. Mossman of Morning Side, he told of a young, green, country lad who appeared in his office with the introduction, "Well, I'm here." Dr. Mossman replied, "My boy, its a great thing to have arrived." The young man's having arrived showed some strong incentive behind that arrival and the discovery that he had no funds led the president to believe that he, at least, had "backbone."

After talking with the young man for some time it was found that he was truly in earnest about a college training and willing to do even the humblest work to provide means to realize that ambition.

Dr. Mossman wrote upon a slip of paper, "A man's worth is measured by the extent to which he believes in himself." Shoving the paper across the table he said, "Young man, do you believe that?" "Yes." "Then sign your name to it." Which was done. The president then announced to the astonished but delighted young student, "This slip of paper we will call a note and you may borrow money from the college to a certain amount. You must earn the rest. We shall not require any other security."

Several of the Belmond young people know this young man. He has just finished his second college year with a B plus in every subject and is earning his way by working in the stock yards.

There is a slang phrase, "The first hundred years are the hardest." We do not wish to lead anyone to believe that earning one's way through college is an easy task. But, "the first hundred years are the hardest."

Until the Ambitious One gets adjusted to the hard study, homesickness, and wage earning which will mark his first year, it is going to be hard, and mighty hard. The jolt when one leaves the protection of the home nest is always a hard one.

It has been with deepest of interest and genuine pleasure that we have listened to some of our Belmond boys and girls as we interviewed them upon the question, "How are you paying your college expenses?" They love to talk about it, proud of the fact they are making good. It would do your h[illegible] to see the glow on th[illegible] house with twenty-seven boys who were earning all or part of their expenses. This particular one, from choice, worked in a printing office Saturdays and vacations. He has recently graduated and holds a responsible position with a company in which there are great possibilities in a business way. He was one of ten college boys who were selected by this company from sixty applicants for positions. Each boy was required to give in detail an account of how he had spent his vacations, the names of places where he had worked and the names of his employers during his entire high school and college life.

Would this not seem to indicate that a preference is given by the large corporation to the boy who has had to work his way?

Here is a record which would be hard to equal. A Belmond boy left for college last fall with fifty dollars in his pocket. He came back with more than he had when he started. He had worked in a drug store evenings for seven dollars a week. The other boys helped him a little by loaning him books.

It costs more for the boys to attend college than it does girls because there is the question of expense for entertaining the "best girl." Colleges are beginning to provide plans which will eliminate this expense so that boys do not need to possess a lot of money in order to be in the midst of the social life and to be able to "date." The All-College Party at Coe and several other colleges has proven a popular success in filling this need. Parties are held in the Women's Dormitory every three weeks on Friday night, this date being held open by the faculty on the college calendar.

A nominal admission fee of twenty-five cents is charged to cover the expense of light refreshments and for the orchestra.

Once each quarter a more formal party is given, each class of the college taking their turn at entertainment and decorations. The classes vie with each other in plans for entertainment.

At one of these parties a fine spirit is shown and through inexpensive and not requiring that the men provide flowers and taxis or that anyone should wear evening clothes, there has been a general increase in the companionship and fellowship among the students.

Of course, every student needs some money besides what they are able to earn. One girl says she has been able to get along with two-hundred dollars a year. A part of this she had when beginning her course and the remainder was borrowed.

Most people with money to loan are willing to help worthy students. "I have never lost a nickel of the money I have loaned to college students," says one person who has helped several to get an education.

Another line of work which proved intensely interesting was that done by one of our girls as a paid worker i the night school in the Wall Street Mission in the stock yards district. This was along the line of Americanization among foreign men and women who came to the Mission two nights each for study and classes. Industrial classes were held on Saturday afternoon for the little folks.

This girl also did volunteer work at the Mission on Sunday.

At one time she did mimeograph work in the college office. She also worked two hours each day in the Tea-Shop for her meals.

It seems that the girls must give much more time than the boys for the returns which they get but many girls are working for their board, room and laundry in private homes. They still have a reasonable amount of time left for social life although they do not expect to be able to be a society idol. One girl was very enthusiastic about the treatment she had received in one of the homes where she worked. She was given the married daughter's bed-room for her own, beautifully furnished in [illegible] desire for a college course into an easy job or into marriage because there is nothing else to do. Where there's a will, there's a college education.—Maude Rankins Leonard.

MORE ABOUT VACUUM TUBE AS A DETECTOR

How a "Three-Electrode" Is Connected in a Simple Radio Receiving Circuit.

Obviously working the tube at a point on the upper bend of knee of the characteristic curve would produce the same symmetrical changes in the plate circuit by symmetrical changes in the grid potential as it will if the tube is worked at the lower end of knee of the curve. However, the alternating current applied to the grid would now produce a large decrease and a small increase of the plate current, the reverse of that shown in Fig. 9. The objection to working the tube on the upper bend of knee of the curve is that when no potential is applied to the grid a relatively large current would flow in the plate circuit and rapidly exhaust the "B" battery.

Should the tube, by means of the potential applied to the grid, be made to operate at a point on the characteristic curve midway between the upper and lower bends—that is, on the straight part of the curve, symmetrical variations in the grid potential would cause symmetrical change in the plate circuit current and the tube would not function as a detector.

Fig. 10 shows how a three-electrode vacuum tube is connected in a simple radio receiving circuit. The "B" battery furnishing the necessary plate potential is connected with its positive side through the phones to the plate. The filament is heated to the required temperature by the battery "A." The incoming radio frequency alternating current is applied to the grid and the negative side of the filament through the "C" battery. By connecting the negative side of the filament to the midpoint of the "C" battery a positive potential can be applied to the grid by moving the slider on the "C" battery potentiometer up, or the grid can be made negative with respect to the filament by moving the slider on the "C" battery potentiometer down.

In practice a "C" battery is not used to force a three-electrode vacuum tube to function as a detector. Fig. 11 shows how a so-called grid condenser and a grid leak resistance are used in conjunction with a three-element vacuum tube so that it will function as a detector in a radio receiving circuit.

The grid condenser is connected in series with the grid of the tube and shunted by the grid leak resistance. The grid condenser will allow alternating current to flow to the grid but will not allow any charge that might collect on the grid to flow through it to the filament. The only way a charge that might collect on the grid could flow to the filament would be through the high resistance of about 500,000 to 2,000,000 ohms and would allow the charge on the grid to leak off slowly.

Woolstock and Pleasant Meet

The regular monthly meeting of the Plesant township Farm Bureau, which was held at the E. Jenison home, 4 miles northeaast of Belmond was attended by about three hundred farmers of Pleasant township and the surrounding territory. Mr. A. J. Shinn representing the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, gave the address of the evening, and the report is that Mr. Shinn's address was not only very interesting but very instructive, from the standpoint of facts and figures concerning the present status of the farm bureau organization, both as a state and national organization.

Woolstock township farm bureau held their regular monthly meeting at the Geo. C. Kirstein home, eight and a half miles southeast of Clarion. From two hundred to three hundred Woolstock farmers were in attendance at this meeting to enjoy the interesting program which was put on entirely by local talent.

Mr. C. L. Liddle county agent of Monroe county, Wisconsin, who is visiting at the D. C. Hickox home, gave the address of the evening. Mr. Liddle gave an interesting account of general farm conditions in Wisconsin and drew a comparison between the methods of farming in Wisconsin and those in Iowa. He complimented the Iowa farmers upon their beautiful farm homes and and upon the bountiful fields of corn which we have this season. An interesting feature of this program was the presentation of the So-and-Sew club girls, by Mrs. J. E. Kirstein who has kindly volunteered to be their leader. Everyone comment-upon how nice the girls looked in their club uniforms, and the hope was expressed that the club work should continue for the boys and girls.

Iowa Shippers Support New Firm

Iowa livestock shippers appear to be favorably disposed toward the new cooperative selling agency recently opened at the Union stock yards, under the name Chicago Producers' Commission association. This is indicated by the steady increasing number of consignments of stock from Iowa feed yards from week to week. The record day, so far, was Monday, July 10, when the new firm handled a total of fifty-four cars of cattle and hogs from the Hawkeye state alone.

These producers' commission associations of which there are now five in operation at different terminal markets, representing the beginning of the fulfillment of the livestock marketing plans worked out by the Committee of Fifteen, appointed by the American Farm Bureau federation. They introduce a new and valueable element of competition at the selling end of the livestock industry, and furnish a new and satisfactory outlet for those who believe in cooperative marketing.

New Projects Endorsed

Two business projects of importance to Iowa livestock interests were officially endorsed by the Iowa farm bureau federation at a recent meeting of the executive committee of that organization. One was the "Eat More Meat" campaign that has been launched by the livestock interests of the country, the other the new cooperative selling agency, known as the Chicago Producers' Commission association, which was opened for business about the middle of June.

The "Eat More Meat" campaign has been undertaken for the purpose of combating the anti-meat propaganda so industriously circulated of late years and which has cut down the per capita consumption of meats to an alarming extent. The cam- [illegible] is under the management of [illegible] directors chosen from the [illegible]iations, live stock [illegible]men, pack-president of the meat board and W. J. Carmichael of the National Swine Growers' association is the secretary. Other organizations representated are the Corn Belt Producers' association, National Wool Growers' association, Texas Cattle Growers' association, American National Live Stock association, National Society of Record associations and the various commission associations, packers and retailers as stated.

The Producers' Commission association recently opened for business in Chicago offers a long-looked-for opportunity demanded by Iowa stock shippers who believe in cooperative marketing. It is strictly cooperative in principles and management, and is one of a string of five such selling agencies that have been established by the National Live Stock Producers' association, the others located respectively at St. Louis, Indianapolis, Peori nd Sioux Falls. The resolution of endorsement reads as follows:

"Be it resolved: That we endorse the work of the National Live Stock Producers' association in establishing Live Stock Producers' Commission associations in St. Louis, Indianapolis, Peoria, Sioux Falls and Chicago, and we recommend that the live stock shipping associations and farmers of Iowa who believe in cooperative live stock marketing consign their shipments to the Producers' Commission firms now established at the various market centers."

Listen, Boy!

As someone has truthfully said—"one swallow does not make a summer." But one dinky little screech owl can wake up a whole township and one professional agitator can do more mischief in a week than forty good men can undo in six months. Turn one of these birds loose in a community and after two or three verbal eruptions half the people who listened to him will be "viewing with alarm" and listening nervously for the crack of doom.

The professional agitator is out for the coin. He is an adaptable guy and can agitate just as well on one subject as another—provided the coin is forthcoming. With a stock in trade made up mostly of misrepresentation, villification, superheated bunk and half-baked ballyhoo, he is the champion dissembler of modern times. The truth isn't in him, and he is full of lies and sophistry as a polecat is of perfumery.

Nothing suits this agitator person. Nothing is right. Everything needs fixing. Existing customs, laws and institutions are all on the blink. Business is crooked. Society is rotten. The courts are corrupt. The government is despotic, the people down trodden, and it's a helluva country anyhow—to hear this bird tell it.

He's down on everything and everybody. He dislikes the banks and railroads. He detests the highway commission, abominates the agricultural college, hates the farm bureau, despises the county agent, objects to the way the county nurse powders her nose, and insists that pretty much everybody—himself excepted—should take a five-year vacation. If he had the exclusive privilege of the Big Stick he would swat every institution on the earth and reach for the man in the moon.

Now, it is true things have been rather out of kilter since the big war. Our economic machine hasn't been functioning as smoothly as could be desired. The farm bureau isn't altogether infallible, and the county agent may have handled only nine hundred and eighty-seven thousand projects last year when everybody knows he ought to have disposed of a million. And, while we hate like the dickens to admit it, the county nurse doesn't always get her nose powder on straight.

Still, despite these drawbacks Iowa is a right good state to camp down in. You can tell the world it is. We've got a little more corn on hand than usual for the time of the year. Taxes are fierce, we've got a few debts, and we've got some of these darned agitators. Outside of that we're pretty much all right here in Iowa, and don't allow anybody else to persuade you to the contrary. We can take care of the surplus corn all right enough. What Mr. Hamilton and his Chambers of Commerce don't eat can easily be converted into beef and pork. The debts will be whacked up to the last dollar, and maybe, in the course of time, the professional agitator will talk himself to death.

Yes, Iowa is a great state. There is so much more to glory in and to brag about that it is a sin to waste time listening to the agitator bird. For every shortcomng there is a corresponding blessing to soften the sting. If we have the deepest mud it is because we have the richest land. If we carry the heaviest mortgage indebtness it is because we have the most valueable farms and are doing the biggest business. If taxes are high it is chiefly because we have the finest system of schools. And if our flappers wear the shortest skirts—there's even some kicking about that—it is because they can sport the prettiest stockings.

You bet, Iowa's a good place to live. Pass the optimism, please and everybody take a double helping.

Common Barberry Campaign

Four men representing the United States department of agriculture have been in Wright county during the past two weeks carrying on a campaign for the eradication of the common barberry, which causes the black stem rust. This work is being carried on by the United States department of agriculture in cooperation with the agricultural extension department at Ames.

Reports to the United States department of agriculture show that common barberry bushes throughout the northwest are now rusting. This rust on the common barberry is the parent of the rust which later in the year will be found on your wheat, oats, barley, and rye. The latter rust comes only from the barberry. Every common barberry bush destroyed during June, means a saving to the farmers of many dollars worth of grain when harvesting comes around.

MR. MERCHANT

You Need the Newspaper

The newspaper of today is the most powerful medium of advertising on earth. In the old days the merchant may have thought he was a benefactor and that he was contributing his bit "as a public-spirited citizen" when he carried a two-inch space in the village paper every week in the year and generally without change of copy. Possibly he was.

But that is changed now. A new order has arrived. People read advertisements. Many find their greatest interest in looking over the advertising pages to get news that will save them money, and, take it from John D. Rockefeller, the way to save your dollars is first to save your pennies.

Advertisements today are right up to the minute. They are as fresh as the news of the world or the latest baseball score. Live merchants cater to live people and they know they must not alone be up to the minute, but they must be some distance ahead. They must anticipate the wants of their customers.

And they do. Turn to the advertisements in this paper right now. Just read what the merchants are offering. Notice the invitations for you to do business with them. Notice how attractively the advertisements are set up and how inviting they are.

Do you know that some firms think so much of a style of type that they buy series of it just for their advertisement? You can never mistake B. Altman's advertisement. As soon as you see the open type you know it is Altman's advertisement without looking for the name. This is true of many firms.

Business men—that is the successful ones—know advertising pays big returns. Unsuccessful men don't advertise because they are unsuccessful. That's the answer. Look over your town right now and pick out the big firms. They're the advertisers. Advertising is the tonic that puts dividends in the banks.

Everybody reads advertisements today. Mr. Merchant, is your advertisement in this newspaper?

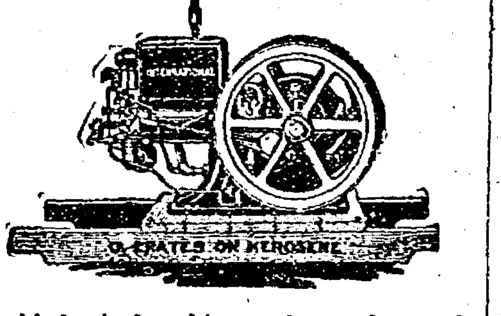
Vol. 1 BELMOND, IOWA, JULY 20, 1922. NO. 20.

If one woman had all the clothes she wanted, more than likely the rest of them would have to go around in barrels.

Taking the line of least resistance is what makes rivers—and some men—so crooked.

A "Mother's" Helper

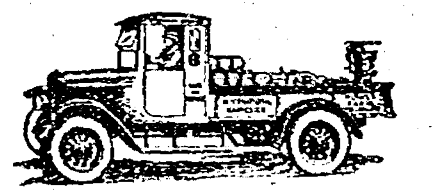
You believe in having up-to-date labor saving machinery on the farm. You know it pays. But does "Mother" have the means of lightening her daily work during this hot weather? Does she still use an old fashioned, nerve-wrecking washing machine, or perhaps even the old back breaking tub and washboard? Is she still using the old hand churn? "Mother" deserves something better and she would appreciate it if you would hitch a good washing machine together with other conveniences to a small International Kerosene Engine—an engine she can easily operate—a real "Mother's" helper. Try it, and watch her smile.



Character is what you are. Reputation is only what men think you are.

It Runs in the Family

Our "Red Baby" and all its Brothers are real Go-Getters. Take our "Red Baby" for instance, it's on the job every minute hustling around and doing honest-to-gosh work. You may not be in the same business we are in, but it's a ten to one shot that whatever your business one of "Red Baby's" Brothers would be just the candy for you. They are great trucks—these Internationals—and there's more honest-to-goodness service in them than in any other truck we've ever seen. Come in or stop our "Red Baby"—let's talk it over.



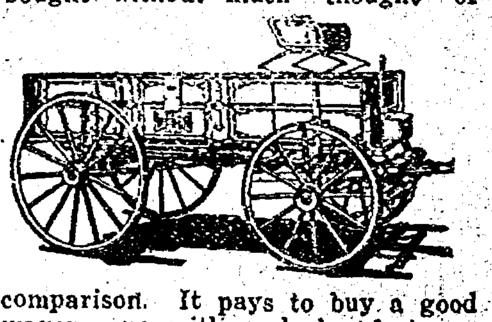
Did you ever catch the man who finds fault with his wife's cooking trying his hand at it himself? Hardly, he knows better.

Oats Down? Pipe This!

Automatic Grain Lifters will save that patch of down and tangled oats. They fit any binder and will more than pay for themselves in two or three rounds. Better come in and get yours now—they are going fast.

Weber—King of All

A wagon is something that is usually used a great deal, getting lots of abuse, yet many times it is bought without much thought or comparison. It pays to buy a good wagon—one with exclusive features, good workmanship, and high-grade materials. The Weber meets all these requirements. It is truly "The King of All Farm Wagons."



Nature's Smiling

Doesn't it make a fellow feel good to see how the corn has been growing the last week or two? It sure does. One just can't help feeling fine when all Nature is smiling and trying to outdo herself.

Give the Cow a Chance

A good cow and a Primrose cream separator will turn green grass into golden butter fat—producing a cash crop every day of the year. The Primrose gets ALL the cream.

The raising of a beard is about the only thing that the women can't or won't do nowadays.

Good Job Printing Is Essential To
Good Business

Good job printing and good business go hand in hand---and it is very necessary to the welfare of your business that your printing is given careful attention as to make-up, style, quality of stock used, ink and presswork---in fact everything that goes into a real job of printing.

* * *

Perhaps you need some letterheads, and envelopes to match, or maybe some statements. Try us on some of your printing. You'll say "That's fine."

* * *

And our prices are as low as you will find anywhere---considering quality. We will gladly quote you prices on request, and show you samples of our work.

THE STEADY SUBSCRIBER

From on old friend who encloses a year's subscription with a letter, comes the following psalm tune and words. All newspaper folks may rise and join in the chorus which is as follows:

"How dear to our heart is the steady shuscriber,
Who pays in advance of the birth of each year,
Who lays down the money and does it quite gladly,
And casts around the office a halo of cheer,
He never says, "Stop it; I cannot afford it,
I'm getting more papers now than I read;"
But always says, "Send it; our people all like it—
In fact we all think is a help and a need."
How welcome his check when it reaches our sanctum;
How it makes our pulse throb; how it makes our heart dance!
We outwardly thank him; we inwardly bless him—
The steady subscriber who pays in advance."

Poultry Culling to Begin Soon

The poultry culling work in Wright county will be conducted this year by a poultry specialist from the extension department at Ames, the work will be done on a commercial basis at the rate of:

Two cents per bird, in flocks of 100 or more birds.

Three cents per bird, in flocks of less thn 100 birds.

Five cents per bird, for non-members of the farm bureau.

Those wishing their flocks culled according to the above schedule should write or call the county agent at once, in order that the schedule may be arranged so that the commercial culler may know definitely the schedule to be followed in culling the flocks. The applications are coming in fast and those who expect to have the culling work done should lose no time in sending in their applications.

attributes his success to the fact that he always made the other fellow put his proposition down in Black and White.

That's what the merchants of this town are doing for you. Their advertisements speak for themselves in black and white. And what they put down in black and white they stand back of.

They want your business. Their advertisements are an invitation to do business with them.

That's why they advertise, and the wise housekeeper never does her shopping nowadays until she has read the advertisements and posted herself on prices.

Is there an easier or better way of saving money?

It only requires a few minutes of your time to scan the advertisements.

The Boy Scout's motto is "Be Prepared."

That's what every housewife should be when she goes out to market.

Read the advertisements and you will not alone save many times the cost of the subscription to this paper, but you will save many dollars to add to your bank account.

Reading advertisements in this paper is profitable reading.

Try it for a month and check up the pennies you will save.

That's another Rockefeller maxim: "Save your pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves."

There are hundreds of pennies to be saved by reading the advertisements in this paper every issue.

One of the largest crowds that ever visited Hampton on any one day attended the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus there last Wednesday. Officials of the show stated it was the largest day's business of the season although they had showed in several large cities including Mason City and Dubuque in Iowa. In the afternoon the crowd was so large that fully a 1,000 people sat on a canvas spread on the ground on the "speedway" between the seats and the performing rings of the circus. There were over 9,000 paid admissions in the afternoon at $1.75 a ticket which amounts to a small amount of money.

MORE HOGS STOLEN

Fred Gordon, 1020 First Street, had two good sized shoats stolen from his farm six miles southwest of this city last week. He had a large herd of hogs on the farm and more undoubtedly would have been stolen if they had not been so wild. Many framers in this section have been visited during the past several weeks and relieved of chickens, hogs or whatever young animals could be carried away in an automobile. The automobile tracks were plainly discernible on the Gordon farm, showing where the thieves had driven up and loaded in the hogs.—News.

GOATS HERE MONDAY

Chroicle: B. T. Fuqua, national secretary for the Glacier Trail Association and forerunner of the goat-drawn wagon which is touring the train this this summer for publicity purposes, was in Hampton one day last week. He announced that the goat team with its cargo, which consists of Fred Oster and Dave Buringame students of the University of Minnesota, will arrive here next Monday, July 17th, without fail.

"Since leaving St. Louis three or four weeks ago, that goat team, hitched to cleverly designed wagon which imitates the old fashioned prairie schooner, has never failed to travel on schedule," said Mr. Fuqua. "They're averaging twenty-miles a day, or rather in half a day, for the boys stop over a half a day in every place."

The drivers of the great team haye with them 3,000 feet of moving picture film boosting for the highway. In most of the towns visited so far they have been entertained by the Commercial Clubs, and in one or two towns a contest has been staged by the Boy Scout troops of the city. Hampton's plans for receiving the schooner have not been announced yet.

The slogan of the Glacier Trail is "From Everglades to Glaciers." The road extends from Miami, Florida, to Portland, Oregan, beginning marked from St. Louis to the Glacier Park region. The remained will be marked this season, Mr. Fuqua announced. Thru Iowa highway comes up from Oskaloosa, Grinnell, Marshalltown, Eldora, Ackley and at Hampton it joins the Jefferson highway and runs over the same road between here and St. Paul. Last year the trail brought thousands of tourists into Hampton, principally from the south.

The boys are driving the goat team thru from St. Louis to the Glacier National Park, the purpose of the trip being to advertise the Glacier Highway.

CAN IOWA HOUSEWIVES MAKE GOOD CORN BREAD?

Of course they can.

Iowa farmers grow more and better corn than is produced in an equal territory anywhere else in the world. And corn is as good foodstuff as wheat. The more general use of corn as a food will result in greater and more constant prosperity for Iowa, besides adding to the variety and palatability of the home menu.

Where should the value of corn be more recognized or its use as a food more general than in Iowa? Where are there cooks better able to make corn highly prized as an article in the family diet?

In order to stimulate interest among Iowa housewives in the making of cornbread, the editor of the Iowa Magazine section have secured the cooperation of the state fair board, the Iowa Bankers' Association and most of the county fairs in the state in statewide cornbread competitions. The State Bankers' Association is offering a special prize of $25 for the best corn bread entered at the 1922 Iowa State Fair. This newspaper through the Iowa Magazine section offers a special prize of $2 for the best corn bread entered at the county fairs, in addition to the prizes offered by the fair associations in each instance.

The possibilities of Chautauqua week are emphasized in the announcement from Clarinda, Page county, that the Twelfth Annual Camp of the Golden Maids and the thirteenth annual farm camp will be held August 8-17. The days will be filled with a regular camp program and the evening left free for full enjoyment of the chautauqua assembly. On farmers' night the entire camp will appear on the platform and stunt night will be made interesting by friendly rivalry of each tent competing for the best production. Taps will be sounded at 9:45 at which time all campers will promptly return to their tents. Total cost of this ten days' camp for boys and girls is $8.50, which encludes a chautauqua ticket. Medals will be awarded for proficiency in class work and merits in general camp spirit.

Mrs. Stinson of Hampton came the latter part of last week for a visit here at the home of her daughter, Mrs. F. Ralston.

RETIRING TO RUN A NEWSPAPER

NOTE BOOK HABIT GREAT HELP IN HOME MAKING

By H. J. Metcalf

Farm women in every county in Iowa are awakening to the fact that they can be of great service in bringing about better conditions on the farm. The fact that they are being recognized as a most important factor in the success of the farm bureau movement, which has so successfully swept the country of recent years and their ready response in meeting the conditions imposed on them, augurs well for their future success in that great organization.

There never has been a time when the woman on the farm has had a greater opportunity to take her place in the great progressive movements which are at this time stirring the agricultural world. She has the strength, and better yet, there is the great need for her refining influence on the great problems which confront agriculture today.

Harrison county, like many other counties in Iowa, has a wealth of farm women talent. All it needs is cultivation and a little coaxing to bring it out. At a recent meeting of the farm bureau in Harrison county, Mrs. Curtis Reeve of Jefferson township, was called on to deliver a talk on the value of the note book in home making. Her talk was a most helpful one and is given herewith:

"When suggesting at the women's meeting last fall that note book keeping was a great help in home making, there was no thought that the suggestion would go any further. So it was with a feeling of dismay that I heard our Chairman announce later on that a talk would be given by myself on the note book habit. It is one thing to make a suggestion and an entirely different matter to enlarge on it. But I feel the only way our farm bureau can be a success is for all members to do their best with the mork their leaders assign them. So going about my work I kept thinking the subject over and finally decided to tell you some of the different ways in which note books and scrap books have proven useful to me.

Many people have the habit of collecting poems and receipts for cooking. I myself began to do that when a mere girl. There are many more far-reaching ways of using a note book. It is a great help at Christmas time. Each year just after the holidays, I make out two lists, one of the gifts received, with the donor's name after each gift, the other of the pesents given and the names of those who received them. Often below these lists a note is made of some little gift which would be nice to give some friend the next Christmas. In this way I am not so apt to send someone a handkerchief for three years in succession.

You will find shopping for a family of growing children much easier if you keep a list of the sizes of shoes, stockings, caps, etc. that each one wears. You will be pretty safe in buying John No. 6½ shoes if the last ones he had were 6's, at least the list will give you a pretty good idea what sizes to call for.

Mothers can often be of more help to their children in their school work if they have a supply of interesting short stories, historical anecdotes and good current events on hand. The more the home can supplement the school the stronger the school work will be.

The advertisments in our magazines and newspapers are often a source of eduction along many lines if we will make a study of them. I sometimes think I get nearly as much good out of the ideas from the editorials. We may get just the idea we want for placing a piece of furniture to the best advantage or the artictic hanging of some picture or the proper treatment of a window, by clipping out an artistic furniture advertisement.

I often clip out ads for books and pictures which I may wish to buy some time and file them away for future use. I remember years ago when my older boy was a baby my husband read and called my attention to an article in one of our magazines on child culture. The author mentioned a book on the care and feeding of children by a noted child doctor and gave the publisher's address. Thinking the book might be needed some time, I copied the name in my note book. A few months later, finding that our baby had unusually weak digestion, I looked up the address and sent for the book. It was one of the greatest helps I had in raising my children and I have since noticed that this same little volume is on the book shelves of several of our doctors."—Times.

ELEPHANTS ESCAPE AT MASON CITY

Seven of the twelve elephants in the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus escaped from their cars Tuesday morning when the circus train, southbound on the Milwaukee short line between Mason City and Austin, Minnesota, crashed into a north bound Rock Island passenger train at Plymouth Junction, nine miles orth of Mason City at 3:00 o'clock.

After roaming in the corn fields for an hour or so they were rounded up by their keepers and put to practical use in restoring three sleeping cars to the tracks.

"Chopsey," billed as the largest elephant in captivity, rendered especially valiant service.

Seven persons were reported injured slightly in early reports, but their names could not be procured. They were taken to Manly for treatment. A dense fog is blamed by the engineer on the circus train for the mishap. Both trains were crawling along or the casualties would have been high. The Milwaukee engine crashed into the rear sleeper of the Rock Island train, however, shoving it and the two cars ahead of it off the rails. The jolt of the circus train was sufficient to open the doors into the elephants cars and in their fright the animals leaped out and scampered away. Some of the trained horses are reported to have sustained slight injuries.—Globe-Gazette.

SELL YOUR SURPLUS POULTRY NOW

It is the general opinion among poultry dealers that the price of all kinds of poultry will be much lower this fall than last season. We have interviewed the local poultry men, and, although they have no official reports to that effect, it is their general opinion that the over supply cannot fail to create a lower price later on.

There is a stupendous amount of poultry being raised this year. One reason is the fact that farmers are beginning to realize that this crop is a real money-maker and not just a side-line, also, because of the dry season, it has been an exceptional summer in which to raise chicks without loss.

Where the farmer's wife formerly raised two or three hundred chicks, she, this year, has from five to eight hundred. In fact, flocks from eight hundred to eleven hundred are quite common.

The town people, too have taken up the business and we see double the number of city chicken yards as formerly. One dealer says he bought most of his springs this year from town people.

It seems to be the general opinion that now is the time to sell if your springs weigh two pounds or more.

Don't try to sell them too small. One dealer had some so small today he couldn't keep them in the crate.

There seems no reason for the fact but hens are keeping up in price being about the same as they were before the Fourth.

There was an oversupply of springs before the Fourth but the price reacted last week.

The price of eggs is exceptionally good for this time of the year. The department of agriculture reported an increase of 2,046,000 cases of eggs in storage compared with the report of July 1st last year. Dealers predicted a drop to 10 or 12 cents but the price still holds up.

By holding the springs, one runs the risk of loss by animals, disease and thieves.

The chicken thief is already beginning his annual raids, one widow woman between here and Alexander missing forty-five hens last week and a party south of town lost forty.

Sell now while the price is good.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes his employer is dead. He also tells him the legend of the Indian Drum, which according to old superstition beats once for every life lost on the Great Lakes. Twenty years before, the great freighter Miwaka had gone down with twenty-five on board, but the Drum had sounded for only twenty-four, leaving the inference that one person had been saved, since it was general belief that the drum never erred. Pursuing a stranger who had made a disturbance at his house, Alan is slugged and rendered unconscious.

CHAPTER IX.—Conrad recovers, and the affair remains a mystery.

CHAPTER X.—Alan learns from Wassaquam that it was Corvet's habit to keep the sum of [illegible] in the house, apparently to meet the demands of a certain "Luke," who appeared periodically. In the absence of Wassaquam, "Luke" comes to the house demanding to see Corvet. He is evidently in a dying condition, due to alcohol and exposure. Conrad tries without avail to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. The man dies. Wassaquam gives Conrad a paper on which is a list of names.

CHAPTER XI.—From the document Alan thinks he may have a clue to the mystery surrounding Corvet's life and disappearance. He leaves Chicago to visit Lake Michigan ports in search of the persons whose names were on the list.

CHAPTER XII.—Constance receives a package wrapped in a muffler which she recognises Corvet was wearing on the day he went away. It contains a few coins, a watch, and woman's wedding ring. She believes them to have been the property of Corvet, and accepts them as a proof of his death. Spearman urges Constance to marry him. She consents, but refuses his demand for an immediate ceremony.

CHAPTER XIII.—Inquiries show that the watch in the package had been the property of a Captain Stafford, commander of the Miwaka, who had gone down with his ship.

CHAPTER XIV.—Working on a lake freighter, Alan becomes acquainted with an elderly man known as "Jim Burr," who seems to be possessed of information which Alan believes would only be known to Corvet.

CHAPTER XV.—Alan secures a position on the freighter of which "Burr" is wheelsman. He is satisfied he has found the man he believes to be his father. "Burr," at the wheel of the freighter, apparently in dementia, refuses to obey orders to change the vessel's course, and the ship collides with a derelict. In almost sinking condition they attempt to reach port. The loaded freight cars which the vessel is carrying break loose.

The struggle of the engines against the momentum of the ferry told that others had seen the gleaming ship, or, at least, had heard the hail. The skipper's instant decision had been to put to starboard; he had bawled that to the wheelsman, "Hard over!" But, though the screws turned full astern, Number 25 steered straight on. The flurry was blowing before the bow again; back through the snow the ice-shrouded shimmer ahead retreated. Alan leaped away and up to the wheelhouse.

Men were struggling there—the skipper, a mate, and old Burr, who had held the wheel. He clung to it yet, as [illegible] trance, fixed, staring ahead; [illegible] been holding Num- [illegible] skipper threw all who had nothing to hold by, flat upon the deck; then Number 25 moved by; astern her now the silent steamer vanished in the snow.

Gongs boomed below; through the new confusion and the cries of men, orders began to become audible. Alan, scrambling to his knees, put an arm under old Burr, half raising him; the form encircled by his arm struggled up. The skipper, who had knocked Burr away from the wheel, ignored him now. The old man, dragging himself up and holding to Alan, was staring with terror at the snow screen behind which the vessel had disappeared. His lips moved.

"It was a ship!" he said; he seemed speaking more to himself than to Alan.

"Yes," Alan said. "It was a ship; and you thought—"

"It wasn't there!" the wheelsman cried. "It's—it's been there all the time all night, and I'd—I'd steered through it ten times, twenty times, every few minutes; and then—that time it was a ship!"

Alan's excitement grew greater; he seized the old man again. "You thought it was the Miwaka!" Alan exclaimed. "The Miwaka! And you tried to steer through it again."

"The Miwaka!" old Burr's lips reiterated the word. "Yes; yes—the Miwaka!"

He struggled, writhing with some agony not physical. Alan tried to hold him, but now the old man was beside himself with dismay. He broke away and started aft. The captain's voice recalled Alan to himself, as he was about to follow, and he turned back to the wheelhouse.

The second officer, who had gone below to ascertain the damage done to the ferry, came up to report. Two of the compartments, those which had taken the crush of the collision, had flooded instantly; the bulkheads were holding—only leaking a little, the officer declared. Water was coming into a third compartment, that at the stern; the pumps were fighting this water. The shock had sprung seams elsewhere; but if the after compartment did not fill, the pumps might handle the rest.

Alan was at the bow again on lookout duty, ordered to listen and to look for the little boats. He gave to that duty all his conscious attention; but through his thought, whether he willed it or not, ran a riotous exultation. As he paced from side to side and hailed and answered hails from the bridge, and while he strained for sight and hearing through the gale-swept snow, the leaping pulse within repeated, "I've found him! I've found him!" Alan held no longer possibility of doubt of old Burr's identity with Benjamin Corvet, since the old man had made plain to him that he was haunted by the Miwaka. Since that night in the house on Astor street, when Spearman shouted to Alan that name, everything having to do with the secret of Benjamin Corvet's life had led, so far as Alan could follow it, to the Miwaka; all the change, which Sherrill described but could not account for, Alan had laid to that. Corvet only could have been so haunted by that ghostly ship, and there had been guilt of some awful sort in the old man's cry. Alan had found the man who had sent him away to Kansas when he was a child, who had supported him there and then, at last, sent for him; who had disappeared at his coming and left him all his possessions and his heritage of disgrace, who had paid blackmail to Luke, and who had sent, last, Captain Stafford's watch and the ring which came with it—the wedding ring.

Alan pulled his hand from his glove and felt in his pocket for the little band of gold. What would that mean to him now; what of that was he to learn? And, as he thought of that, Constance Sherrill came more insistently before him. What was he to learn for her, for his friend and Benjamin Corvet's friend, whom he, Uncle Benny, had warned not to care for Henry Spearman, and then had gone was numbed now; ice from the spray crackled upon his clothing when he moved, and it fell in flakes upon the deck. The stark figure on the bridge was that of the second officer; so the thing which was happening below—the thing which was sending strange, violent, wanton tremors through the ship—was serious enough to call the skipper below, to make him abandon the bridge at this time! The tremors, quite distinct from the steady tremble of the engines and the thudding of the pumps, came again. Alan, feeling them, jerked up and stamped and beat his arms to regain sensation. Some one stumbled toward him from the cabins now, a short figure in a great coat. It was a woman, he saw as she hailed him—the cabin maid.

"I'm taking your place!" she shouted to Alan. "You're wanted—every one's wanted on the car deck! The cars—" The gale and her fright stopped her voice as she struggled for speech. "The cars—the cars are loose!"

CHAPTER XVI

"He Killed Your Father."

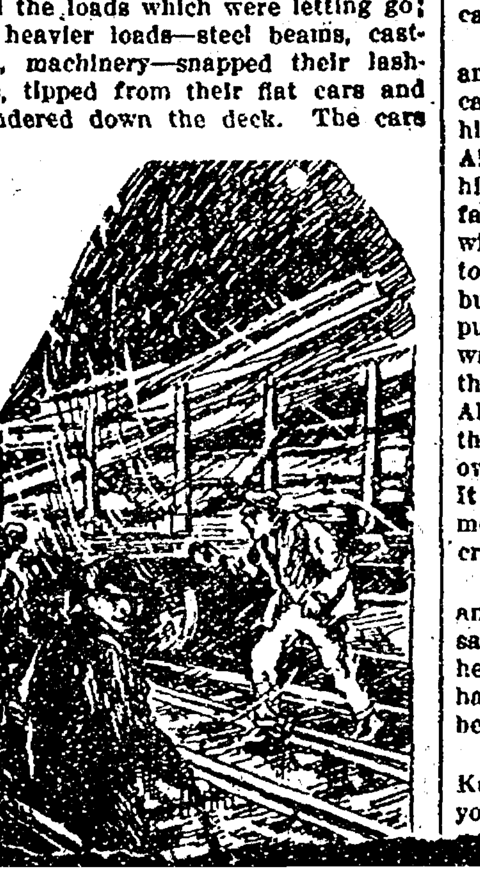
Alan ran aft along the starboard side, catching at the rail as the deck tilted; the sounds within the hull and the tremors following each sound came to him more distinctly as he advanced. Taking the shortest way to the car deck, he turned into the cabins to reach the passengers' companionway. The noises from the car deck, no longer muffled by the cabins, clanged and resounded in terrible tumult; with the clang and rumble of metal rose shouts and roars of men.

To liberate and throw overboard heavily loaded cars from an endangered ship was so desperate an undertaking and so certain to cost life that men attempted it only in final extremities, when the ship must be lightened at any cost. Alan had never seen the effect of such an attempt, but he had heard of it as the fear which sat always on the hearts of the men who navigate the ferries—the cars loose on a rolling, lurching ship! He was going to that now. The car deck was a pitching, swaying slope; the cars nearest him were still upon their tracks, but they tilted and swayed uglily from side to side; the jacks were gone from under them; the next cars already were hurled from the rails, their wheels screaming on the steel deck, clanging and thudding together in their couplings.

Alan ran aft between them. All the crew who could be called from deck and engine room and firehold were struggling at the fantail, under the direction of the captain, to throw off the cars. The mate was working as one of the men, and with him was Benjamin Corvet. The crew already must have loosened and thrown over the stern three cars from the two tracks on the port side; for there was a space vacant; and as a car charged into that space and the men threw themselves upon it, Alan leaped with them.

It was a flat car laden with steel beams. At Corvet's command, the crew ranged themselves beside it with bars. The bow of the ferry rose to some great wave and, with a cry to the men, Corvet pulled the pin. The others thrust with their bars, and the car slid down the sloping track; and Corvet, caught by some lashing of the beams, came with it. Alan leaped upon it and, catching Corvet, freed him and flung him down to the deck, and dropped with him. A cheer rose as the car cleared the fantail, dove and disappeared.

Alan clambered to his feet. Corvet already was back among the cars again, shouting orders; the mate and the men who had followed him before leaped at his yells. Corvet called to them to throw ropes and chains to bind the loads which were letting go; the heavier loads—steel beams, castings, machinery—snapped their lashings, tipped from their flat cars and thundered down the deck. The cars



The fore trucks fell and, before the rear trucks reached the edge, the stern lifted and caught the car in the middle; it balanced, half over the water, half over the deck. Corvet crouched under the car with a crowbar; Alan and two others went with him; they worked the car on until the weight of the end over the water tipped it down; the balance broke, and the car tumbled and dived. Corvet, having cleared another hundred tons, leaped back, calling to the crew.

They followed him again, unquestioning, obedient. Alan followed close to him. It was not pity which stirred him now for Benjamin Corvet; nor was it bitterness; but it certainly was not contempt. Of all the ways in which he had fancied finding Benjamin Corvet, he had never thought of seeing him like this!

It was, probably, only for a flash; but the great quality of leadership which he had once possessed, which Sherrill had described to Alan and which had been destroyed by the threat over him, had returned to him in this desperate emergency which he had created. How much or how little of his own condition Corvet understood, Alan could not tell; it was plain only that he comprehended that he had been the cause of the catastrophe, and in his fierce will to repair it he not only disregarded all risk to himself; he also had summoned up from within him and was spending the last strength of his spirit. But he was spending it in a losing fight.

He got off two more cars; yet the deck only dipped lower, and water washed farther and farther up over the fantail. Men, leaping from before the charging cars, got caught in the murderous melee of iron and steel and wheels; men's shrill cries came amid the scream of metal. Alan, tugging at a crate which had struck down a man, felt aid beside him and, turning, he saw the priest whom he had passed on the stairs. The priest was bruised and bloody; this was not his first effort to aid. Together they lifted an end of the crate; they bent—Alan stepped back, and the priest knelt alone, his lips repeating the prayer for absolution. Screams of men came from behind; and the priest rose and turned. He saw men caught between two wrecks of cars crushing together; there was no moment to reach them; he stood and raised his arms to them, his head thrown back, his voice calling to them, as they died, the words of absolution.

Three more cars at the cost of two lives the crew cleared, while the sheathing of ice spread over the steel inboard, and dissolution of all the cargo became complete. Cut stone and motor parts, chasses and castings, furniture and beams, swept back and forth, while the cars, burst and splintered, became monstrous missiles hurtling forward, sidewise, aslant, recoiling. Yet men, though scattered singly, tried to stay them by ropes and chains while the water washed higher and higher. Dimly, far away, deafened out by the clangor, the steam whistle of Number 25 was blowing the four long blasts of distress; Alan heard the sound now and then with indifferent wonder. All destruction had come for him to be contained within this car deck; here the ship loosed on itself all elements of annihilation; who could aid it from without? Alan caught the end of a chain which Corvet flung him and, though he knew it was useless, he carried it across from one stanchion to the next. Something, sweeping across the deck, caught him and carried him with it; it brought him before the coupled line of trucks which hurtled back and forth where the rails of track three had been. He was hurled before them and rolled over; something cold and heavy pinned him down; and upon him, the car trucks came.

But, before them, something warm and living—a hand and bare arm catching him quickly and pulling at him, tugged him a little farther on. Alan, looking up, saw Corvet beside him; Corvet, unable to move him farther, was crouching down there with him. Alan yelled to him to leap, to twist aside and get out of the way; but Corvet only crouched closer and put his arms over Alan; then the wreckage came upon them, driving them apart. As the movement stopped, Alan still could see Corvet dimly by the glow of the incandescent lamps overhead; the truck separated them. It bore down upon Alan, holding him motionless and, on the other side, it crushed upon Corvet's legs.

He turned over, as far as he could, and spoke to Alan. "You have been saving me, so now I tried to save you," he said simply. "What reason did you have for doing that? Why have you been keeping by me?"

"I'm Alan Conrad of Blue Rapids, Kansas," Alan cried to him. "And you're Benjamin Corvet! You know ids. You know about me; are you my father, Ben Corvet? Are you my father or what—what are you to me?"

"Your father?" Corvet repeated. "Did he tell you that? He killed your father."

"Killed him? Killed him, how?"

"Of course. He killed them all—all. But your father—he shot him; he shot him through the head!"

Alan twinged. Sight of Spearman came before him as he had first seen Spearman, cowering in Corvet's library in terror at an apparition. "And the bullet hole above the eye!" So that was the hole made by the shot Spearman fired which had killed Alan's father—which shot him through the head! Alan peered at Corvet and called to him.

"Father Benitot!" Corvet called in response, not directly in reply to Alan's question, rather in response to what those questions stirred. "Father Benitot!"

Some one, drawn by the cry, was moving wreckage near them. A hand and arm with a torn sleeve showed; Alan could not see the rest of the figure, but by the sleeve he recognized that it was the mate.

"Who's caught here?" he called down.

"Benjamin Corvet of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman, ship owners of Chicago," Corvet's voice replied deeply, fully; there was authority in it and wonder too—the wonder of a man finding himself in a situation which his recollection cannot explain.

"Ben Corvet!" the mate shouted in surprise; he cried it to the others, those who had followed Corvet and obeyed him during the hour before and had not known why. The mate tried to pull the wreckage aside and make his way to Corvet; but the old man stopped him. "The priest, Father Benitot! Send him to me. I shall never leave here; send Father Benitot!"

The word was passed without the mate moving away. The mate, after a minute, made no further attempt to free Corvet; that indeed was useless, and Corvet demanded his right of sacrament from the priest who came and crouched under the wreckage beside him.

"Father Benitot!"

"I am not Father Benitot. I am Father Perron of L'Anse."

"It was to Father Benitot of St. Ignace I should have gone, Father! . . .

The priest got a little closer as Corvet spoke, and Alan heard only voices now and then through the sounds of clanging metal and the drum of ice against the hull. The mate and his helpers were working to get him free. They had abandoned all effort to save the ship; it was settling. And with the settling, the movement of the wreckage imprisoning Alan was increasing. This movement made useless the efforts of the mate; it would free Alan of itself in a moment, if it did not kill him; it would free or finish Corvet too. But he, as Alan saw him, was wholly oblivious of that now. His lips moved quietly, firmly; and his eyes were fixed steadily on the eyes of the priest.

CHAPTER XVII

Mr. Spearman Goes North.

The message, in blurred lettering and upon the flimsy tissue paper of a carbon copy—that message which had brought tension to the offices of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman and had called Constance Sherrill and her mother downtown where further information could be more quickly obtained—was handed to Constance by a clerk as soon as she entered her father's office. She reread it; it already had been repeated to her over the telephone.

"4:05 a. m. Frankfort Wireless station has received following message from Number 25: 'We have Benjamin Corvet, of Chicago, aboard.'"

"You've received nothing later than this?" she asked.

"Nothing regarding Mr. Corvet, Miss Sherrill," the clerk replied.

"The crew?"

"Yes; we have just got the names of the crew." He took another copied sheet from among the pages and handed it to her, and she looked swiftly down the list of names until she found that of Alan Conrad.

Her eyes filled, blinding her, as she put the paper down, and began to take off her things. She had been clinging determinedly in her thought to the belief that Alan might not have been aboard the ferry. Alan's message, which had sent her father north to meet the ship, had implied plainly that some one whom Alan believed might be Uncle Benny was on Number 25; she had been fighting, these last few hours, against conviction that therefore Alan must be on the ferry, too.

She stood by the d[illegible]

Constance had not realized, until the reports of the wireless messages told her that he was gone, what companionship with Alan had come to mean to her. She had accepted it as always to be existent, somehow—a companionship which might be interrupted often but always to be formed again. It amazed her to find how firm a place he had found in her world of those close to her with whom she must always be intimately concerned.

The telephone switchboard beside Constance suddenly buzzed, and the operator, plugging in a connection, said: "Yes, sir; at once," and through the partitions of the private office on the other side, a man's heavy tones came to Constance. That was Henry's office, and in timbre, the voice was his, but it was so strange in other characteristics of expression that she waited an instant before saying to the clerk,

"Mr. Spearman has come in?"

The clerk hesitated, but the continuance of the tone from the other side of the partition made reply superfluous. "Yes, Miss Sherrill."

Constance went to Henry's door and rapped. He made no answer and no move to open the door; so, after waiting a moment, she turned the knob and went in.

Henry was seated at his desk, facing her, his big hands before him; one of them held the telephone receiver. He lifted it slowly and put it upon the hook beside the transmitter as he watched her with steady, silent, aggressive scrutiny. He did not rise; only after a moment he recollected that he had not done so and came to his feet. "Good morning, Connie," he said. "Come in. What's the news?"

The impulse which had brought her into his office went from her. She had not seen nor heard from Henry directly since before Alan's telegram had come late yesterday afternoon; she had heard from her father only that he had informed Henry; that was all.

"I've no news, Henry," she said. "Have you?" She closed the door behind her, moving closer to him.

"How did you happen to be here, Connie?" he asked.

She made no reply but gazed at him, studying him. The agitation which he was trying to conceal was not entirely consequent to her coming in upon him; it had been ruling him before. It had underlain the loudness and abuse of his words which she had overheard. That was no capricious outburst of temper or irritation; it had come from something which had seized and held him in suspense, in dread—in dread; there was no other way to define her impression to herself. When she had opened the door and come in, he had looked up in dread, as though preparing himself for whatever she might announce. Now that the door shut them in alone, he approached her with arms offered. She stepped back, instinctively avoiding his embrace; and he stopped at once, but he had come quite close to her now.

As she stared at him, the clerk's voice came to her suddenly over the partition which separated the office from the larger room where the clerk was receiving some message over the telephone. Henry straightened, listened; as the voice stopped, his great, finely-shaped head sank between his shoulders; he fumbled in his pocket for a cigar, and his big hands shook as he lighted it, without word of excuse to her. A strange feeling came to her that he felt what he dreaded approaching and was no longer conscious [illegible] her presence.

She heard footsteps in the larger room coming toward the office door. Henry was in [illegible]

Belmond Local News

WE MAY LEARN FROM OUR NEIGHBORS

We notice in one our exchanges, the Goldfield Chronicle a program of the Goldfield Independent Chautauqua. Their program is an unusually fine one with ten concerts, seven lectures of a varied character and a Medical Round Table conducted by two doctors. One of our friends has served on the Chautauqua board at Goldfield for several years and has given us several reasons why they have made a success of the project while other towns have failed. They have a permanent board which has been in existence many years. Their Chautauqua is independent, as their name would indicate, and they do not make contracts with the various bureaus of entertainment. The board selects their own talent, sometimes sending a committe in to Chicago for that purpose. In this way they get all good numbers, while the lecture bureaus give a few good numbers and several poor ones for a sort of padding. Their band furnishes street concerts to attrart the crowds. Their programs are held in the beautiful Goldfield park where tents are provided for the farmers who wish to camp during the entire time of the Chautauqua. Many of the town people also take this time for a little outing and camp in the park for several days.

One of the most interesting and unusual facts of the plan, is that they made a financial success of it.

Now, that Belmond is to have a large park, why can we not try a similar plan and have a good Chautauqua every summer without running in debt on expenses?

REBEKAH LODGE WILL INITIATE FIFTEEN

The Rebekah Lodge are planning an intiation of fifteen candidates on August 9. They are expecting to have the degree work done in charge of the Clarion degree staff and will probably use the Library basement as their own hall will not be large enough to accommodate the visitors and the local lodge. Some of the members who attended a recent convention were impressed with the fact that neighboring lodges had a large membership of young women. They extended the invitation to become Rebekahs to several young ladies and as a result, fifteen will be initiated. at their August meeting.

Mrs. Edward Sands and child of Des Moines are visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Ahlstrom and other relatives.

Thayne Bailey was a business caller at Garner Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Bailey of St. Paul, and Mr. J. S. Brewer and the Misses Ida and Belle Brewer of Albert Lea, Minnesota, are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Brewer.

Miss Sharon, instructor in the Belmond High School has been taking a special course at the State University at Iowa City. She will return Friday and begin her work of tutoring high school students.

The Dorcas Society of the Trinity Luthern church held a candy sale last Saturday evening from booths in front of C. G. Johnson and Carlson & Skovlin's stores. They did a very successful business.

Mrs. J. S. Buggy of Buffalo Center is the guest of relatives here. Mrs. Buggy is a sister of Mrs. Sharon and C. C. McGuire.

COUNTRY CLUB PICNIC

The Clarmond Country Club was the scene of a jolly picnic last Wednesday afternoon and evenig.

The afternoon was spent in bridge, golf or fancywork as the ladies felt inclined and a picnic supper was served at seven, after the men had arrived from business. The evening was spent in golf and dancing. Mrs. W. C. Tyrrell, Jr. and Mrs. L. R. Parsons of Belmond served on the entertainment committee. Mrs. M. C. Barry and Mrs. C. M. Morse of Belmond with Mrs. Barnard and Mrs. Rosevelt of Clarion had charge of the refreshments.

ICE CREAM SOCIAL

The St. Olaf Lutner League will hold on ice cream social on the H. O. Emerson lawn ½ mile east of the St. Olaf Church, Wednesday evening July 26th. A good program is being prepared, including both instrumental and vocal numbers, readings, and a speaker is expected to deliver an address that evening. Program starts promptly at 8:00 p. m. Everybody come.

THIS IS A GOOD TIME TO DESTROY ABNOXIOUS WEEDS

There are quite a number of vacant lots and a few street edges about town as well as on the business street where weeds are getting quite large and reaching the seed stage. Belmond is noted among her neighbors for her well-kept lawns and streets. Let us keep this reputation by moving thes before the seed matures sufficiently to germinate for another crop. There will probably be an official notice issued for the destruction of weeds but let us take pride enough to do it now, before being told.

The Misses Ethel and Emma Luick and Ruth Hill were in Hampton at the circus last week.

The Misses Rhea Campbell and Doris Bailey were shopping in Mason City last Saturday.

LARGE FLOUR TRUCK VISITS BELMOND

One of the largest trucks ever seen on our streets passed through town Friday. It was driven by Mr. C. W. Greer, of Mason City, manager of the branch office of the Russell-Miller Milling Company of Minneapolis. They have established a distributing route for Occident flour among the smaller towns around Mason City, making the trip every two weeks. This was their first trip through Belmond and wherever the truck stopped a crowd gathered like they do around the elephant at the circus. It was a forty horse-power White truck, weighing three and a half tons. Its capacity is fifty barrels or one-fourth carload of flour. When loaded it weighs ten tons.

Miss Ruth Ramsay was hostess to a party of her friends at a slumber party last Wednesday evening. A marshmallow roast and moonlight serenade were enjoyable features of the evening.

Miss Celia Finn is employed in Foster's Cafe during the absence of Miss Dorothy Purcell.

Orville Smith and family were visitors at the Harold Smith home last week.

Mrs. Garton spent the latter part of last week with relatives in Iowa Falls.

Andrew Purcell is expected home from Sioux City where he recently had an operation at the M. E. hospital of that place.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Berry are the happy parents of a baby daughter, born Monday July 17th.

Miss Beatrice Leavy is traveling in northern Wisconsin with a party of five girls who have a magazine agency. They young ladies are making their canvas by auto and report good success with their business.

Mrs. Martin Lewis of Mason City came down Sunday to visit at the Gene Sullivan home. Mrs. Lewis took the little Sullivan children home with her while their parents are away on a vacation.

Miss Anna Beenen and Mrs. Bonte of Alexander were Belmond callers last Saturday.

PICNIC TO-NIGHT

Everybody seems in the picinc mood. Let't go. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

A few suggestions for the picnic supper: Fruit, cookies, olives and pickles.

Who says you can't buy baked beans for 10c? We have them.

How about a veal loaf, potted meats, or vienna sausage for your sandwiches.

What's a picnic without a good salad? We have thousand island and mayonnaise salad dressing.

Try our Gunpowder Tea at 25c a lb.

Sugar and Mason jars are cheaper than last year. Let us deliver some to you. There's a motto, "Get all you can and can all you get," which refers to your savings account at the bank, but use the same plan when filling your shelves for winter. Don't forget the plums and apricots we have for canning. Leave your orders early for the demand is great.

CREAMERY DAY CELEBRATED HERE AUG. 23

Tyrrell Park Opening Is Largely Attended

Splendid Time Is Enjoyed By Big Audience And Affair Proves Success.

OVER 1,500 PEOPLE THERE

For many years intimate friends and relatives of Capt. W. C. Tyrrell, Sr., have been the recipients of beautiful gifts upon special occasions or of mementos which recall his visits. But, Thursday, July 20th will long be remembered as the day when, to friends, acquaintances and strangers, alike, he gave that beautiful gift of Tyrrell Park which crowns the generosity of a lifetime.

The keynote of modern education is, that too long have we emphasized the idea of getting things and that now we must teach the giving of service and means.

The fact that the park is a gift seemed to have made a deep impression upon the minds of the children and young people present, to judge by the casual remarks that were heard. One little lad asked, "Mother, did he actually give all those acres of beautiful trees?" The giving of Tyrrell Park taught a lesson which cannot be equalled by many lectures upon the subject of generosity.

The following private conversation with the donor shows this characteristic of the man: "No one asked me to give a park no one told me to do so and not even my son knew the land was bought for several days. I just wanted to do it."

We believe the celebration of the park opening was marked by at least four features which have never been equalled upon the occasion of a public gathering in Belmond.

There was a large crowd, estimated at about fifteen hundred people. Every one of the surrounding towns was represented, the largest numbers coming from Clarion, Rowan, Alexander and Garner. Belmond has had large crowds before, but there has never been upon any public occasion such a home-coming of former residents and old neighbors as last Thursday.

We believe, too, that the feeling of friendship and kindliness and the manifestation of a democratic spirit has never been equalled in a Belmond gathering.

There have been auto parades also in our history but never before have we had a parade of lighted autos and the sight of hundreds of illuminated cars was truly beautiful as they sped homeward along the road which old settlers know as Luick's Lane.

Another feature which deserves special mention is the effort of various committeees of the Community Club and their president to ensure the success of the evening. Only those who have served on similar committees realize the work, though and self sacrifice which made such an event possible. Thespirit in which the ladies served the thousand or more people who passed the picnic table reminded one of the self-forgetful devotion of the mother who serves her hungry brood and rejoices in the fact that they are well-cared for and content.

This account of the evening's celebration may appear somewhat informal to the stranger who reads our columns. That is the note we have tried to strike, as that friend to friend spirit seemed to be the keynote of the entire program and added much to Mr. Tyrrell's pleasure as he realized the keen appreciation of his gift.

The ladies of the Community Club very much regret that the darkness came too soon the evening of the picnic and prevented them having the entire program. There were several musical numbers which had to be omitted. The various committees had their work very carefully planned and lights would have been provided had they thought the program would continue so late. No one anticipated that there would be so large a crowd, so the serving occupied more time than was expected, thus putting the program at a later hour.

The Community Club wishes to extend their thanks to Messrs. J. J. Flynn, Strieby, C. J. Jones and D. Bishop for the assistance they rendered durin- the day, and to all of those who so willingly took part in the day's activities.

MRS. ROSECRANS BUYS MILLINERY SHOP HERE

Mrs. Catherine Rosecrans last week purchased the Dorenkamp & Greenfield millinery shop, and is now conducting the business under the name of "The Hat Shoppe," possession of the shop having been taken immediately. The new proprietor is having a reduction sale to reduce the stock on hand this week, and next week expects to go in to the wholesale houses to purchase a new line of fall and winter goods. Mrs. Rosecrans has a host of friends who will unite -shing her the best of luck in her new venture, and knowing her capabilities are assured of her success. We have not learned what the future plans of the old proprietors are.

HELPING THE BOY TO FIND HIMSELF

Mason City's sons will be among the great and near-great in the next generation, says the Globe-Gagette, if the members of the Rotary club realize their hopes in the boy's work drive about to be started in the city. More than 500 boys will be interviewed by the Rotarians to obtain information about their present status and what they are ambitious to become in the future. The club then plans to aid the boys in gaining their objectives.

Every high school boy, every boy who has been graduated from the grammer school and every boy of corresponding age whether or not he is attending school, will be visited by a Rotarian.

The vital imporance of attending school will be stressed by the Rotarians. They will show the boys how much more easily they may gain success if they attend high school than if they drop out after the eighth grde. They will explain the meaning and benefit of college to the boy who hopes to succeed. "Back to School" will be the motto set up for the boys who have dropped out.

Questionnaires are being placed in the hands of Rotarians this week by Dr. W. J. Egloff, chairman of the project. When they have been filled out, the cards will make a catalogue of the boys of the city and will simplify greatly the work undertaken by the Rotarians.

Why would not the above plan be a worth while work for our Belmond Good Fellowship club? Who will take enough interest in our boys to push the plan? Why not write to Dr. Egloff or interview him regarding the questionnaires being used in Mason City? Read this article twice and then do some serious thinking about the possibilities which the plan suggests. It will also require action and plenty of it.

1917 CLASS PICNIC

Tyrrell Park was the scene of a jolly picnic and reunion, last Sunday, July 23rd when the High school class of 1917 responded to another roll call. Although many of the class were scattered to far distant states and could not be present, twelve of the old crowd attended. A few were accompanied by Friend Wife or Friend Husband.

After an enjoyable afternoon spent in visiting, a fine picnic supper was served.

This was the first gathering of the class since the good old days in Belmond High and everyone hopes these picnics may be an annual affair. Harold Hembd sent his greetings to the class, as he could not be present in person. Those present were: Gladys Skouge, Lois Morse, Ialeen Flynn, Cloe Jenison, Ruth Brooks, Esther Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Hanson, Mr. and Mrs. Harley Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Kragh and daughter, Marian, Fred Bohning, Wilma Trumbell and Merle Hanson, of Alexander.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP

Fred Walters, who, for the past 28 years has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Wm. Blau, died last Thursday evening at the age of 86 years. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the Immanuel church. We express our sympathy to the relatives in their bereavement.

Mrs. Fred Ruiter is reported as being very ill at this writing.

Mr. and Mrs. Hero Goeman and two daughters from Blue Earth, Minnesota, were here to attend the funeral of Mrs. Goeman's father, Mr. Wolters, last Sunday.

Fannie Bruns had her tonsils removed at the local hospital last week.

Mr and Mrs. Edward Foss and Mr. and Mrs. Garfield Raecker and their daughter Janette, were Sunday callers at the Jake Smidt home.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Pals were visitors at the Fol Mennenga home on Sunday afternoon

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Halfpop spent Sunday at the parental W. A. Gartz home.

Mr and Mrs. George Richardson and family from near Forest City were Sunday visitors at the Fred Loats home.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mennenga and family of North Dakota, who have been visiting relatives here the past three weeks, returned home this week.

FREDERICK WOLTERS

Frederick Wolters was born in Eastfriesland, Germany, January 9, 1836, and died at the home of his daughter near Belmond on Thursday, July 20, 1922, at the age of 86 years, six months and 11 days.

In 1880 he came with the family to America, settling first at Ackley, and later moving to Iowa Falls. At a later date they moved to near the town of Goodell, where they farmed. Meeting with reverses about 28 years ago they moved to the home of their eldest daughter, Mrs. Wm. Blau. Mr. Wolters had been failing fast the past month, and death was due to old age with a complication of diseases. His wife died about eight years ago. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the Immanuel church, Rev. A. H. Waalkes officiating, and interment was made in the Immanuel cemetery. Those who mourn his loss are Mrs. Wm. Blau, Mrs. Hero Goeman, Harry Wolters, Mrs. Peter Pals, the grandchildren and many friends, who have the sympathy of the community.

LANDMARK HOTEL BURNED

The Oaks Hotel at Clear Lake was totally destroyed by fire, Thursday, July 20 th. The guests were at dinner and the hotel was soon a scene of commotion with guests running about to save individual belongings.

A few were able to drag out their trunks but many of the guests lost all or part of their wardrobes. The fire started in the roof from an unknown cause. The hotel has been a landmark for almost fifty years.

It was a huge frame building and a veritable fire trap. The loss is estimted at $75,000. Opportune arrival of the fire department from Mason City assisted in saving the summer cottages nearby.

Many of the guests were able to secure accommodations at the Lake Shore hotel and others were forced to seek the hospitatality of cottages.

REUNION OF CLASS OF 1920

Fourteen members of the High School class of 1920 held a reunion at Tyrrell Park, Sunday, July 23. They met on library lawn at 2 o'clock and autoed to the scene of the picnic. The afternoon was spent pleasantly in recalling old school days and the old jokes and stunts of those days again brought the care-free laugh.

After a fine picnic supper, a business meeting was held. Carl Wenzel, the former president of the class was not able to be present as he had an engagement with the ball team.

It was voted to form a permanent organization of the class, to hold an annual picnic and to promote other social gatherings. Elizabeth Leinbach, president, and Shirley Thompson secretary-treasurer, were the officers elected for this organization. A motion was carried to have annual dues, payable in June, in order to have a small amount of funds to use for the benefit of the club.

After the business meeting, Herbert Nelson gave a short commemoration speech in honor of Howard Luick who was class president for two years but has now gone to join the class of the Great Teachers above.

Herbert spoke of Howard's sturdy manhood and kindly spirit to all. How, as president of the class, he put his own interests in the background and worked always for the interests of his class.

The singing of old high school songs closed a day long to be remembered by those privileged to attend.

The following members of the class answered "present:" Violet Starnes, Lelah Brooks, Lena Steenblock, Vida Jenison, Esther Hardwick, Elizabeth Leinbach, Myrtle Hawley, Luella Christie, Ray Hawley, Herbert Nelson, Preston Tyrrell, Marjorie Purcell, Shirley Thompson and Clara Johnson.

The other members, who could not attend, are: Carl Wenzel, Agnes Reed (Mrs. Roy Guest), Mildred Wendel, Colorado, Bert Trumbell, Des Moines, Iowa, Bessie Quigley, Cedar Falls, Iowa, Harry Webb, Ottosen, Iowa, Creonica Finn, Goodell, Iowa, Laura Maitland, Esther Thorman and Cornelia Allison.

A letter from Harry Webb was read voicing his appreciation of the invitation and his regret in not being able to enjoy the fun.

GEO. POND VISITS OLD HOME

Geo. R. Pond and family of San Diego, California stopped for a few hours in Belmond, Friday and greeted some of the older residents of the town. Mr. Pond is the eldest grandson of the late G. H. Richardson but left Belmond when a child. They are making the trip across the continent by auto and are enroute to Boston, Mass., having been on the road four weeks when reaching here. They related an interesting experience at Gallup, New Mexico. Passing over a very muddy road they came upon a car fast in the mud and experienced considerable difficulty in getting around them. After this was accomplished, Mr. Pond went back to give the driver his opinion of people who block the highway and discovered to his surprise, Mr. H. J. Klemme and Ruth. The latter were on their way to Silverton, Colo., where Mr. Klemme has mining interests.

Mr. Pond wished the Independent to extend his greetings to all those old friends whom he did not have the opportunity to meet. They left for Forest City to visit Dr. Thompson and will continue their journey by way of Chicago, Niagara Falls and the Berkshire Hills in New Hampshire and on to Boston. Later, Mr. Pond, will report in Washington, D. C. for duty in the Navy Department.

AMATEUR ROBBERY

The garage and harness shop at Rowan were the scene of an amateur job of robbery last week. The door was broken in and small change hardly worth carrying away was taken from the McCaskey register. Nothing else seemed to be missing.

There will be a special meeting of the Community Club Friday afternoon at 2:30 sharp. It is for the purpose of voting on and revising the constitution and by-laws.

Big Celebration Is Now Being Planned

August 23rd Is Set As Day For Belmond's Big Celebration Of The Summer.

BIG TIME BEING PLANNED

Plans have been made and are now in the course of completion for holding a rousing big celebration here on Wednesday, August 23, the day to be known as Creamery Day, and to be a day of boostng for the local creamery.

But the affair is to be not only a creamery day, but Belmond's one Big Day of the summer. It is to be an all-day celebration, along the lines of a Fourth of July celebration with the exception of fireworks. A good band is to be secured, probaby one from the neighboring towns, a real live ball game is to be one of the main attractions, and races, sports of all knds, concessions, prizes and similar events are being planned. The committees in charge of the various plans are as follows:

Finance: J. F. Barry, W. T. Gfeller, C. O. Fitts, A. E Martin and Cato C. Griesy.

Speaker: H. F. Luick.

Band: A. C. Hinman.

Sports: O. D. Jenison, Wm. Boelman, Win Dziewanowski, M. C. Barry D. L. Rankins, and C C. McGuire.

Grounds: Fred Loats, E. G. Reed, Adolph Meinders.

Concessions: G. J. Byers, J. H. Nourse, C. H. Jennings.

Program and Advertising: Mrs. A. E. Martin, Mrs. O. D. Jenison, A. C Hinman.

Marshal of the Day: J. F. Barry.

Some good addresses are to be a part of the program for the day, with a good speaker on agricultural work and products, probably from Ames or some prominent speaker from the Farm Bureau.

The celebration is being financed by the business men of Belmond, the finance committee soliciting them yesterday. At noon they had about $400 raised, and expected to raise in the neighborhood of $600, which will assure plenty of real entertainment for August 23. Kanawha holds a day similar to the one planned here, and it is big success. Belmond's day should be one also, and it is hoped that everybody will join in and help make it so. It will be our one big day—let's make it a real one and put some life in the old town.

The details of the celebration have not been worked out at this writing, but will be announced thru the Independent as soon as completed. In the meantime, get ready for a good time and plan to spend Wednesday, August 23, in Belmond.

FAMILY REUNION AT E. G. REED HOME

About 29 friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Reed gathered at their home Sunday, July 23, to help celebrate Mrs. Reed's birthday. The guests were the children and grandchildren, and Miss Grace Boughton, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Schlieffarth and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Polhemus of Colorado. A bountiful dinner was served and all joined in wishing Mrs. Reed many more birthdays.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

We were glad to see so many at Sabbath school last Sunday, altho we were just a little below our mark. Many are away on their vacations or we would have had a banner attendance. There was the largest Sunday evening attendance that we have had for a long time. All enjoyed the music furnished by the orchestra.

We have a full program for this week. The Missionary society will meet at the home of Mrs. Leinbach and the ladies of the Methodist Missionary society are to be the guests at this meeting.

Sabbath school next Sunday at 10:00, and the morning worship at 11:00. The young people's service at 7:30 in the evening and at 8:00 Prof. F. G. Pattison, of Coe College, will speak in the interests of the Anti-Saloon League. Help to make next Sabbath a great day by being in your place at all of the services. The orchestra will lead the music at the evening services.

A. J. Williams went to Kansas City last week, where he purchased and brought home a carload of cattle to feed. Mr. Williams is one of this vicinity's most successful feeders, and after he has put some good Iowa corn into his purchase he should have a market-topper.

Friends of Mayor Morse will regret to learn that he is not improving as fast as was hoped. We hope to soon see him about again.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

VACATION EDITORIAL

This editorial applies to older folks, the young ones don't need to be urged to take a vacation.

When the days are long get ready to shake off the burden of petty cares and responsibilities. No matter where you are, go somewhere else. Only the oyster clings to the old homestead and refuses to investigate the sights of neighboring pools.

It was never intended that human beings should look out of the same windows all their lives, and, oh, the pity of the narrow mental views some of us get looking through those little narrow panes. Get out where the view is broad and unconfined and see how your mind will expand to correspond.

It is true that a rolling stone gathers no mass, but it gets rid of rough corners and the sharp points that offend, and takes on a lovely polish. Who wants to be covered with mass?

The moss-covered bucket was picturesque in story and song, but give us a little ice water or lemonade.

If you have earned a vacation, take it. Don't wait till that indefinite time in the future.

Go traveling now while you are sure of a return ticket. You are to accept a reward for all the years of sacrifice and denial. Stay at home, and twenty years hence the children will be spending your money in their cottage at the lake and remarking, "Poor dear mother never cared for outings, she was such a home-body, you know."

Of course you have made your will and it reads just like all wills have read for hundreds of years. Have you courage to change it and make a will reading as follows, "Dear Offspring: A little money to enjoy is a might fine thing. Go out and get some the same as I did."

Think of the thousands of worthy old people holding on to the nickels who ought to be riding about in Henry's and lake steamers and Pullman cars, rounding the long day of toil with the late afternoon of gleeful enjoyment. It wouldn't cost them a cent, their heirs would pay all the bills.

Here's to the rights and privileges of the passing generation. The world and the fullness thereof do not belong entirely to the young generation.

Take your vacations while you can get them. Eventually you may not be able to make a choice of the highway you will take and certain places are not marked on auto road maps.

CLIPPINGS

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kemp of Belmond, visited at the John Heginger home Sunday.—Leader.

Miss Amy Scheppler and Mrs. R. R. Jones autoed up to Belmond one day last week, where they spent the day visiting the Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Sheffield home, the latter being a sister of Miss Scheppler.—Eagle.

Alfalfa Alf says: "When it comese to boosting the old home town, there's gennerally mighty few can be listed ahead of the editor. A little recognition of this while he's still alive will do no harm."

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Baldridge Mrs. A. L. Deibler and little Audrey and Winifred Reese were Belmond callers Monday. Miss Winifred remained in Belmond for a visit before returning home at Waterloo.—Reporter.

Mrs. Ethel Papousek returned to her home at Belmond Saturday last. Her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Chris Jacobs, accompanied her, and Mrs. Jacobs will remain there for a week. Chris returned early Monday morning. Mrs. Papousek has been in Garner for several weeks or since her operation at Mason City hospital. She is quite herself again, and with a few more weeks of quiet, she will be entirely well.—Leader.

Theo. Jensen of Alexander, who for a number of years lived in Garner, was seriously injured yesterday at Albert Lea, when a car in which he was riding was struck by a train. His wife passed through here in an auto last evening on her way to Albert Lea. She did not know how seriously her husband was hurt, but had been notified that he was in a hospital at Albert Lea, and for her to come at once. Mr. Jensen lived here for several years and was a tiler.—Signal.

Dave Finn, of Belmond, who received a partially dislocated neck in an auto accident south of town the night of Kanawha's Creamery celebration on July 29th and has since been here in the Judd hospital, was able to return to his home last Friday. He will return about twice a week for treatments. Mr. Finn suffered considerable pain from his injury for a couple of weeks but is now recovering nicely.—Reporter.

Dr. Sharon reported a peculiar accident on Monday of this week While Elmer Kalvig was assisting with cleaning out the lime house at the Lampert Lumber company yard, in lifting a sack of lime the sack broke and the lime flew up and filled both Mr. Kalvig's eyes. It took considerable time to remove the lime from his eyes and the pain was very severe. Although still suffering some pain Mr. Kalvig is recovering from the accident and it is not thought the sight in either eye is hurt.—Reporter.

The Emmetsburg Democrat reports that Father Dobberstein, of West Bend, has begun work on an Immaculate Conception grotto for St. Angela's Institute at Carroll. He has a sister who is connected with that institution, and two of his nieces are in the institute. The grotto will be smaller than the one at West Bend. The Democrat remarks in that connection that some time ago Father Dobberstein refused a commission to build at Humboldt on the property of t Chicaga million-on the property of a Chicago millionhis services.

Garner chapter D. A. R. held open meeting at their hall Wednesday evening of this week as a compliment to Hanna A. Tierney of Seattle, Washington, who is spending her summer vacation here. A short program was given in which Miss Betty Pritchard gave a splendid reading, Mrs. C. E. Barnes sang a solo in her always acceptable manner. Miss Tierney spoke on the advantages of organization and in the line with this thought, a few words on good citizenship. Miss Hanna fully appreciates the honor the D. A. R. ladies confered upon her. Delightful refreshments were served.—Leader.

CIRCUIT WITH GRID LEAK RESISTANCE

Takes Place of "C" Battery—How Impedance of Flow Is Determined.

Fig. 18 shows a set of curves for a three-electrode vacuum tube circuit containing a grid leak resistance as shown in Fig. 11 instead of a "C" battery with the same symmetrical alternating difference of potential applied to the grid circuit.

There being no "C" battery potential applied to the grid, the grid in Fig. 11 is normally at zero potential with respect to the filament. As the positive half of the first cycle of the alternating difference of potential is impressed upon the grid circuit—see Fig. 13—the grid is made positive with respect to the filament. Being positive with respect to the filament, causes a certain number of electrons, which are negative charges, to be attracted and caused to give up their negative charges to the grid. During the next or negative half of the cycle of the applied grid potential the grid is made negative with respect to the filament but does not lose the electrons again. Thus a negative charge is built up on a grid during the positive portion of each cycle, the cumulative effect of which is to produce a decrease of the plate current, during the period that the alternating difference of potential called a wave train is applied to the grid.

After the alternating difference of potential applied to the grid has ceased, the grid does not immediately lose its negative charge. The grid leak forms a high resistance path for the negative charge of the grid to leak off down to the filament slowly. If no grid leak were used, the grid would soon collect a sufficient negative charge to reduce the plate current to zero and the tube would cease to function.

A grid leak having too low resistance will not allow a sufficiently high negative charge to collect on the grid, resulting in a very small plate current reduction and weak response in the telephone receivers.

On the other hand, if the grid leak is of too high resistance, too high negative charge will collect on the grid and the condition of no grid leak will be approached.

In any electrical circuit that has a difference of potential applied to it, the current that will flow depends upon the "impedance" of that circuit; just as in the flow of water through a pipe, the quantity of water that will flow when any given pressure is applied depends upon how much the flow through the pipe is impeded by the friction of the particles of water against the sides of the pipe and against one another.

In the electrical circuit, the relation between these three quantities is that the current which will flow is equal to the applied differences of potential divided by the impedance, where the current is in amperes, the applied difference of potential is in volts and the impedance in ohms. On transposing this equation the impedance is equal to the applied voltage divided by the current. The impedance of a vacuum tube plate circuit, internally between the filament and the plate, when the grid is at zero potential, is an important constant of a vacuum tube and is called the internal plate impedance.

The internal grid impedance of a vacuum tube used in a radio set as a detector determines the impedance of the telephones that will give best results when connected in the plate circuit of that particular tube.

It is then not only the resistance of a pair of telephones, but also the inductance and the distributed capacity of the winding that cause the maximum current to flow in the telephones for a given change in grid potential. The internal plate impedance of a vacuum tube varies only slightly with different plate voltage. It is more an inherent characteristic of the tube which is determined by the design.

Belmond Local News

Mrs. C. E. Barnes and children and Mrs. Walter Pritchard visited at the A. E. Martin home, Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Leonard of Clarion were among the picnic visitors.

Mr. and Mrs. August Reitz, Mrs. Wm. Reitz, and daughter, Mrs. Pelly, of Rowan were at the Park opening, Thursday.

Mrs. Boyington of Rowan was a business caller here Saturday.

The Misses Alma Greenfield, Theoline Johnson, Eveline Johnson, Minnie Johnson and Sofie Johnson left Sunday afternoon for an extended vacation trip through Colorado. They expect to be gone several weeks.

Mrs. Anna Nagle of Clarion was the guest of friends here Thursday and attended the picnic.

Miss Edna Arends of Alexander visited Miss Celia Barry, Saturday.

Capt. W. C. Tyrrell, Sr. left Saturday for Cedar Rapids, Oxford Junction and Chicago and will then return to his home in Beaumont, Texas.

Mrs. A. J. Cleaves of Mason City, and daughters, Mrs. Nora Rhoades of Garner and Mrs. Marie Wilson of Mason City were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Bullard last week. These ladies were former residents of Belmond. The late A. J. Cleaves and family at one time conducted the Kern Hotel which stood on the corner of River and Main Streets.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart of Clarion and Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler of Wisconsin were callers at the Tyrrell home, Thursday.

The interior of the Belmond Savings Bank is being re-decorated this week and presents a very attractive appearance.

Albert Erickson and Miss Mary Whitten of Rowan and Mrs. Fred Aldrich enjoyed an auto trip to Klemme, Sunday.

Claude Benson is improving his residence property by raising the house and adding a basement for a furnace.

Oscar Jacobson had a new roof and other repairs put on his store building last week.

SPARKS

When our concerts come over the "wired-wireless" and we plug into the lamp socket, light music will be given added popularity.

The railroads recently broadcasted a safety message from stations in Pittsburgh, Chicago, Newark and Springfield, Mass., calling attention to the fact that 84,000 people have been killed or injured the last year in this country while trespassing on railroad property.

If you do not know the code and wish to receive messages, there is a device on the market at the present time which records the incoming signals on a piece of paper. The paper may be then read at the will of the operator. This method gives the person unacquainted with the code the privilege of hearing from stations which would otherwise pass over in the usual "buzz, buzz," style so unintelligible to the radiophone fans.

While lying in the harbor of Iquique, Chile, on the west coast of South America, the radio operator of the steamship Santa Luisa clearly heard the entire broadcast program of Station WJZ. The distance separating Newark's station from the steamship in an air line was 4,000 miles.

As a result of the widespread interest in wireless telephony one manufacturer has brought out a set of six double-faced records for teaching the telegraph code. Many persons, after listening to the radio-telephone concerns, have tuned in and heard the familiar "buzz, buzz" of the wireless telegraph messages being sent. Curious to know the meaning of the sounds they have cast about for some means of learning the code phonograph records.

The Canadian government is considering the question of the amateur radio field. Present plans are to allow the amateur using spark transmission a wave length up to 200 meters, while those using continuous wave transmission would be permitted a wave length up to 250 meters.

Free Camp at State Fair

Farm Bureau members, who are planning a vacation of some sort this summer, should plan on taking advantage of the splendid camping site offered state fair week. Several of our members went down last year and enjoyed it very much. The fair offers not only a splendid outing, but is in addition, a great educational event. There is no better way to see the fair than to drive down and camp on the grounds for a week or so.

A special feature of the week will be farm bureau day, August 28. Our state farm bureau federation officers are arranging a splendid program for this day.

Anyone wishing further information on this should write the county agent at Clarion.

Why Not Folllow Their Example

Didjaever try to kid a union laborer about his organization? Didjaever notice that you didn't get far when you tried to tell him his union was not worth a bag of beans. No siree—Just try it once. You will find every labor union man loyal to the core. Just try to tell a railroader, a coal miner or a packing house worker, that the organization is all wrong and you will be proclaimed a traitor, a Benedict Arnold a traducer of rights, from the housetops. You will be watched as an enemy, scorned as a neighbor, branded as a curse to your community.

It has taken thirty-seven years for organized labor to win some of its, organized labor to win some of its fighting. A traitor to their cause receives little more consideration than a deserter in the United States army.

How about the farmers? Are they loyal? Will they allow an outsider to poison them against their organization, their leadership? When someone tells them that they are unable to work together, co-operate, to have patience, what happens. Do we jump up and down in indignation, show this intruder the door, maintain that our organization is doing something for us? Or do we pass it off with a joke, change the subject, or even worse agree with this would be wrecker.

Before you can realize the greatest good from our farm bureau, we must be loyal. We must insist that others respect our organization; we must have a vision of the future and forever proclaim that we are farm bureau members, proud of it and defy unjust criticism.

Control of Insects and Plant Lice

Inquiries are coming in daily to the farm bureau office for information in regard to spraying for plant lice which are prevalent this year in the country. The only satisfactory spray for the plant lice is Black Leaf 40. This should be mixed at the rate of a teaspoonful to a gallon of water, or one pound to fifty gallons of water. If your potatoes are blighting or affected with tipburn an application of bordeaux mixture has proven successful. In mixing bordeaux, use four pounds of copper sulphate, four gallons of lime unslaked to fifty gallons of water. Dissolve the copper sulphate and dilute to twenty-five gallons of water and pour the two mixtures together.

In all sprays be sure that the entire leaf is thoroughly covered as thoroughness means success or failure in control of insects or disease

A satisfactory dust for use on cucumbers, melons and squashes has been twenty parts of gypsum or land plaster, (this can be obtained at a lumber yard) to one part calcium arsenate.

Junior Judging Team

The county agent is spending considerable time in organizing a junior judging team, consisting of boys between the ages of fifteen and twenty-one, who are particularly interested in learning to judge live stock and grain.

Boys who are interested in joining this judging team, so as to learn more about the points in judging live stock and grain are urged to get in touch with the county agent at once.

Arrangements are being made to take a judging team, composed of Wright county boys to Ames, on August 12th, for a preliminary judging contest. The winners in this contest will probably be taken to the Mason City and Fort Dodge fairs, and possibly to the state fair at Des Moines.

NEW STORY SOON

At the conclusion of the serial story which is now running in our columns we expect to present to our readers, "Miss Lulu Bett" by Zona Gale, the most talked about story of American small town life. The book is as popular as the much-read "Main Street" but portrays more of the pleasant side of small town life.

The immense popularity and extensive publicity gained by the book cause it to be followed by a dramatized verson which won the much coveted Pulitzer prize as the best American play of the year 1921. It has also recently been filmed and placed upon the screen.

We endeavor to cater to the various tastes of our readers in selecting stories and believe we have succeeded in giving some of the best stories in each class. "Miss Lulu Bett" is a story that is certain to appeal to every reader who enjoys real human beings in the pages of a novel. Throughout the story runs a shining line of humor, warming the whole book.

Reader, have you ever estimated that we run four or five stories a year. The price of one story in book form would be the same as the price of one subscription. So you are getting four or five times your money's worth in stories alone.

Two years ago the price of board in Belmond was from $10 to $12 per week. At present the boarding houses are charging $7 or $8 which may increase somewhat as the demand becomes greater when the sugar Factory opens.

Mrs. John Lowenberg and daughter Leoda, of Meservey were visitors with Mrs. Dan Wenzel last week.

Mrs. Geo. Cutler of Clarion visited her brother, Rufus Morse and family last week.

There will be a special meeting of the Community Club Friday afternoon at 2:30 sharp. It is for the purpose of voting on and revising the constitution and by-laws.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bingham of California who are at present visiting in Rowan were in Belmond, Thursday, greeting old friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Kepford of Waterloo, Iowa are visiting relatives in Rowan. Mrs. Kepford has many Belmond friends who know her as Miss Stella Brooks.

Mrs. F. S. Box of Rowan and friends, Miss Florence Lynk of Joliet, Ill. were shoppers in Belmond last week.

John Wenzel of Kanawha visited his mother, Mrs. Dan Wenzel one day last week.

Dr. George of Dows was a business caller here last Wednesday.

Mrs. Susie Lockwood, and grandchildren and Miss Marion Lockwood, of Clarion were guests at the Rufus Morse home, Thursday.

Dr. Sharon of Kanawha was a business caller in town Thursday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Wolle were at Eldora Iowa last week visiting Mrs. Wolle's mother who is seriously ill and eighty years of age.

Otto Rick and son Allen, of Numa, Iowa, returned to their home last week after several weeks visit with Mrs. W. H. White.

W. A. Connor of Hampton, was in town last week transacting business.

Miss Hazel Jackson visited relatives and friends in Clarion, Monday and Tuesday of last week.

Home grown sweet corn appeared in the market last week. A dozen ears for a quarter seems a little expensive but they were well worth the price.

Miss Hazel Jackson went to Cedar Rapids, Thursday, to visit her brother, Edward Jackson and wife for several days.

Mrs. W. H. White returned Saturday from Fort Dodge where she had been visiting her son, Clare White and wife.

Mrs. Andrew [illegible] of Alexander came over Thursday to visit relatives and attend the picnic.

Mrs. J. B. Sheffield and children and Miss Lillian Gealow went to Clarion, Thursday. Miss Lulu Strait, who has been visiting at the Sheffield home, accompanied them.

Miss Neva Kimmel of Manly, Iowa is visiting Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Eaton and family.

Kinseth's Store News

"Get all you can and can all you get," you've heard the saying. Good idea too, and with the recent rains we have had lately there should be some good garden truck to can. But when it comes to fruits we are a little out of luck in this part of the country, except on apples; ought to have quite a few of those. However, we can help you out on the fruits, and take pleasure in announcing that we are taking orders this week for peaches by the bushel to be delivered this week. Real ones, just right for canning. Call us up and have a bushel saved for you; or if you can't can a bushel, get your neighbor over the way to take half.

Already-canned fruits that we can please you on are strawberries in syrup at 30c, plums in syrup at 18c, and a host of others equally as low in price.

Every-day stuff such as P & G soap 5-for-25, brooms for 39c, and the like are here regularly. And we are making a special offering on a high grade men's dress shoe, a $6 value, for $3.65, and work overalls and pants for $1.65, while they both last. Get a pair for the harvest field.

The place to trade and save money is at the Store On The Corner—Don't Forget!

P. S.—We'll deliver anytime, you know.

Smiles shorten the miles of life.

Silo Filling Time

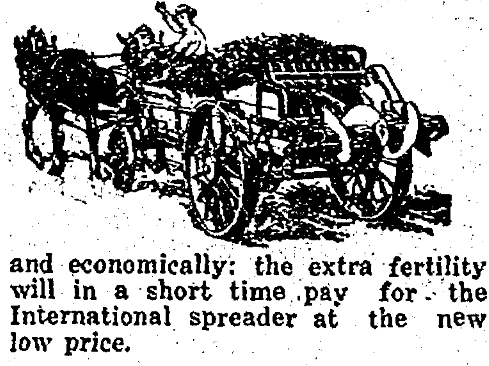
McCormick-Deering (International) ensilage cutters are simple and compact—make of steel throughout. They pact—made of steel throughout. They wheels that are safe. The corn chutes makes feeding easy. McCormick-Deering ensilage cutters are built right to fill your silo right. They are made in five sizes with capacities ranging from 3 to 25 tons per hour.

PAINT

A good many House-owners prefer to paint their homes in the Fall, and they are wise. The paint has a chance to harden thoroughly before being exposed to Summers hot sun; and some painters say Fall painting lasts longer. We have the paint. Nothing like Minnesota paint for general painting—because it covers more surface, has a better finish, is more durable, and Rain, Hail, Snow or Sun don't affect it. You'll need White Lead, Dry Paint, or Pure Linseed oil—You will find them at Griesy's at reasonable prices, and with unequalled quality. Call and have a paint talk.

A Real Money Maker

The basis of profitable farming is a fertile soil. In farming, as in other businesses, there are poor years and good years, but the farmer who keeps up the productivity of his soil will forge ahead. No method of maintaining soil fertility has proved so efficient as the proper application of barnyard manure. It is a foresighted policy to build up crop yields with an International roller bearing manure spreader. Put manure on your fields finely, evenly, uniformly, and economically: the extra fertility will in a short time pay for the International spreader at the new low price.



It is said that the American hen could pay off the whole war debt—and some people seem willing to stand idle and let her do it.

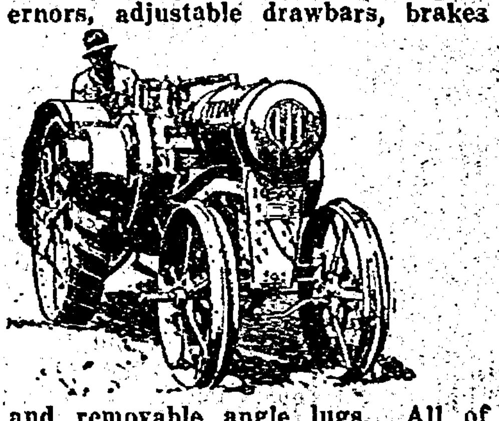
Meservey Farmers take Titan

The Messrs. Pals and Dirks of Meservey have just purchased a new Titan 10-20 to furnish the power for their International Thresher as well as do the plowing and other power work on their modern farms.

Nobody ever yet had enough of the right sort of encouragement.

Complete Tractors

Both the International 8-16 and the Titan 10-20 are sold complete at the advertising price. They are not stripped down to merely a set of wheels, an engine, and a frame to sell at low price, but they are complete with all the essential equipment that makes a tractor serviceable and safe—belt pulleys, protective fenders, comfortable platforms, throttle governors, adjustable drawbars, brakes and removable angle lugs. All of this equipment, which is vital to the tractor owners comfort and safety and worth more than $100, is included in the price. You don't have to buy a lot of extras to make your tractor complete when you can get an International 8-16 or Titan 10-20. For a short time only we can supply you with a FREE plow with either tractor, but prompt action is necessary.



Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Eaton and family returned last week from two week's auto trip to Tracy, Minn., and La Crosse Wisconsin.

Mrs. J. S. White was a Mason City visitor, Friday.

What Rate of Interest
Do You Pay On Your Farm Loan?

On June 1, 1922, the Federal Land Bank of Omaha reduced its interest rate to 5 1-2 per cent.

Many other loan concerns have followed with a reduction to 5 1-2 per cent.

Some institutions still charge 6 per cent even in territory like Iowa, Eastern Nebraska, and Eastern South Dakota.

On July 1, 1922, the Federal Land Bank of Omaha paid a 10 per cent dividend to its borrowers on their stock. This dividend reduces the 5 1-2 per cent rate to about 5 1-4 per cent.

In other words, you can get a farm loan through the Federal Land Bank of Omaha at 5 1-4 per cent interest.

Why pay more?

These loans are made for 34 1-2 years with favorable prepayment privileges.

Prompt Service, No Red Tape, No Delay, Plenty of Funds on Hand

It is by far the best and cheapest loan for the farmer.

STATE FAIR ONLY A MONTH DISTANT

With the opening date of the Iowa State Fair only a month distant, authorities here are beginning to look toward this great barometer for signs of Iowa's returning prosperity.

Indications were that they would not look in vain. State Fair officials said that the bettering of conditions among farmers of the state was being reflected materially in the great increases in entries in almost all of the agricultural and live stock departments of the exposition. Final entries do not close for live stock until August 1, but they now bid fair to go over the marks set last year in almost all departments.

Grain and farm produce exhibits also show marked gains, promising for state fair visitors this season one of the greatest showings of Iowa's farm wealth that has been seen in recent years.

Throughout their plans, fair officers are making preparations for larger crowds than they have entertained in a long time. Admission to the fair has been reduced to 50 cents, as compared with 75 cents for the last several years. Railroads have given additional inducements to state fair visitors by reducing rates to fare and one third for round trip instead of fare and one half.

"If the state fair is any indication, this is going to be a great year for Iowa," Secretary Corey said.

GOODELL NEWS NOTES

Last Thursday E. Wilkins returned from Marshalltown.

Dr. Snearly took Mrs. Dan Miller to the hospital at Hampton last Friday, where she was operated on the next day for appendicitis.

Frank Clark and Dan Miller drove to Hampton Sunday to see their wives.

Sunday O. Sandberg and family drove to Lake Mills to visit friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Beier came down from Manson to spend Sunday with his parents.

Rev. Caswell of Eagle Lake, Minn., is visiting Fred Bachman. He and his wife came to attend the funeral of his wife's sister who died at Mason City last Thursday night.

O. Nelson and family drove to Huxley Saturday to be present at the ordination of a school friend.

Mrs. John Ahrenkeil and Mrs. John Savogue visited at the home of the former's son Ted last week.

Julius Ahrenkeil was fishing at Clear Lake last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Wood of Marshalltown visited at the home of Mrs. Africa Thursday and Friday.

The Twin Lake Farm Bureau met at the home of Mrs. A. C. Carpenter last Friday. The ladies that attended report an enjoyable time.

Threshing has begun. Last Friday Curtis Luick threshed. Oats are of good quality.

Mr. and Mrs. Reader

When you pick up a copy of your home paper, do you give any thought how it was produced, or the money that is spent to print it and deliver it at your home?

The newspaper of today, no matter if 25 cents a copy was charged, would be the cheapest thing you bought.

In the first place it represents an investment in plant and equipment of many thousands of dollars.

Its editor and staff work diligently day in and day out to gather all the news and present it to you in readable fashion. It aims to keep you informed on all the news that's "fit for ink."

With the average paper, the price you pay for subscription does not cover the cost of WHITE PAPER.

Yes, the newspaper is the cheapest thing you buy.

Think it over. Look it over. Then support your home paper. It's the best investment you can make, for it brings the largest returns.

BRILLIANT ATTORNEY COMMITTED TO HOSPITAL

The distressing news reached this city this morning from Fort Dodge, that Robert Healy, one of the most brilliant and widely known attorneys in the state, and a resident of that city, was taken violently insane last week and upon hearing before the board of insanity commissioners of Webster county, was last Thursday removed to the state hospital at Cherokee.

Robert Healy was a man of about forty-eight years, with mental attainments of unusual power, and a successful attorney, was great in demand for addresses and speeches all over the state. When Robert Healy pleaded a case, the court room was packed with people to hear his plea. The sause of his great mental disorder is possibly helped along by too strenuous exertions in his work as a lawyer.

Mr. Healy has a wife and three children, all residents of Ft. Dodge and it was not until he became dangerous to the safety of the family, that he was taken to the state hospital.

Mr. Healy was in attendance at the judicial convention at Hampton and was also recently attending the meeting of the state bar association at Sioux City, giving there a very strong address against Capital Punishment. His physical and mental strength there, seemed as great as usual. He was the attorney for Olandor, of Fort Dodge in the recent case which came before the Supreme Court in Des Moines, and there made an oral plea which was a masterpiece.

Legal men all over the state will be saddened to hear of Mr. Healy's mental illness and it will be hoped that care and treatment will minister to the diseased mind with beneficial results.—Daily News.

PICK CHAMPION SPELLER

Iowa's champion boy or girl speller will be decided this year at the Iowa State Fair.

The annual state spelling contest will be held at the fair on the morning of Wednesday, August 30th. Each county in Iowa is to enter its champion speller to compete for the honors. The contest will be open to the general public. The fair offers $160 in this contest.

GOVERNOR KENDALL'S TELEGRAM TO PRES. HARDING:

"As Chief Executive of Iowa I pledge every recource of the State to the support of the program you have inaugurated for the relief of the fuel situation."

N. E. KENDALL, Governor.

Governor Kendall's statement to operators and miners:

"The mining industry in Iowa and largely throughout the country has suspended for nearly four months because of the inability of operators and miners to agree upon a contract. As a consequence, all productive industry has suffered acutely and a nationwide fuel famine is imminently threatened. Railroads and all other utilities have curtailed their service and are confronting a complete abandonment of operation. The institutions of public philanthropy and private benevolences such as hospitals for the sick, injured and insane, are facing the disaster of closing their doors to unfortunate humanity. The farmer, after producing with infinite toil a satisfactory harvest, sees his season's labor jeopardized and his grain rotting in the field because no coal is available for the summer's threshing. Almost every legitimate activity in the land has felt the fatal paralysis.

The President, as chief Executive of the United States, has invited you to resume operations at once under the wage scales and working conditions prevailing on April 1st. As Chief Executive of the State of Iowa, I earnestly unite in his invitation. The general welfare transcends in importance all group disputes, and the patriotic duty of every citizen is to contribute what he can to relieve a situation which has become intolerable. In this emergency no man will be compelled to work if he prefers to remain idle, but equally no man shall be prevented from working if he desires to do so. No interference with the reopening of the mines can be reasonably anticipated, but the ample protection of the State and of the government is assured in any event to all who will cooperate to establish and maintain a continuous fuel supply adequate to the necessities of the people."

N. E. KENDALL, Governor.

ATTEMPT TO ROB BANK AT HOLMES

Proffessional cracksman made a bold attempt Friday night to burglarize the Bank of Holmes, but were evidently frightened away before they could secure the cash in the bank. The yeggs used nitroglycerin to blow the combination lock on the vault and twisted off the handle in an attempt to work the bolts that fasten the door. The lock was evidently well muffled for no one can be found in town who heard the disturbance.

The plans of the robbers had been carefully laid for telegraph and telephone wires leading into the town had been cut, but the bandits were probably frightened away for they left their tools near the vault and made no attempt to now the door of the vault itself and secure the bank's cash.

The bank of Holmes, while one of the smaller banking institutions of the county, carries the usual deposit of Liberty bonds and other valueable negotiable paper and on Friday night had about two thousand dollars in cash in the vault. The band does not have a burglar alarm system so that the yeggs would have had little difficulty in rifling the vault if they had not been frightened away.

This is the first attempt which has been made to rob a bank in Wright county for a number of years. About a year ago it was discovered that plans had been made to rob the bank at Dows, but this attempt was frustrated when a gang of burglars was rounded up and taken into custody at Mason City.

The Holmes bank is a member of the Wright County Bankers' Association which offers a liberal reward for the apprehension of any bank robber operating in the county. A vigilance committee has also been formed which operates in each community in the county and probably for these reasons the banks in Wright county have not been molested. The attemped robbery of the Bank of Holmes was discovered on Saturday morning when Cashier Stroup opened the bank. The sheriff was immediately notified but there were few clues to work on and it is doubtful if the yeggs can be apprehended. —Times.

THE MYSTERY

One of the unexplained mysteries that is hard to understand is why will people buy goods from a peddler just because he claims that they are better than the local merchant or dealer has to offer? And pay 97c cents for an item plus freight, when a better product can be purchased for 65 cents from the local dealer.

A farmer was in town the other day and told the story, and took out some goods to take the place of some of the peddler product. He said never the farmers would combine and offer again, but did not raise his right hand, so he has a perfect right to experiment further along this line at some future date.

CHICKEN THIEVES THE FARMER'S WORST ENEMY

Chicken thieves are becoming more plentiful, at leest they are getting away with a good many chickens lately.

The bankers of the different counties are offering $1000 reward for the capture of each burglar—no mention is made whether they be dead or alive. It would be a good plan if the farmers would combine andoffer a like reward for their worst enemy. As a rule, the good wife takes care of the poultry, and it takes many a step to watch over the chicks until they become ready for market.

Our law makers now have under consideration a law which will make it unlawful to be on the public highway between sunrise and sunset with any of the different kinds of poultry in one's possession.

TRIMMING THE TREES

Some of the City Fathers over on Second street are giving the trees along the street a good trimming. Won't some please take up the habit on Main street just north of the Meat Market?

BAILEY'S CONTRACT DECLARED INVALID

After having awarded the Clarion strom sewer contract to the Belmond Construction Co., of Belmond, and the Baileys having signed the contract with the Board of Supervisors, and George Grattidge, as chairman of the Board having signed the contract, the Supervisors, at a meeting held Friday, re-opened the matter and recinded the award to the Belmond firm and at a hearing Monday, let the labor contract to Blackmore & Jenson, of Nevada, and the material contract to the Belmond Cement Mfg. Co. The saving over the original contract is now said to be approximately $3,700 instead of the $2,600 which the Board originally figured the joint bid represented.

The rescinding of the contract awarded the Bailey company probably means of a lawsuit. The senior member of the firm stated Monday evening he would not ask for injunction proceedings to protect his contract because he did not desire to delay the work here. But he believes he has a valid contract with the county for the ditch, and says he will probably sue to recover damages done his firm by the revocation of the contract.

After the Supervisors opened the bids a month ago it was found the Belmond Cement Mfg. Co. was low bid for material, and the Blackmore & Jensen company was low bid on labor. The bid, however, appeared rather vague, and the city council, sitting in the matter with the board, filed a written recommendation, urging that the Belmond firm's bid be accepted. The Supervisors have made this recommendation a part of the proceedings.

On the morning the bids were opened Supervisor Harris moved that the Belmond firm be given the contract. There was no second to this motion. It is thot that there were three members of the Board who did not favor the high bid, and they were asked if they would vote for the Bailey Co. contract if the city council would recommend it, and to this they agreed.

After the contract had been let, the Blackmore & Jenson company sent a lawyer here and threatened a suit against the Board to compell the award of the contract. This was after the Baileys had started work on the job. Judge Lee was here Friday and told the Board that under the law it had no authority to let a contract to a high bidder, and that his clients had instructed him to go to the limit to secure for them the contract to which they felt they were entitled. Then the Board consulted its attorneys in the matter, and the advice was that Judge Lee was probably right.

At the meeting yesterday, the Board's attorney, Mr. Birdsall, said that from the looks of things either way the Board acted it might mean a lawsuit, and it was up to them to decide upon a course of action. An executive session was called, and it was decided to let the bid of Blackmore & Jensen have the prefrence.

If the case goes to trial, the district will have to stand the legal expense involved, and that there will be no further litigation is too much to hope for.

One angle of the case is the claim that the contract with the Baileys is not legal, because Auditor Walker never attested to the signature of the Chairman of the Board. The bond filed had also not been accepted and approved.—Clarion News.

BOYS AND GIRLS TAKE NOTICE

C. W. Walker, state secretary of the American White Orpington association, announces that boys and girls of the state will be able to get settings of eggs from Orpington breeders free of charge. The only requirement is that the boy or girl raise a trio of the birds which are raised and show them at a fair advertising the name of the donor. He says that a number of breeders have already pledged eggs for next spring, and urges boys and girls of the state to get in touch with him. Take notice, boys and girls, send in your name and get ready for next spring. The address is C. W. Walker, Osage, Iowa.

GAS TAKES A DROP

All automobile owners were surprised with good news last week when they paid their gasoline bills. Gas rates were lowered two cents per gallon, and kerosense one cent a gallon.

Gasoline is now 24.1 cents at all oil stations and 22.1 cents off the wagons. Kerosene is now 12.4 cents from the wagons. The cause for lowering of rates as given out at the oil stations, is that the independent oil companies want another one cent per gallon, so the Standard Oil Company lowers rate.

BUILDINGS COMPLETED FOR OIL WAGON STATION

The Standard Oil Co. has the buildings completed for the tank wagon station here, and are now waiting for the big tanks to arrive. Evidently John D. has confidence in the future of Meservey.

NEW RADIO FILTER A MARVEL

Campbell Device That Separates Telephone and Telegraph Messages.

Although much has been said and written about the remarkable filters employed by the telephone lines and by advanced radio workers for the separation of telephone and telegraph messages, says the Scientific American, it remained for Dr. Frank B. Jewett, chief engineer of the Western Electric company, to demonstrate how the filter permits of transmitting radio telephone and telegraph messages simultaneously, and of separating these messages at the receiving end, at a meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers.

The present electrical filter is the invention of Dr. G. A. Campbell, a telephone engineer, and makes it possible to separate the various frequencies at which the individual telephone and telegraph messages are carried. The detected electrical current in a radio receiving set is passed through the filter which separates the frequencies of the telegraph message from those of the telephone.

The filter differs materially from the ordinary tuned circuits familiar to the radio enthusiast, since it separates not single frequencies but bands of frequencies of any predetermined width.

The filter makes it possible to separate the band of frequencies comprising the telephone message from the band comprising the telegraph message. It can also separate one telephone message from another.

"Ground Antennae."

Some relief from bothersome radio "strays" in summertime can be obtained with sets having good amplifiers by using a "ground antennae." This is a long insulated wire run in a shallow trench or on the surface of the ground. The ground wire should be run in the direction of the station from which the most signals are to be received, and should preferably be several hundred feet long.

To Regulate Wave Lengths.

A variable condenser when properly connected in the antenna circuit may be used either to lengthen or shorten the wave length range. Besides this, the degree of regulation is much finer, for at best the loading coil can tune in only to within a single turn, if a loading coil of the tuning coil type is used.

ROWAN NEWS

TENNIS TOURNAMENTS OF MUCH INTEREST

The tennis tournaments at Rowan are progressing nicely.

In the boys under 18 tournament, Dale Farran, Ty Azeltine, and Douglas Farran were contenders in the final brackets for the medal. Dale Farran beat Ty Azeltine in the semi-finals, and played Douglas Farran in the final, winning 6-1. The medal given in the tournament is of a different type than those given in other tournaments. It is known as a "Traveling" medal, and must be won two years in succession to become the permanent property of the winner.

The Business Men's Tournament, singles, was completed Tuesday evening. Bill Rietz, Charles Emerson, and Guy Sheldon were contenders in the final brackets of this tournament. Rietz defeated Sheldon 7-5, 7-5. Rietz also defeated Emerson 6-0, 6-0, making him winner of the gold medal.

The medals are on display at the Hackley drug store. The medals for the Ladies Open Tournament will arrive in a few days. It is hoped that all of those ladies in and near Rowan who have played any tennis will enter this tournament and try for these gold and bronze medals.

The Mens Open Tournament will probably start sometime this week, but will be held up to some extent by the absence of the Rev. Tomkinson and Guy Sheldon. The former was unable to play in the Business mens Tournament. But both he and D. W. Farran expect to enter the Open Tournament. Anyone is eligible to enter this tournament, and now would be a very good time to get in shape for the Wright County Tournament to be held at the Clarmond Country Club some time in the first part of August.

These tournaments, if they have done nothing more, have developed a spirit of clean sportsmanship among the many contenders for the medals. It is hoped that such tournaments may be made an annual affair at Rowan.

"HUMORESQUE"

The Kantors live on the East Side of New York in the poorest quarter. They consist of Abraham Kantor, his wife, and eight children. The elder Kantor takes his little son Leon to a toy shop to buy him a present on his seventh birthday. Leon falls in love with a violin in the shop. It costs too much and Mr. Kantor will not buy it. Leon screams so with disappointment that his father yanks him home and tells Mamma Kantor about it.

She is wild with joy, believing that her life-long dream of having a son become a famous musician has come true. She steals out and buys Leon the fiddle.

Fifteen years later, he is recognized genius of the violin. On the night he gives a monster concert for the poor people of the East Side, he also announces that he has enlisted for the great war. He becomes engaged to Gina Ginsberg, a playmate of his childhood, on the eve of his departure.

Leon returns with a wounded shoulder. The doctors say he will never be able to play the violin again. Music is his whole life and he becomes a morose recluse. He tells Gina that he—a cripple—can never marry her. The shock is too much for Gina, who loves him dearly. She faints and Leon picks her up in his arms. He suddenly discovers that he has used his supposedly useless left arm. Fearfully he takes his violin. He can play! Wild joy seizes Leon, his faithful mother, and Gina.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter.

CHAPTER II.—Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago.

CHAPTER III.—From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deeded his house and its contents to Alan.

CHAPTER IV.—Alan takes possession of his new home.

CHAPTER V.—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has deeded his entire property to him. Introduced to Spearman, Alan is astounded at the discovery that he is the man whom he had found in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII.—Alan tells no one of his strange encounter, but in a private interview taxes Spearman with the fact. Spearman laughs at and defies him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes his employer is dead. He also tells him the legend of the Indian Drum, which according to old superstition beats once for every life lost on the Great Lakes. Twenty years before, the great freighter Miwaka had gone down with twenty-five on board, but the Drum had sounded for only twenty-four, leaving the inference that one person had been saved, since it was general belief that the drum never erred. Pursuing a stranger who had made a disturbance at his house, Alan is slugged and rendered unconscious.

CHAPTER IX.—Conrad recovers, and the affair remains a mystery.

CHAPTER X.—Alan learns from Wassaquam that it was Corvet's habit to keep the sum of $1,000 in the house, apparently to meet the demands of a certain "Luke," who appeared periodically. In the absence of Wassaquam, "Luke" comes to the house demanding to see Corvet. He is evidently in a dying condition, due to alcohol and exposure. Conrad tries without avail to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. The man dies. Wassaquam gives Conrad a paper on which is a list of names.

CHAPTER XI.—From the document Alan thinks he may have a clue to the mystery surrounding Corvet's life and disappearance. He leaves Chicago to visit Lake Michigan ports in search of the persons whose names were on the list.

CHAPTER XII.—Constance receives a package wrapped in a muffler which she recognizes Corvet was wearing on the day he went away. It contains a few coins, a watch, and woman's wedding ring. She believes them to have been the property of Corvet, and accepts them as a proof of his death. Spearman urges Constance to marry him. She consents, but refuses his demand for an immediate ceremony.

CHAPTER XIII.—Inquiries show that the watch in the package had been the property of a Captain Stafford, commander of the Miwaka, who had gone down with his ship.

CHAPTER XIV.—Working on a lake freighter, Alan becomes acquainted with an elderly man known as "Jim Burr," who seems to be possessed of information which Alan believes would only be known to Corvet.

CHAPTER XV.—Alan secures a position on the freighter of which "Burr" is wheelsman. He is satisfied he has found the man he believes to be his father. "Burr," at the wheel of the freighter, apparently in dementia, refuses to obey orders to change the vessel's course, and the ship collides with a derelict. In almost sinking condition they attempt to reach port. The loaded freight cars which the vessel is carrying break loose.

CHAPTER XVI.—Corvet recovers his reason and leads in the work of throwing the cars overboard. He and Alan are pinned under the debris. Alan discloses his identity. Corvet tells him Spearman had killed his father. Alan is rescued, but it is impossible to save Corvet. A priest, passenger on the boat, is summoned, and Alan leaves them in conversation.

CHAPTER XVII.—The news of the loss of the freighter reaches Chicago. Spearman, fearing that Conrad had found Corvet, seems, to Constance's amazement, actually to rejoice at the sinking.

"What is it, Henry?"

His muscular reaction, as he read, had drawn the sheet away from her; he recovered himself almost instantly and gave the paper to her.

"8:35 a. m., Manitowoc, Wis.," she read. "The schooner Anna S. Solwerk has been sighted making for this port. She is not close enough for communication, but two lifeboats, additional to her own, can be plainly made out. It is believed that she must have picked up survivors of No. 25. She carries no wireless, so is unable to report. Tugs are going to her."

"Two lifeboats!" Constance cried. "That could mean that they all are saved or nearly all; doesn't it, Henry; doesn't it?"

He had read some other significance in it, she thought, or, from his greater understanding of conditions in the storm, he had been able to hold no hope from what had been reported. That was the only way she could explain to herself as he replied to her; that the word meant to him that men were saved and that therefore it was dismaying to him, could not come to her at once. When it came now, it went over her first only in the flash of incredulous question.

The telephone buzzer under his desk sounded; she drew close as he took up his receiver.

"Manitowoc?" he said. "I want to know what you've heard from the Solwerk. . . . You hear me? . . . The men the Solwerk picked up. You have the names yet?"

". . ."

"The Benton?"

". . ."

"Oh, I understand! All from the Benton. I see! . . . No; never mind their names. How about Number 25? Nothing more heard from them?"

Constance had caught his shoulder while he was speaking and now clung to it. Release—release of strain was going through him! she could feel it, and she heard it in his tones and saw it in his eyes.

"The steamer Number 25 rammed proved to have been the Benton," he told her. "The men are all from her. They had abandoned her in the small boats, and the Solwerk picked them up before the ferry found her."

He was not asking her to congratulate him upon the relief he felt; he had not so far forgotten himself as that. But it was plain to her that he was congratulating himself; it had been fear that he was feeling before—fear, she was beginning to understand, that those on the ferry had been saved.

Horror and amazement flowed in upon her with her realization of this in the man she had promised to marry. For an instant she stared at him, all her body tense; then, as she turned and went out, he followed her, calling her name. But, seeing the seamen in the larger office, he stopped, and she understood he was not willing to urge himself upon her in their presence.

"I'm willing to go home now, mother, if you wish," she said steadily.

When they had gone down to the street and were in the car, Constance leaned back, closing her eyes; she feared her mother might wish to talk with her.

Toward three o'clock, the office called her, but only to report that they had heard from Mr. Sherrill. He had wired that he was going on from Manistique and would cross the straits from St. Ignace; messages from him were to be addressed to Petoskey. There was no other report except that vessels were still continuing the search for survivors, because the Indian Drum, which had been beating, was beating "short," causing the superstitious to be certain that, though some of the men from Number 25 were lost, some yet survived.

Constance thrilled as she heard that. She did not believe in the Drum; at least she had never thought she had really believed in it; she had only stirred to the idea of its being true. But if the Drum was beating, she was glad it was beating short. It was serving, at least, to keep the lake men more alert.

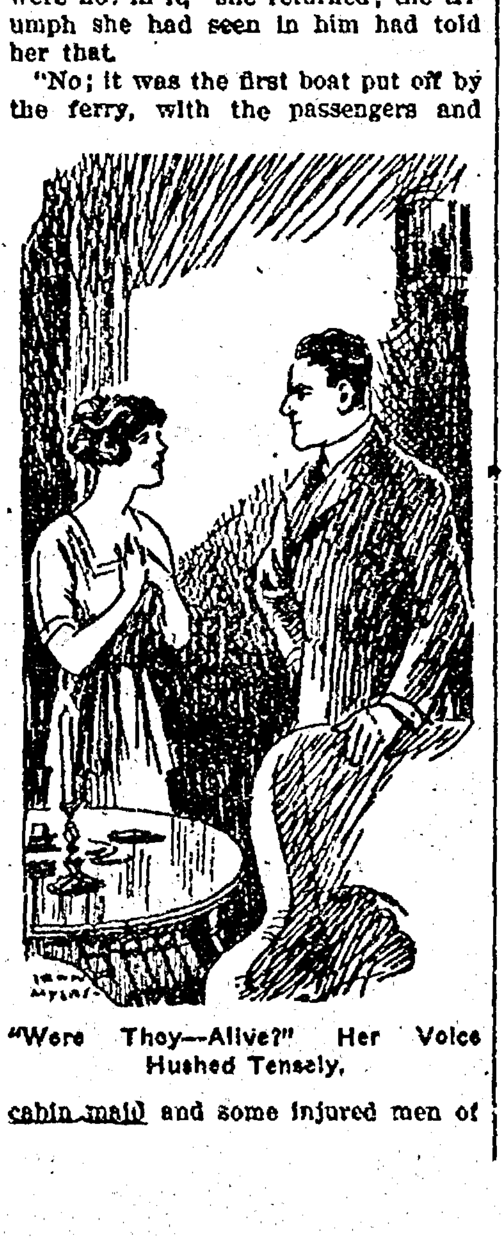
A little later, as Constance stood at the window, gazing out at the snow upon the lake, she drew back suddenly out of sight from the street, as she saw Henry's roadster appear out of the storm and stop before the house.

She waited in the room where she was. The strain he was under had not lessened, she could see; or rather, if she could trust her feeling at sight of him, it had lessened only slightly, and at the same time his power to resist it had been lessening too.

"I thought you'd want to know, Connie," he said, "so I came straight out. The Richardson's picked up one of the boats of the ferry."

"Uncle Benny and Alan Conrad were not in it," she returned; the triumph she had seen in him had told her that.

"No; it was the first boat put off by the ferry, with the passengers and cabin maid and some injured men of the crew."



"Were They—Alive?" Her Voice Hushed Tensely.

"Were they — alive?" her voice hushed tensely.

"Yes; that is, they were able to revive them all; but it didn't seem possible to the Richardson's officers that anyone could be revived who had been exposed much longer than that; so the Richardson's given up the search, and some of the other ships that were searching have given up too, and gone on their course."

"I see; how many were in the boat?"

"Twelve, Connie."

"Then all the vessels up there won't give up yet!"

"Why not?"

"I was just talking with the office, Henry; they've heard again from the other end of the lake. The people up there say the Drum is beating, but it's beating short still!"

"Short!"

She saw Henry stiffen. "Yes," she said swiftly. "They say the Drum began sounding last night, and that at first it sounded for only two lives; it's kept on beating, but still is beating only for four. There were thirty-nine on the ferry—seven passengers and thirty-two crew. Twelve have been saved now; so until the Drum raises the beats to twenty-seven there is still a chance that someone will be saved."

Constance watched him with wonder at the effect of what she had told. The news of the Drum had shaken him from his triumph over Alan and Uncle Benny and over her. It had shaken him so that, though he remained with her some minutes more, he seemed to have forgotten the purpose of reconciliation with her which had brought him to the house.

She dined, or made pretence of dining, with her mother at seven. Her mother's voice went on and on about trifles, and Constance did not try to pay attention. Her thought was following Henry with ever-sharpening apprehension. She called the office in mid-evening; it would be open, she knew, for messages regarding Uncle Benny and Alan would be expected there. A clerk answered; no other news had been received; she then asked Henry's whereabouts.

"Mr. Spearman went north late this afternoon, Miss Sherrill," the clerk informed her.

"North! Where?"

"We are to communicate with him this evening to Grand Rapids; after that, to Petoskey."

Constance could hear her own heart beat. Why had Henry gone, she wondered; not, certainly, to aid the search. He had gone to—hinder it?

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Watch Upon the Beach.

Constance was throbbing with determination and action, as she found her purse and counted the money in it. She never in her life had gone alone upon an extended journey, much less been alone upon a train overnight. If she spoke of such a thing now, she would be prevented; no occasion for it would be recognized; she would not be allowed to go, even if "properly accompanied." She could not, therefore, risk taking a handbag from the house; so she thrust nightdress and toilet articles into her muff and the roomy pocket of her fur coat. She descended to the side door of the house, gained the street and turned westward at the first corner to a street car which would take her to the railway station.

The manner of buying a railway ticket and of engaging a berth were unknown to her—there had been servants always to do these things—but she watched others and did as they did. She procured a telegraph blank and wrote a message to her mother, telling her that she had gone north to join her father. When the train had started, she gave the message to the porter, directing him to send it from the first large town at which they stopped.

Constance could not, as yet, place Henry's part in the strange circumstances which had begun to reveal themselves with Alan's coming to Chicago; but Henry's hope that Uncle Benny and Alan were dead was beginning to make that clearer. She lay without voluntary movement in her berth, but her bosom was shaking with the thoughts which came to her.

Twenty years before, some dreadful event had altered Uncle Benny's life; his wife had known—or had learned—enough of that event so that she had left him. It had seemed to Constance and her father, therefore, that it must have been some intimate and private event.

Uncle Benny had withdrawn himself from men; he had ceased to be active in his business and delegated it to others. This change had been strangely advantageous to Henry. Henry had been hardly more than a common seaman then. He had been a mate—the mate on one of Uncle Benny's ships. Quite suddenly he had become Uncle Benny's partner. Henry had explained this to her by saying that Uncle Benny had not trusted Henry; he had been suspicious of him; he had quarreled with him. How strange, then, that Uncle Benny should have advanced and given way to a man whom he could not trust!

Uncle Benny had come to her and warned her not to marry Henry; then he had sent for Alan. There had been purpose in these acts of Uncle Benny's; had they meant that Uncle Benny had been on the verge of making explanation—that explanation which Henry feared—and that he had been—prevented? Her father had thought this; at least, he had thought that Uncle Benny must have left some explanation in his house. He had told Alan that, and had given Alan the key to the house so that he could find it. Alan had gone to the house—

In the house Alan had found someone who had mistaken him for a ghost, a man who had cried out at sight of him something about a ship—about the Miwaka, the ship of whose loss no one had known anything except by the soundings of the Drum. What had the man been doing in the house? Had he too been looking for the explanation—the explanation that Henry feared? Alan had described the man to her; that description had not had meaning for her before; but now remembering that description she could think of Henry as the only one who could have been in that house! Henry had fought with Alan there! Afterwards, when Alan had been attacked upon the street, had Henry anything to do with that?

Henry had lied to her about being in Duluth the night he had fought with Alan; he had not told her the true cause of his quarrels with Uncle Benny; he had wished her to believe that Uncle Benny was dead when the wedding ring and watch came to her—the watch which had been Captain Stafford's of the Miwaka! Henry had urged her to marry him at once. Was that because he wished the security that her father—and she—must give her husband when they learned the revelation which Alan or Uncle Benny might bring?

At Petoskey she went from the train directly to the telegraph office. If Henry was in Petoskey, they would know at that office where he could be found; he would be keeping in touch with them.

Mr. Spearman, the operator said, had been at the office early in the day; there had been no message for him; he had left instructions that any which came were to be forwarded to him through the men who, under his direction, were patrolling the shore for twenty miles north of Little Traverse, watching for boats.

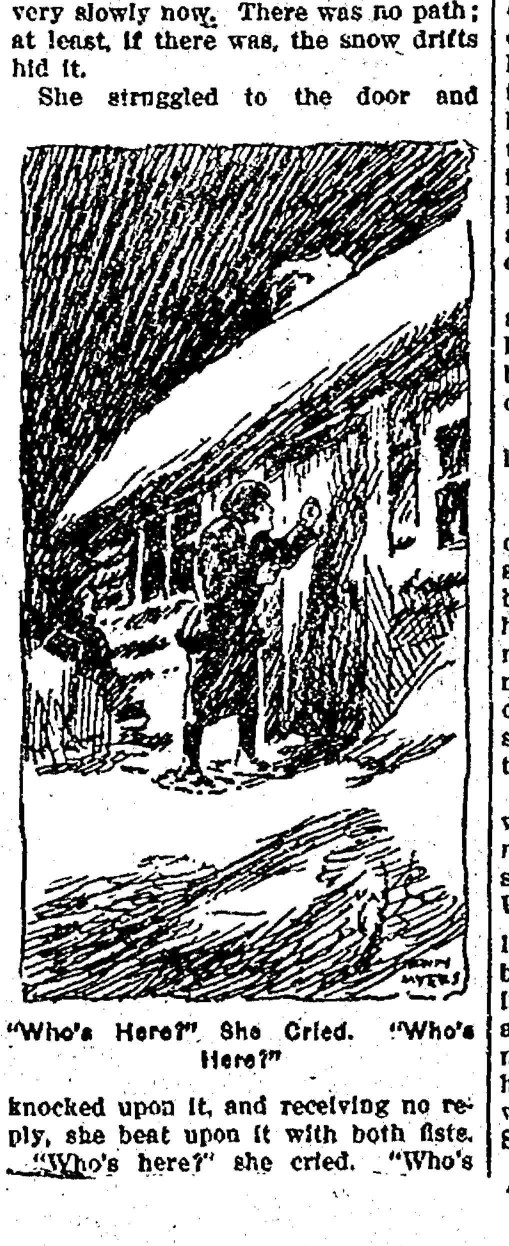
Constance crossed the frozen edges of the bay by sledge to Harbor Point. Her distrust now had deepened to terrible dread. She had not been able before this to form any definite idea of how Henry could threaten Alan and Uncle Benny; she had imagined only vague interference and obstruction of the search for them; she had not foreseen that he could so readily assume charge of the search and direct, or misdirect, it.

At the Point she discharged the sledge and went on foot to the house of the caretaker who had charge of the Sherrill cottage during the winter. Getting the keys from him, she let herself into the house. Going to her room, she unpacked a heavy sweater and woolen cap and short fur coat—winter things which were left there against use when they opened the house sometimes out of season—and put them on. Then she went down and found her snowshoes. Stopping at the telephone, she called long distance and asked them to locate Mr. Sherrill, if possible, and instruct him to move south along the shore with whomever he had with him. She went out then, and fastened on her snowshoes.

Constance hurried westward and then north, following the bend of the shore. The figure of a man—one of the shore patrols—pacing the ice hummocks of the beach and staring out upon the lake, appeared vaguely in the dusk when she had gone about two miles. She came, three quarters of a mile farther on, to a second man; about an equal distance beyond she found a third, but passed him and went on.

Her legs ached now with the unaccustomed travel upon snowshoes; the cold, which had been only a piercing chill at first, was stopping feeling, almost stopping thought. She was horrified to find that she was growing weak and that her senses were becoming confused. She had come, in all, perhaps eight miles; and she was "playing out." She descended to the beach again and went on; her gaze continued to search the lake, but now, wherever there was a break in the bluffs, she looked toward the shore as well. At the third of these breaks, the yellow glow of a window appeared, marking a house in a hollow between snow-shrouded hills. She turned eagerly that way; she could go only very slowly now. There was no path; at least, if there was, the snow drifts hid it.

She struggled to the door and knocked upon it, and receiving no reply, she beat upon it with both fists. "Who's here?" she cried. "Who's here?"



"Who's Here?" She Cried. "Who's Here?"

The door opened then a very little, and the frightened face of an Indian woman appeared in the crack. The woman evidently had expected—and feared—some arrival, and was reassured when she saw only a girl. She threw the door wider open, and bent to help unfasten Constance's snowshoes; having done that, she led her in and closed the door.

"Where is your man?" Constance had caught the woman's arm.

"They sent him to the beach. A ship has sunk."

"Are there houses near here? You must run to one of them at once. Bring whoever you can get; or if you won't do that, tell me where to go."

The woman stared at her stolidly and moved away. "None near," she said. "Besides, you could not get somebody before some one will come."

"Who is that?"

"He is on the beach—Henry Spearman. He comes here to warm himself. It is nearly time he comes again."

Constance gazed at her; the woman was plainly glad of her coming. Her relief—relief from that fear she had been feeling when she opened the door—was very evident. It was Henry, then, who had frightened her.

The Indian woman set a chair for her beside the stove, and put water in a pan to heat; she shook tea leaves from a box into a bowl and brought a cup.

"How many on that ship?"

"Altogether there were thirty-nine," Constance replied.

"Seven are living then."

"Seven? What have you heard? What makes you think so?"

"That is what the Drum says."

The Drum! There was a Drum then! At least there was some sound which people heard and which they called the Drum. For the woman had heard it.

Constance grew suddenly cold. For twenty lives, the woman said, the Drum had beat; that meant to her, and to Constance too now, that seven were left. Indefinite, desperate denial that all from the ferry must be dead—that denial which had been strengthened by the news that at least one boat had been adrift near Beaver—altered in Constance to conviction of a boat with seven men from the ferry, seven dying, perhaps, but not yet dead. Seven out of twenty-seven; The score were gone; the Drum had beat for them in little groups as they died. When the Drum beat again, would it beat beyond the score?

Having finished the tea, Constance returned to the door and reopened it; the sounds outside were the same. A solitary figure appeared moving along the edge of the ice—the figure of a tall man, walking on snowshoes; moonlight distorted the figure, and it was muffled, too, in a great coat which made it unrecognizable. He halted and stood looking out at the lake and then, with a sudden movement, strode on; he halted again, and now Constance got the knowledge that he was not looking; he was listening as she was.

"Is the Drum sounding now?" she asked the woman.

"No."

Constance gazed again at the man and found his motion quite unmistakable; he was counting—if not counting something that he heard, or thought he heard, he was recounting and reviewing within himself something that he had heard before—some irregular rhythm which had become so much a part of him that it sounded now continually within his own brain; so that, instinctively, he moved in cadence to it. He stepped forward again now, and turned toward the house.

Her breath caught as she spoke to the woman. "Mr. Spearman is coming here now!"

Her impulse was to remain where she was, lest he should think she was afraid of him; but realization came to her that there might be advantage in seeing him before he knew that she was there, so she reclosed the door and drew back into the cabin.

CHAPTER XIX

The Sounding of the Drum.

Noises of the wind and the roaring of the lake made inaudible any sound of his approach to the cabin; she heard his snowshoes, however, scrape the cabin wall as, after taking them off, he leaned them beside the door. He thrust the door open then and came in; he did not see her at first and, as he turned to force the door shut again against the wind she watched him quietly.

He saw her now and started and, as though sight of her confused him, he looked from the woman and then back to Constance before he seemed certain of her.

"Hello!" he said tentatively. "Hello!"

"I'm here, Henry."

"Oh; you are! You are!" He stood drawn up, swaying a little as he stared at her; whisky was upon his breath, and it became evident in the heat of the room; but whisky could not account for this condition she witnessed in him. Neither could it conceal that condition; some turmoil and strain within him made him immune to its effects.

She had realized on her way up here what, vaguely, that strain within him must be. Guilt—guilt of some awful sort connected him, and had connected Uncle Benny, with the Miwaka—the lost ship for which the Drum had beaten the roll of the dead. Guilt was in his thought now—racking, tearing at him. But there was something more than that; what she had seen in him when he first caught sight of her was fear—fear of her, of Constance Sherrill.

"You came up here about Ben Corvet?" he challenged.

"Yes—no!"

"Which do you mean?"

"No."

"I know, then. For him, then—eh! For him?"

"For Alan Conrad? Yes," she said.

"I knew it!" he repeated. "He's been the trouble between you and me all the time!"

She made no denial of that; she had begun to know during the last two days that it was so.

"So you came to find him?" Henry went on.

"He'll be found!" she defied him.

"Be found?"

"Some are dead," she admitted, "but not all. Twenty are dead; but seven are not!"

"Seven?" he echoed. "You say seven are not! How do you know?"

"The Drum has been beating for twenty, but not for more!" Constance said. "The Drum you've been listening to all day upon the beach—the Indian Drum that sounded for the dead of the Miwaka; sounded, one by one, for all who died! But it didn't sound for him! It's been sounding again, you know; but, again, it doesn't sound for him, Henry, not for him!"

"The Miwaka! What do you mean by that? What's that got to do with this?" His swollen face was thrust forward at her; there was threat against her in his tense muscles and his bloodshot eyes.

She did not shrink back from him, or move; and now he was not waiting for her answer. Something—a sound—had caught him about. Once it echoed, low in its reverberation but penetrating and quite distinct. It came, so far as direction could be assigned to it, from the trees toward the shore; but it was like no forest sound. Distinct, too, was it from any noise of the lake. It was like a Drum! Yet, when the echo had gone, it was a sensation easy to deny—a hallucination, that was all. But now, low and distinct it came again; and, as before, Constance saw it catch Henry and hold him. His lips moved, but he did not speak; he was counting. "Two," she saw his lips form.

The sound of the Drum was continuing, the beats a few seconds apart. "Twelve," Constance counted to herself. The beats had seemed to be quite measured and regular at first; but now Constance knew that this was only roughly true; they beat rather in rhythm than at regular intervals. "Twenty—twenty-one — twenty-two!" Constance caught breath and waited for the next beat; the time of the interval between the measures of the rhythm passed, and still only the whistle of the wind and the undertone of water sounded. The Drum had beaten its roll and, for the moment, was done.

Twenty-two had been her count, as nearly as she could count at all; the reckoning agreed with what the Indian woman had heard. Two had died, then, since the Drum last had beat, when its roll was twenty. Two more than before; that meant five were left!

Constance caught up her woolen hood from the table and put it on. Her action seemed to call Henry to himself.

"What are you going to do?" he demanded.

"I'm going out."

He moved between her and the door. "Not alone, you're not!" His heavy voice had a deep tone of menace in it; he seemed to consider and decide something about her. "There's a farmhouse about a mile back; I'm going to take you over there and leave you with those people."

"I will not go there!"

He swore. "I'll carry you, then!"

She shrank back from him as he lurched toward her with hands outstretched to seize her; he followed her, and she avoided him again; if his guilt and terror had given her mental ascendency over him, his physical strength could still force her to his will and, realizing the impossibility of evading him or overcoming him, she stopped.

"Not that!" she cried. "Don't touch me!"

"Come with me, then!" he commanded; and he went to the door and laid his snowshoes on the snow and stepped into them, stooping and tightening the straps; he stood by while she put on hers. He did not attempt again to put hands upon her as they moved away from the little cabin toward the woods back of the clearing; but went ahead, breaking the trail for her with his snowshoes. He moved forward slowly; he could travel, if he had wished, three feet to every two that she could cover, but he seemed not wishing for speed but rather for delay. A deep, dull resonance was booming above the wood; it boomed again and ran into a rhythm. No longer was it above; at least it was not only above; it was all about them—here, there, to right and to left, before, behind—the booming of the Drum. Doom was the substance of that sound of the Drum beating the roll of the dead.

Henry had stopped in front of her, half turned her way; his body swayed and bent to the booming of the Drum, as his swollen lips counted its soundings. She could see him plainly in the moonlight, yet she drew nearer to him as she followed his count. "Twenty-one," he counted—"Twenty-two!" The drum was still going on. "Twenty-four—twenty-five—twenty-six!" Would he count another?

BIG DOIN'S GETTING READY FOR AUGUST 23

Belmond Boy To Teach In Japan

Jasper Johnson Leaves Friday To Teach In Commercial College There.

RECEIVES HIGH HONOR

Jasper M. Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lud Johnson residing just west of town, expects to leave this week Friday on the first leg of his voyage to Japan, where he will teach this coming year in an American college.

"Jap.", who is known by everyone in Belmond where he has lived about all his life, has been attending the State University of Iowa, and it was thru acquaintances and connections there that he was offered the position, which is an important one and one which Jasper has every ability to fill. He will teach English composition in the Nagasaki Higher Commercial College at Nagasaki, Japan. It is strictly commercial institution, with only men students, the teachers being mostly Americans, with a few Japanese. One of "Jap's" college friends is now engaged in the school as a teacher.

Jasper leaves for St. Paul, thence to Vancouver, where he takes the steamship "Empress of Asia", sailing the 10th of August for Yokohama. From Yokohama to Nagasaki is a trip of some 800 miles, requiring in the neighborhood of 35 hours to make by rail. Nagasaki is in the southern part of Japan.

Jasper will carry with him the best wishes of his many Belmond friends, who have every confidence that "Jap" will make good. His trip will give him a wonderful experience and show him much of the world that is an unknown quantity to the most of us. We have his promise of some articles dealing with the customs of the country, and the way they do things in the Flowery Kingdom.

1915 CLASS REUNION

Last Sunday afternoon the class of 1915 enjoyed another one of their happy reunions at Tyrrell Park. Sixteen out of the class of '22 responded to roll call—this last year our beloved classmate, Agnes Enger, responded to the roll call of the Great Teacher, and the joyousness of the day was saddened because she could not be with us.

Our class president, Jasper Johnson, soon leaves for Japan where he will teach in a commercial college. We are proud of "Jap" and know he will make good. Our hearts send out after him an abundance of good wishes as he sets sail.

We are proud of the fact that this is our sixth reunion. We doubt in all the history of B. H. S. has any class proven so loyal and responded so heartily to meeting again and renewing friendships and the days of youth. After such an afternoon we enjoyed a delicious picnic supper and then left Tyrrell Park for the palatial country home of Cecelia and Beatrice Barry where a most enjoyable evening was spent—and again eats, which we successfully got away with.

FIRE MONDAY DESTROYS BARN AND STOCK

Fire of unknown origin destroyed a large barn and all its contents, together with several head of livestock, at the Bob Reed farm southwest of Belmond. The alarm was turned in in town and the chemical engine and a crew of fire fighters were on the scene in a few minutes, but the barn, being full of hay—almost all of this year's crop—was beyond saving and the men devoted their time to saving the adjacent buildings. The barn and contents including all the hay was totally destroy, but was covered by insurance. Several head of hogs, the exact number not being known at this writing, were also burned, and these represent a loss of no small amount as there was no insurance on them. A fire nowadays to a farmer is a serious affair, and Mr. Reed has the sympathy of all in the loss.

COUNTY TENNIS TOURNAMENT BEGINS AUGUST 3RD

The second annual Wright County Tennis tournament is to be held out on the courts of the Clarmond Country club beginning today, August 3. Arrangements are completed for the first play to start at 9:00 o'clock this morning, in order that the elimination rounds may be out of the way as soon as possible. Entries were made for both the singles and doubles competition, and everything points to a very fair list of entries. Players from Belmond, Clarion, Rowan, Eagle Grove, and Dows have entered and it is expected that there will be others by the opening. Medals will be given to the winners and runners-up in the singles and the doubles.

BAILEY CONTRACT DEAL IS SETTLED

Belmond Man Releases County From Damages For The Breach Of Contract.

The action of the board of supervisors last week in rescinding its action regarding the awarding of contract for the laterals to Clarion's storm sewer for the time being put E. F. Bailey of Belmond, who was originally awarded the contract, in the hole several thousand dollars. He had ordered considerable material and sublet a portion of the job, in fact work on the same had been commenced. The tangle was satisfactorily adjusted to all concerned by the new contractors buying one of Mr. Bailey's large dredging machines and the other successful company taking the material off his hands, after which Mr. Bailey released the county from any damage he might have sustained. Work on the laterals is now under way and the Nevada company expects to have a goodly portion of the contract completed before snow flies.

Miss Blanche Eddy, who has been Miss Kate Liddle's valued assistant in the Red Cross nursing activities in Wright county since last September, has been given charge of the work in Dickinson county with headquarters at Spirit Lake. Miss Eddy came to Clarion soon after completing her course at Wesleyan hospital at Chicago, and entered into the work in this county with considerable zeal from the very beginning. She has had seven years teaching experience and two years normal training previous to that. She also likes the work very much and the qualifications make a good foundation for a successful nurse. Miss Eddy will further prepare herself by attending a general conference for three weeks at Iowa City, where the physical examination of children will be given special emphasis. Six consolidated schools and 40 rural schools will come under her jurisdiction in Dickinson county.

Miss Banche Bock returned home last week from Boston, where she attended the National Educational convention. The reports are of an interesting trip and she was deeply impressed with the historic sights in and about one of the nation's oldest cities.

Deputy Denger arrested G. F. Bishop of Wall Lake township for having a stolen Ford touring car in his possession. The car was taken from Webster City a short time ago. But Bishop claims he bought it of a man by the name of Williams living at Iowa Falls for $105. The car was in some kind of a mixup and taken to a Dows garage for repairs. Bishop's stories are somewhat conflicting, but it is to be hoped he can prove his innocence. He was given a hearing Monday at Webster City, where he waived examination and was released on bond.

In concluding the business of the April term of Court Judge Thompson of Webster City, among other things, meted out a 90 day sentence to a Bulgarian bootlegger from Eagle Grove by the name of Victor Christoll. In lieu of a jail sentence he is privileged to pay a $300 fine. Last May Marshal Raynols caught him with the goods in his pockets, also two prospective purchasers at the same time. The evidence was conclusive and the accused entered a plea of guilty. Mayor Baker imposed a sentence of 30 days in the county jail at Clarion. When this was completed and Christoll was about to put on his coat and return to Eagle, Sheriff Lang served notice on him that the county had an unsettled score. Being no other alternative he plead guilty before Attorney Rogers and the judge did the rest.

Judge Thompson refused Ella Thebiay a divorce from her husband Art Thebiay of Eagle Grove. His decision automatically nullified her application for separate maintenance. A few judgements by default and the disposition of several probate matters concluded the business of the term.

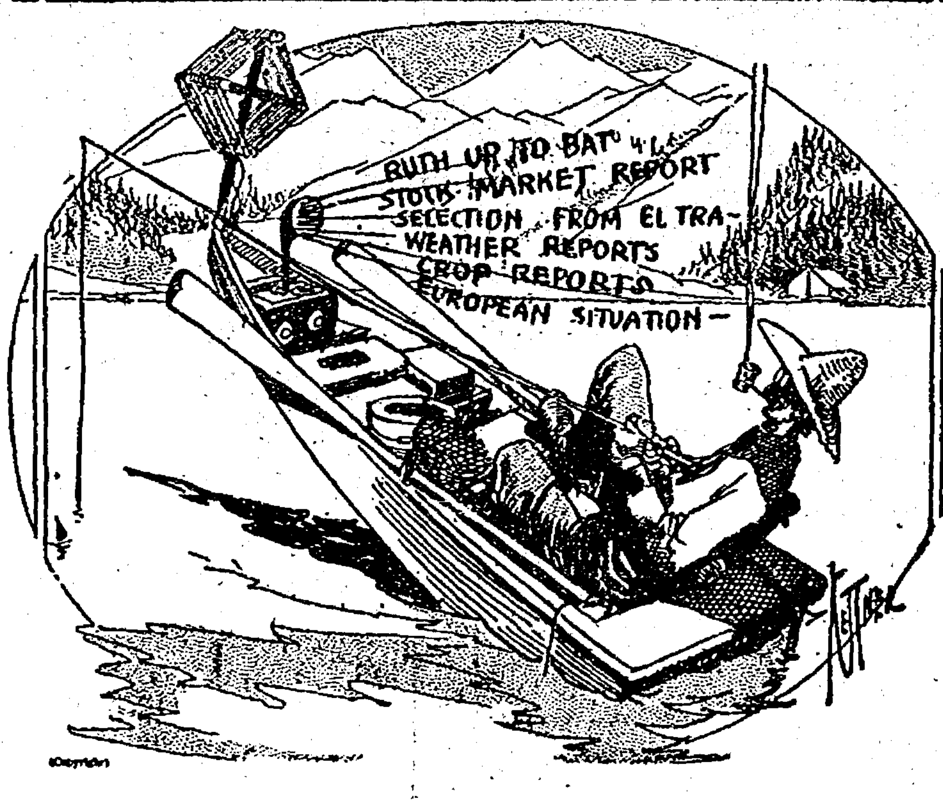
J. H. Reese, R. Richardson and D. W. Stewart, collateral inheritance tax commissioners, were in session Monday over the estates of J. I. Knox of Dows and Anton Beer of Eagle Grove. The Oliver Nelson estate at Goldfield came up for appraisement August 1st.

Miss Kate Liddle is home from her vacation trip to points in Alaska, where she saw many interesting sights, beautiful scenery and large numbers of snow-capped mountains. The fartherest point traveled was Lake Bennett, which is many miles from the nearest railroad. There were few white men, mostly Indians and Japs whose chief occupation was fishing and hunting.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP FARM BUREAU TO MEET AUGUST 7

The next regular monthly meeting of the Pleasant Township Farm Bureau will be held on August 7th, at the home of J. F. Barry. A good program has been arranged for the evening, and everybody is invited to attend and enjoy the evening. Ice cream and cake will be served.

Ninety-Nine Miles From Anywhere



COMPARING KANSAS

The details of the editor's trip to Kansas are of no interest to our readers, but perhaps a comparison of the country may be. Our destination was southern central Kansas, about three miles from the Oklahoma line, and, to state it briefly, we wouldn't live in that part of the country if they would give us the state and a thousand dollars a week. The country is flat, level as a floor, in the southern part, with very few trees and never a hill to vary the monotony. Everything is wheat, just wheat and nothing but wheat, as far as the eye can see. Once in a while there will be a small patch of corn, nothing to speak of. The farmer starts harvesting the latter part of June, and after threshing, he "lists" the ground (which consists in going over the field with a lister and leaving a wide furrow) and later he then "busts it back." They use what they call a "ridge buster," and going over the field plow between the furrows originally made with the lister. They have their reason for it, but to save us we couldn't see it. They then harrow and sow, and by about October 1 they are thru. With everything in winter wheat, the farmer has "nothing to do" until next June. He does not, in fact, have anything but the general routine of farm work, and as they do not raise the hogs nor the cattle that we do here, their chores are almost a minus item compared to the Iowa farmer's daily duties. They have but one or two milk cows as a rule, and perhaps half a dozen hogs. Their whole work, their entire dependence almost, is in wheat. The northern farmer has his cream check every month, his butter and egg money; down there they do not have them, with a few exceptions of chickens.

In northern Kansas they raise good corn, along with their wheat; in fact they seem to live differently altogether than they do in the south. All thru the state there was one universal thing, however, and that was their way of getting water, which is generally by one of two methods, or both: The "Old Oaken Bucket" type of open well, where they draw water up by a bucket attached to a windless, or by cisterns, catching rain water and filtering it. It has a flat taste which one must get used to to like. In a few instances they had regulation wells with a pump.

The people have the indolent, easy way of all southerners, taking things as they come, in no hurry about what has to be done. The farm houses are 19 times out of 20 small, one-story affairs; nothing compared to the fine rural homes to be found in Iowa and eastern Nebraska. The farms do not appear as well kept up as are those here; one would naturally think, with the time that they have, the farms would be better kept. But in their rural school buildings, Kansas has us looking sick. Almost without exception they were large, roomy structures, often of brick or stone, modern buildings that any community could be proud of. Many of the homes there are constructed of stone, the country being full of shale, from which oil is taken. A good many of the fences are along the Revolutionary period kind, built of rock; in fact, most of the fences were either of shale or were hedges, while a great many fields were unfenced. Raising little stock, there is really not much need of fencing.

One of the customs there when a person dies is to have mourning cards printed, which are placed in the various store windows, stating the time and place of the funeral services.

The vast majority of their farm sales are held during the summer months, immediately after harvest.

Missouri, what we saw of it, the northern and western part, appeared to be prosperous, with some excellent corn. But the country is all hills, some of them seemingly half-grown mountains, and every inch of it appeared to be under cultivation, farms on a side hill where it would seem that a man would have to have one short leg to balance on them. The famous Missouri mule was much in evidence, as was the drawl in the native's conversation.

Eastern Nebraska is much the same as Iowa; the country is similar and they farm the same. Their dwellings are substantial structures much the same as ours.

In two or three places in Kansas, oil wells were seen, all of the variety where the oil is pumped out. In Oklahoma, where we visited the Chilloco Indian school, there were mile after mile of oil cars, stretching over the horizon as far as the eye could see. The daily papers in that country carry from two to three columns daily of the latest oil news, the tests and prospects.

Of the states we visited, to our notion there were none that could come up to good old Iowa. There is more life, more ambition, and more evidences of prosperity and enjoyment of life. And Iowa's roads, so long bearing a hard name, were by far the best we struck in any of the five states. The primary roads are the delight of the motorist who is in a hurry to get where he is going; graveled, level, smooth and wide, the limit is the limit of your car.

GOOD FELLOWSHIP CLUB

A farewell to Prof. E. S. Fyler was tendered by the Goodfellowship club at the library basement on Monday evening, about 50 of the members of the club being present. Prof. Fyler, who leaves this week for his new home at Sheffield, where he will have the superintendency of the Sheffield schools next year, has been Secretary of the Goodfellowship club since its reorganization here two years ago, and the members, desiring to show their appreciation for his services as such, took this means.

The evening was opened by a short musical program, consisting of two very good solos by O. L. Varland, and several piano selections by a Mr. Peterson, a student of Coe College, who is a guest at the Dr. and Mrs. G. F. McBurney home. Mr. Peterson is an accomplished pianist of rare ability, and the audience were delighted with his selections. Following the program M. C. Barry, acting as chairman, called upon various members present to express the regret of the club that Mr. Fyler was leaving. Prof. Fyler has been prominent in the club work and in community affairs during his stay here, has been a progressive and very able worker and a splendid citizen, and Belmond most sincerely regrets that his work calls him to another field. Sheffield is getting an able man to head her schools, one who will take an active interest in the community welfrare, and a man whom they will be proud to claim.

The club was then called to order for the purpose of reorganization, and the election of new officers. Rev. S. U. Leinbach, who has so ably headed the club as president, was re-elected, with Dr. G. F. McBurney as vice president, and C. M. Morse was chosen to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Fyler's resignation. All other officers remain the same.

Those present were then treated to ice cream and wafers, and a social hour and smoker was enjoyed. The next regular meeting of the Goodfellowship club will be held some time during the first or second weeks in October, and it is planned to hold splendid meetings this next fall and winter.

MRS. OLE LEIN DIES

Mrs. Ole Lein passed away at her home in north Belmond on Sunday morning of this week. She had been ill for some time, and her daughter, Mrs. Chas. Dalrymple, of California, has been here for several months caring for her. Mrs. Lein had been very ill and her death had been expected for some time. Funeral arrangements are uncompleted at this writing but we understand are to be held this, Thursday, afternoon, at Trinity church.

TAKES 15 INNINGS TO SETTLE GAME SUNDAY

Belmond And Eagle Grove Do Battle Until Dark Before Winning Run Is Made

The Belmond ball team met nine Eagles and one pirate Sunday, and lost to the pirate, 5 to 4, in 15 innings of hair-raising baseball.

The Eagle Grove diamond was full of mud, and a diamond was laid out in the outfield, making the grounds bumpy and rough, with chances for many errors in fielding, which there were, on both sides. Thomas in the first inning led off with his usual three-base hit for a starter, but the boys couldn't bring him home. In getting used to the field, they made several errors, which permitted the Eagles to score a run. But the boys all had their batting eye in trim, and they soon pounded in a run to tie, and added more as they went along until in the nineth the score stood 4 to 1 for Belmond. With a combination of errors and the able assistance of the pirate, Eagle scored three runs to tie in the last of the nineth. From that on up to the 15th it was a nerve-racking, heartbreaking affair. John Chapman, on the mound for Belmond, had the Eagles eating from his hand, and in 14 innings they secured but two hits from his offerings, while Belmond had a total of ten healthy swats. In the 8th frame Chapman was injured in sliding to second, and as the game went on into extra innings he began to weaken. In the last of the 15th, when, by mutual agreement, the two teams were to stop, a single and a three-bagger gave Eagle Grove the one run.

It was some game and every man on the Belmond team can feel proud of the record he made. Handicapped by the absence of Jones and Fulton, the boys outplayed Eagle Grove from the start, outfielded them and outbatted them. Wenzel at second and Nelson at third played a splendid game in positions they were unaccustomed to. Thomas caught, and caught a man's sized game. Dillon and Foss in field did fine work, and Madsen at Short and Packard at first gave their usual good game. Chapman, in right, never had a chance, not a ball coming to him.

A feature of the game was the "ragging" of some fellow—none appeared to know who he was—who was pulling for Belmond, and with a constant stream of talk and kidding he completely "got the goat" of both the Eagle Grove pitcher and the Eagle Grove umpire, as well as a large bunch of the Eagle fans. In the 10th inning the Eagle pitcher was taken out and a fresh one put in, while Chapman for Belmond went the entire route.

We understand that there is some talk of getting the Eagle Grove team to play Belmond here Creamery Day, and if such is the case the crowd will certainly witness a real battle.

METHODIST NEWS NOTES

Regular midweek prayer meeting at 8 p. m. Thursday.

The W. F. M. S. will meet Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Joe White.

Regular services next Sunday a. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Let's all be in our places promptly and help boost our attendance. We want to make 180 next Sunday. Something new in the opening exercises every week.

Preaching service at 11 a. m. Those who missed the laymen's meeting last Sunday missed a fine service.

Epworth League at 7 p. m. In the evening there will be an illustrated lecture, "Of Such is the Kingdom" at 8.

Rev. W. A. Wilkinson, Pastor.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

We are glad to see such a good attendance at the services last Sunday. We were not quite up to our high mark in the Sunday school but the attendance at the morning and evening services were above the average. Prof. Patterson for some cause or other was not able to be with us. Mr. Walters, a lawyer in Des Moines, took his place and gave us a very interesting address at the evening hour.

The rainy season has made it necessary to put off our annual picnic for a little while but it will come ere long. In fact we have not yet met the conditions so next Sunday let us try to put it over the 150 mark. Every one in his place on time and with a prepared lesson. Those who do not study the lesson at home do not get much out of the lessons.

Sabbath school at 10:00 a. m. The morning worship at 11:00, at which time we would like to see all the members of the Sunday school present. The young peoples meeting at 7:30 and the evening worship at 8:15. The orchestra assists in the music in the evening and the people are enjoying their help.

Prof. and Mrs. Fyler are moving this week to their new location at Sheffield, where the Professor will have charge of the Sheffield schools this coming year. They are moving their household goods by truck, Floyd Dibble doing the hauling.

Creamery Day Plans Rounding Into Shape

Committees Working Hard To Make August 23rd One Of The Best Days Yet.

$650 RAISED TO FINANCE

The plans for the big Creamery Day are rounding into shape and the indications are for one real Day on August 23rd. No definite arrangements have as yet been completed, but the various committees have been active and things are being rounded in shape where an announcement of the Day's program can probably be made next week.

The finance committee reports a sum of approximately $650 raised to take care of the obligations, and the various committees have received their apportionment with which to work. The ball game will probably be between Dows or Eagle Grove and Belmond, and ought to prove a good one. An advertisement is now running in the Register for attractions and a stack of replies are being received. A merry-go-round and a ferris wheel are on the list and it is hoped to secure them. The sports end is being arranged, and the committee on attactions is arranging for a good street act of high quality. The question of a band is not settled as yet, the price asked being too high and out of reason. Some good band will be secured tho, for music thruout the day.

That there will be something doing all the time goes without saying, and Belmond, to judge from the reports from surrounding towns, will see one of the largest crowds in its history on the 23rd. Many are planning to come to Belmond for the entire day, from the towns around, and make a regular day of it. The committees in charge are securing only the best in their respective lines, attractions and events of high quality, and the entire day will be one continous round of pleasure and entertainment, with everything free to the crowd. Make your plans now to spend August 23rd in Belmond, for you will miss something if you don't.

The Independent will announce the program as soon as completed. Watch the papers!

F. C. FELTON DIES AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

Belmond people, while they were expecting it, were nevertheless grieved and shocked Monday to hear of the death late Monday afternoon of Fred C. Felton, one of the city's best known citizens and long a resident here. Mr. Felton had been suffering from tuberculosis, and a trip to Rochester proved unavailing and he came back to spend his last few days at home. Funeral services will be held this, Thursday, afternoon at the house, at 2:00 o'clock, Rev. Wilkinson of the Methodist church preaching the sermon, and the Odd Fellow lodge, of which the deceased was long a faithful member, in charge. In case of rain, the services will be held at the Methodist church. An obituary will be printed next week.

BEET CROP DOING FINE

The sugar beets in this locality are reported as doing splendidly, with prospects of a bumper crop this fall. Reports from some fields are that the beets will go as high as 15 to 20 tons to the acre. If this is true, then the crop is certainly in fine shape and those who have sugar beets are going to make some real money from them. And with a good crop of beets a successful run of the factory here is assured. Things at the sugar factory are progressing nicely and the plant is rapidly being placed in shape for the fall campaign.

PLEASE—

Help us out by getting your copy in as early as possible. Several times lately copy has been brought in on Wednesday which could just as well have been sent in before, and with the last minute rush it had to be left out. The Independent earnestly desires that its readers send in any items or articles they may have to be printed, but if they are sent in early it will be of great help.

Mrs. Tom McCauley and children of Des Moines, who have been here the past few weeks visiting at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Groh, returned to their home on Saturday.

Mrs. W. W. Pratt and granddaughter, Irene Flynn, of Hampton, are guests this week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lee W. Stacy.

THE FARMER'S WORST ENEMY

The man who farms, and the woman who helps him has many things to contend with, but to our way of thinking there is one thing that he has to contend with which ought to be stopped, and that is the chicken thief. It has been generally accepted that about the lowest thing in the scale was a bootlegger, but we believe that the chicken thief is one degree below the person who peddles hooch.

Nine times out of ten—or oftener—it is the woman on the farm who raises the chickens; who spends her time fussing with the settin' hens, watching the baby chicks, fighting the rats and pests, eradicating the lice, studying up on the proper way to feed, fattening them up for market, planning what she will get for the home with the money, or the new dress she can get for the children, and then some sneaking, low down critter comes along and loads up a truckload of her chickens, and her months' of labor, time, energy and planning is gone for nought.

It is one despicable crook who does a trick like that, and some measures should be taken to put an immediate and emphatic stop to it. We don't know of any man who is trying to earn a living farming who can afford to "donate" 50 or a hundred of his best chickens to whoever wants them. They are one of the three sources of ready money which he and his family depend upon: eggs, cream and hogs. They are the main resource of many a farmer's wife, who, with the present prices of farm products, must depend upon her chickens for the many small items that go to run a household. For some crook to take her main source of revenue is not only a shame but a crime of the worst nature.

By far the best treatment for the chicken thief is about two shellsful of birdshot, placed in the most satisfying place. But to apply this treatment is a difficult matter. Some measure should be enacted that will make it as highly dangerous to take a chicken as it is supposed to be to peddle booze. Stealing chickens now should come under the same category as horse stealing did in the old days, and the remedy ought to be somewhere near the same. It became one of the most hazardous undertakings to steal a horse; it ought to become one to steal chickens. Perhaps a good stiff fine, with a year or two in the pen, might help; perhaps proof of owership would help when it came to selling. There should be an organization which, when the thief has gotten in his work, could be notified, and in turn could notify every produce dealer within a certain radius to be on the lookout for the stolen property. With the modern way of doing business by truck it would be necessary to cover considerable territory, but it would put a large sized crimp in the business of robbing the farmer's wife.

It has been said that curiosity was once the cause of a cat's death. Such being the case, there ought to be quite a few felines in Belmond in danger of demise.

Last week there was a report that Clarion strikers had killed a man. As with most reports, there was nothing to it. Which once again goes to show that you can't most always sometimes tell.

The next time we have a note due at the bank we're going to try the stunt that Germany does with the Allies: ask for a moratorium. Instead of saying that they would like to have an extension of time, they have a meeting of some big bugs, draw up a formal paper stating that they must have more time, and then the Allies grant a moratorium, whatever that is. Great stuff, if it works.

CLIPPINGS

Many tourists pass thru Kanawha but the latter part of last week one auto party passed thru that attracted our attention. There were six people in the party and they were en route from South Dakota to Arkansas. Their conveyance was an old model Ford that showed the scars of many summers—and winters, too. But they were a happy lot of typical southern folk who were apparantly content with their lot but who were looking forward with happy anticipation to the time when they would again arrive at their sunny southern home. In addition to the six occupants of the car they carried a complete camping outfit on the running boards, and the family pet, a mongrel dog, was permitted the joys of the overland trip. They traveled north last year but didn't enjoy the vigorous winter weather of South Dakota and voted unanimously to return to the southland—and home.—Reporter.

The Hampton Horseshoe Pitching Association was organized last week with 14 members and prospects for many more of them. Harry Hardy was elected president of the association and E. R. J. Ryan was chosen secretary and treasurer. John Sawyer and Fred Autry were appointed overseers of the grounds. Lights have been installed at the courts and the local men expect to keep in tiptop trim and take on the pitching stars from all the neighboring towns. Chronicle.

We wish that some of the fellows about Garner who claim that it does not pay to advertise, would explain to us why people flock to the Lyric Theatre when it is advertised that Annette Kellerman is to appear in a bathing suit.—Signal.

The town of Rockwell seems to be gathering its share of shekels from tourists and joyriders who persist in exceeding the speed limit when passing thru that village on the Jefferson Highway. Among the cars tagged Sunday morning by a vigilant officer on duty at the town, was two loaded with Hampton folks who were enroute to Mason City to attend services at the Odd Fellows Home. The driver of each car was promptly assessed "ten bucks" and after liquidating was allowed to continue the journey. It is needless to add that when the drivers reached Rockwell on the return trip they were careful to step on the gas lightly.—Hampton Recorder.

Would you suppose that there was anyone in Garner that had never ridden in an auto? This was true until yesterday when Ben Parker, a grandson of Mrs. Ben Cramer, came from Wisconsin and took his grandma for her first ride and took her for a spin about town and out over the paving. The lady is 84 years of age, but as spry as many who are 20 years her junior.—Garner Signal.

Kuhn & Son of Dows, who have the contract for grading the Wilson north of Garner, are doing a fine piece of work. The grades they are throwing up are certainly some grades. Near Chas. Grau's the grade at one place is over 10 feet high 50 feet wide at the bottom. They are doing away with all the hills on the road to Forest City, and when the road is graveled, it will be the best graveled road in these parts.—Signal.

RADIO

CHANGE POTENTIAL TO OBTAIN SIGNALS

Way in Which This May Be Done With Three-Electrode Vacuum Tube.

For every filament current there is a definite plate potential that will give the strongest signals. When using fairly hard tubes—high vacuum—bringing out taps from the individual cells of the plate of "B" battery will give variations that are fine enough.

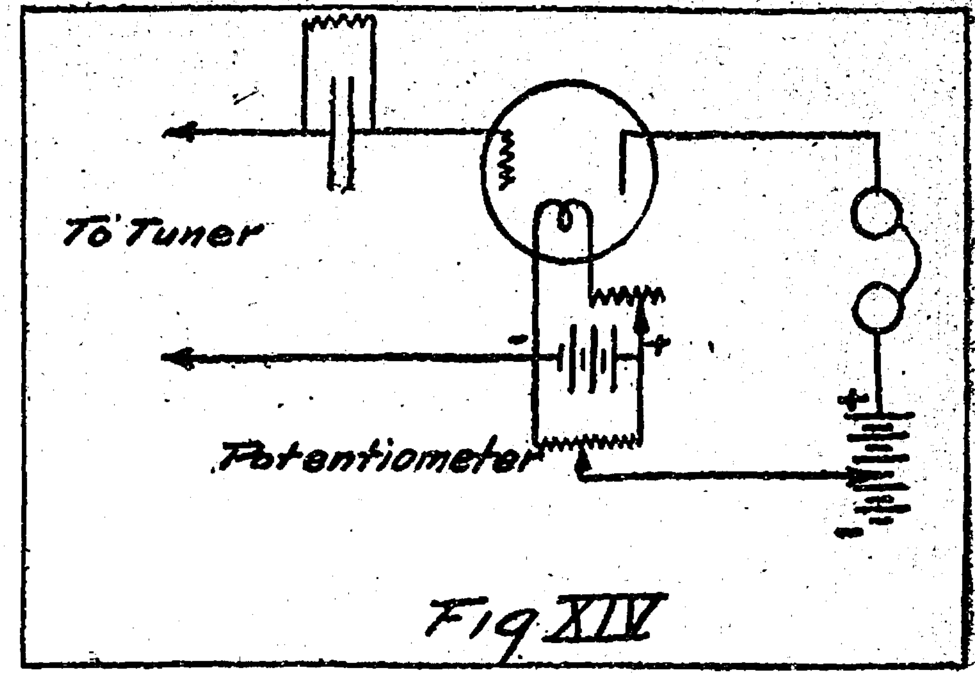

Fig. XIV

For very soft, gaseous tubes, low vacuum, a finer regulation of "B" battery potential is required and is most easily obtained by means of an "A" battery potentiometer. Fig. 14 shows how an "A" battery potentiometer is connected in the circuit of a three-electrode vacuum tube to give fine variations in the plate circuit potential. The resistance of an "A" battery potentiometer should be between 200 and 500 ohms. By moving the slider on the "A" battery potentiometer a variation of plate voltage equal to the "A" battery, or about six volts, can be secured. If the tube contains gas, too high a plate voltage will cause the tube to "buck-over"—that is, the gas is ionized and becomes a conductor, allowing an excessive current to flow to the plate circuit which will destroy the elements.

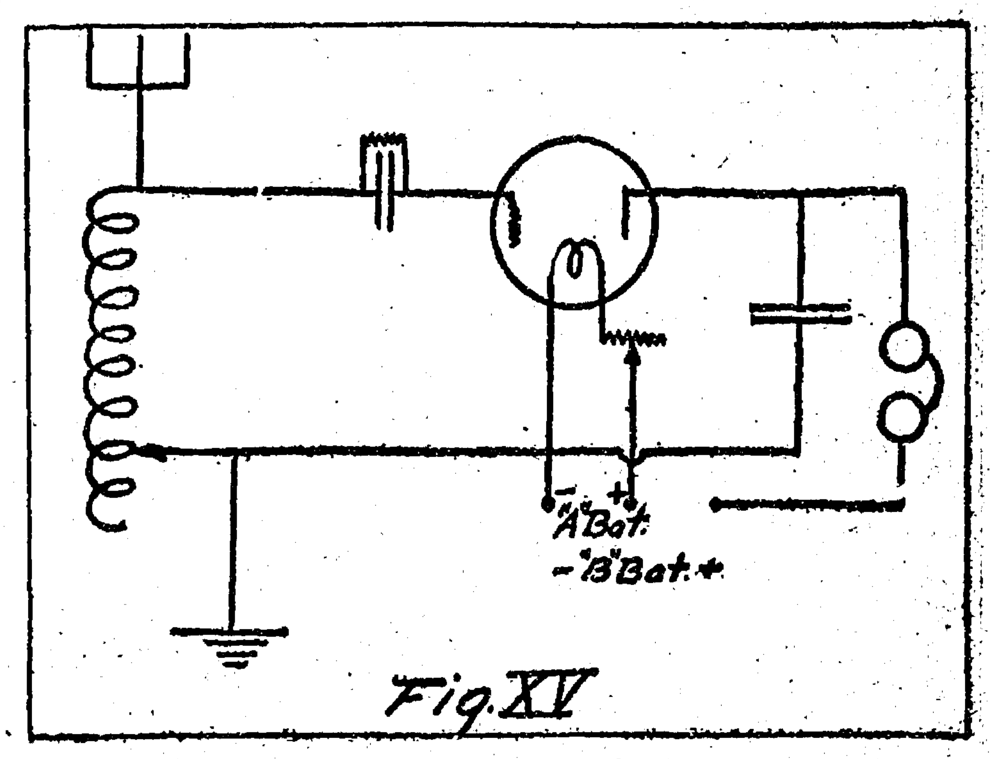

Fig. XV

In using a vacuum tube circuit for the first time, always check the circuit to see that "A" and "B" batteries are connected to their respective terminals on the socket. The markings on the socket are plain and cannot be mistaken. Interchanging the plate filament leads in connecting a socket will be disastrous to the life of the filament.

Note that the filament rheostat is set to place the maximum amount of resistance in series with the filament. After inserting the tube see that it is properly seated and that the four prongs protruding from the tube base make good contact with their respective contacts in the tube socket.

If, after listening in with a vacuum tube used as a detector with a rated filament current and plate potential, no signals are heard, go over the circuit carefully and inspect all connections, contacts, polarity of both the "A" and "B" batteries, and take a look at the grid condenser and leak.

A three-electrode vacuum tube can be substituted for the crystal as a detector in the simple radio receiving set described in this column a short time ago. Using a vacuum tube in place of a crystal detector will give a much louder signal, and a detector that when once adjusted will stay adjusted. The material which will be required to do this is as follows:

One standard vacuum socket.

One 6-10-ohm filament rheostat.

One grid condenser and leak combined.

Three binding posts.

A source of filament current and a source of plate potential.

Schematically the set is connected up as shown in Fig. 15 when used with a three-electrode tube as a detector.

This set, too, can be very conveniently mounted on an 8 by 10-inch base, mounting the tube socket with the filament rheostat beside it.

In a great many of the usual receiving circuits used the so-called detector tube functions not only as a detector, but as an amplifier and as an oscillator, as will be explained later.

There will also be printed a table of symbols used in drawing diagrams and thus the different parts and materials used in these diagrams will be readily understood by those who are unfamiliar with these terms.

TIPS FOR FANS

A meeting of representatives of stations within 360 meters of New York and New Jersey was called to prevent radio "jam" in the air. Some of the sweet things that come through must have gummed up the ether.

For use across the secondary of a tuner, such as the honeycomb coils, use a condenser of twenty-three plates or less. The less capacity used in the secondary circuit, the better will the set work.

If, after wiring up a set, you hear nothing but a steady hum in the receivers, you may be very sure that there is an open circuit somewhere. Trace out the wiring carefully and some little fault will present itself.

The so-called "spaghetti" tubing, if placed over bare wire used in wiring a set, will improve the appearance 100 per cent and reduce the danger of short circuits.

More and more are the radio fans turning to radio-frequency amplification instead of audio-frequency. The chief reason for this lies in the fact that in radio-frequency amplification the incoming signals are amplified before they reach the detector, where they are rectified, while in audio-frequency they are amplified after reaching the detector. In the first method signals that are very weak are brought in, whereas in the latter method they would probably not be heard.

SUN DUST IS A "RADIO NET"

London Professor Evolves Novel Theory of the Atmospheric Envelope.

Electrified dust thrown off by the sun forms an atmospheric envelope about the earth about 100 miles which prevents wireless waves from escaping into infinite space, according to Prof. J. A. Fleming, University college, London, whose work in wireless is known all over the world.

The screen made by the dust, he says, acts as a sort of wireless speaking tube and enables waves used for long-distance work—which are about ten miles in length—to travel 6,000 and 12,000 miles.

If it were not for that screen, according to the professor's theory, the wireless energy thrown out by the big sending towers would not cling to the earth, but would pass away and be lost.

How Big Is an Electron?

One very noteworthy experiment in measuring an electron was performed by an American, Professor Millikan of Chicago. He introduced a minute drop of oil of about 1-10,000th inch in diameter in a chamber between two plates whose electrical charge was subject to control. The drop of oil was strongly illuminated and was viewed with a telescope. By controlling the potentials of the plates the oil drop could be made to fall or rise at will. The drop continually picked up and lost electrons. As it picked up an electron it would move toward the positive plate. By carefully observing the action of the drop of oil, Millikan was able to determine very accurately the charge added to it by its picking up one electron.

Club Picnic A Success.

The county wide club rally picnic which was staged at the Goldfield chautauqua park last Thursday, proved to be a great success in spite of threatening weather. A great many boys and girls hesitated in starting for the picnic until about noon, consequently, the program did not begin until after the picnic dinner. The sunshine which broke thru about noon brought forth about 500 Wright county boys and girls and many of the parents, all of whom managed to pack in a full day's fun between noon and five o'clock.

The radio program which was to have been heard by the boys and girls was not a success and many were disappointed not have opportunity to hear the wireless messages. L. B. Sheldon and Ed. Hartsock, who operated the receiving set, seemed to think that the static electricity interfered with the receiving of the messages. They were able to tune in so as to hear the addresses which were being given at Ames, but they were not distinct enough to be heard by the audience thru the amplifier.

This boys and girls club picnic was the largest club picnic ever staged in Wright county. An interesting program consisting of addresses, club demonstrations, athletic stunts and club stunts, filled the day of jollification for the youngsters. The principal address of the occasion was given by Paul G. Taff, state leader of boys' and girls' club work, who spoke to the boys and girls on club organization and the relation between the farm bureau and the club work. Addresses on club work were also given by Prof. J. L. Gordon, poultry specialist, and by Miss Hazel Spencer, assistant state leader of girls' club work.

In speaking of the club work in Wright county, Mr. Taff spoke very highly of the splendid work which is being carried on in Wright county and mentioned the fact that this county is really the birthplace of the boys' and girls' club work. He complimented Miss Hazel Spencer very highly upon the splendid work which she is doing thruout Iowa as assistant state leader of girls' club work and said he was very glad to be able to come to Wright county to select an assistant leader for this work. This is a singular honor for Miss Spencer and her friends and neighbors appreciate the compliment paid by the state leader.

Interest In Stock Judging

Eleven boys from the vicinity of Clarion met with the county agent at the H. N. Denby farm last Thursday evening for the purpose of judging several classes of beef cattle. Classes of aged cows, junior and senior yearlings and junior and senior calves were arranged by Mr. Denby and the boys received instruction in judging from the county agent.

Any boy between the age of 15 to 21 inclusive is invited to join these boys in the livestock judging work. The county agent is planning to take all the boys who are interested in the judging work to Ames, August 12, for a state judging contest at the college. Later in the season they will be taken to the Mason City and Fort Dodge fairs and possibly to the state fair, this fall. The boys who have joined and are taking active part are as follows: John Bell, Clyde Knight, Leo Woodley, Maurice Mechem, Ross Mechem, Everett Woodley, Clarence Clark, Chas. Denby, Everett Denby, Eldon Sumners and Floyd Bell.

Clothing Training Schools

Arrangements are being made for three training schools one day each for August 14, 15 and 16, at which time instruction and actual demonstration in remodeling of clothing will be given by Miss Martha Foster, clothing specialist, from Ames, to the ladies of Wright county.

The remodeling for these three meetings will include meetings for making over clothing, also for decoratve stitches which may be used for giving the old garment a new and up-to-date appearance. Every lady who attends the August meetings should bring with her a piece of material, her needles, and colored thread for making stitches. These will be all day meetings and the places of meeting will be announced as soon as the committee has arranged the schedule.

Reservation At State Fair

Those who are planning to camp out at the state fair this year and who wish to make reservation for space, tents and equipment in the free farm bureau camp should make application at once to the county agent, because all reservations must be in on or before August 15.

An effort will be made this year to have all people from Wright county reserve space in the same section of the camping ground so that all people from our home county will be together in one big family. All other counties of the state are making this arrangement for camping out at the fair this year. Let us demonstrate to the other counties of the state that Wright county can send a good representation to the fair and that we can live together peaceably in the same camp.

Our Dues

Belong to the farm bureau? Don't eh? Wouldn't contribute $5.00 per year to the cause of agriculture? Well now listen brother. Are you willing to give $5.00 per year to the railroads? No! Well then, are you willing to give $5.00 per year to the oan trusts? No! All right, how about the Wright county Farm Bureau? Are you willing to contribute five dollars annually to help keep your own organization going?

You may not belong to the Farm Bureau; you may not be paying $5 a year into an association of farmers that is working for your interests. You may object to having the treasurer of the county farm bureau draw on your account for the sum of five paltry dollars, but boy, you are paying dues to the railroad association, you are allowing the mortgage companies to draw on you for sums far in excess of your farm bureau dues: you allow the packers to deduct your dues to them every time you ship a pig, yet you say you don't want to belong to the farm bureau, don't want them to draw annually on you for $5.00, which is only a small fraction of what they are saving you.

The farm bureau got you a reduction of freight rates on agricultural products of some 10 per cent last fall; they made the railroads pay some $600,000 more taxes in Iowa by raising their taxable valuation and we had to go to court to do it. The farm bureau wants only a small part of what it has saved you. Why not pay dues to it, and stop paying dues to the railroads, the packers, the mortgage companies and the hundreds of other organized industries that don't ever give you a receipt? Think it over. If you don't help the farm bureau and allow it to help you — Who Will?

house; it had only five rooms. One of those upon the second floor was so much larger and pleasanter than the rest that they became quite sure that it was the one in which Alan had been born, and where his young mother soon afterward had died.

The woman, who had showed them about, had gone to another room and left them alone.

"There seems to have been no picture of her and nothing of hers left here that any one can tell me about; but," Alan choked, "It's good to be able to think of her as I can now.

"I mean—no one can say anything against her now!"

Alan drew nearer her, trembling.

"I can never thank you—I can never tell you what you did for me, believing in—her and in me, no matter how things looked. And then, coming up here as you did—for me!"

"Constance!" He Caught Her. She Let Him Hold Her.

"Yes, it was for you, Alan!"

"Constance!" He caught her. She let him hold her.

The woman was returning to them now and, perhaps, it was as well; for not yet, he knew, could he ask her all that he wished; what had happened was too recent yet for that. But to him, Spearman—half mad and fleeing from the haunts of men—was beginning to be like one who had never been; and he knew she shared this feeling. The light in her deep eyes was telling him already what her answer to him would be; and life stretched forth before him full of love and happiness and hope.

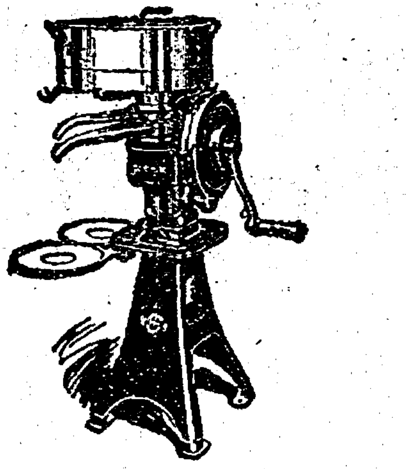
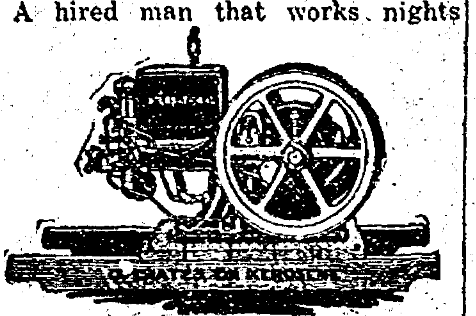
An "Inside" Story

Human nature is terribly curious. After a man has seen the outside of a thing he wants to see the inside. He wants to know how it works and why, and that's a splendid trait. You no doubt have seen the outside of the PRIMROSE, but what about the "inside"? Here's part of the story: Picture in your mind a cream separator with a splash oil system that lubricates every bearing. Think of the conveniences of a friction clutch that grips the instant the crank is moved. Imagine the golden flow of smooth cream coming thru two wide open cream outlets with eight times as much room for the cream to escape as in the average separator. You'd enjoy seeing how drippings and spilled milk is carried thru a drain tube to a cup underneath the separator. All these "inside" features are in the PRIMROSE CREAM SEPARATOR. Aren't you curious to look one over?



HIRED MAN—30c A DAY

A hired man that works nights as well as days, that doesn't complain when it's cold or hot; that never asks for a day off when you've planned on going visiting or when you're up to your neck in work—a hired man that is always ready to work—what would he be worth to you? We know of such a hired man and he will work for the trifling sum of 30 cents a day—3 cents an hour! And he won't puff a "Camel" between times, muss up the house with his dirty shoes, and "ma" doesn't have to make his bed either, because he never sleeps and needs no meals except kerosene. The INTERNATIONAL Engine is just such a hired man—the most faithful you can hire. Get an INTERNATIONAL "horse-and-a half" engine and make life easier for "mother" and yourself.



HAVE YOU A SILO?

Every farm should have a silo. Silos put money in the bank—build up the community—and make farms worth more. The silo combines more good things, pointing to greater profits, than any other building on the farm. Just as you safeguard your winter feed by owning a good silo, so do you safeguard your corn crop and secure the most profitable returns from it by owning tried and dependable corn machines. Whatever your need—whether it be a corn binder or an ensilage cutter—we can supply you with a trustworthy machine from the McCormick-Deering line.
